of i.e, with the Lofs of a few Men only, who 1589. we're drown'd as they were getting ashoar; and the Inhabitants flying at the fame time, the Caflle furrender'd to Don Antonio. From hence all the Foot, under the Command of Sir John Norra, march'd as fast as they could, by Land, to Libon, which lay about 60 Miles from thence; Libon and Drake promis'd to follow with the Fleet up belieged. the River Tayo. In their Passage they call'd a Council of War at Torres Vedras, and refolv'd to encamp on the East Side of the City, to prevent the Arrival of any Succours from Spain, and to facilitate the Portugueses Access to their King. After fix days March, they came to the Weitern Suburbs of Libbon, call'd S. Katharine's, without the least Opposition; where they made some Scay, contrary to their former Resolutions, and cast their Eyes on none but a few unarm'd People, who fainted them ever and anon with a God fave King Antonio! For Albert of Austria, their Governour, had before this totally difarm'd the Portuguese. The next day, as the English, who were fick and farigu'd with their long March, were giving themselves some Ease and Refreshment, the Spanish Garrison made a Sally, and Brett, with his Party, fuftain'd the Brunt with a great deal of Bravery; till some of the English and Portuguese coming in to his Relief, drove them back into the City, Effex himfelf following them to the very Gates: Yet Brett, Carfey, and Carr, brave Commanders, and fome common Soldiers, were flain. When they had been here two days, without any Hope of the Defection of the Portuguefe, as Don Antonio had vainly promis'd himfelf, and boasted to others; and the King of Morocco failing, at the fame time, to fend them the Supplies he had promis'd; whereas on the other fide Recruits came in from the Eaftern Parts, the Sickness raged more and more in the Army, Provifion and Powder grew scarce, and Drake fail'd to supply 'em with Cannon for Battery; the English English withdean mov'd off, and took their March towards Cafeau, withdraw their Fortaking away nothing out of the Suburbs, which ces, were well stock'd with forein Wares; lest they fhould by that means alienate the Affections of the Portuguese. As they retir'd to this small Town, laying on the Mouth of the Tayo, the Spaniards purful drhem with a very flow Pace, and did not for much as cut off any of their Rear. Drake, Caffe of who in the mean time had taken Cofean, was ve. Cafests ry much blamed, the English charging their Dif-taken. appointment upon his Cowardice entirely, for that he did not follow with the Fleet, according to his Promife. He excus'd it from the Impoffi bility of the thing, there being no Paffage thro' the Channel of Alexeava, by reason of the Shoals and Sands; and had he gone directly by the Port of S. Julian's, which was defended with 50 Pieces of Cannon, and had a great many Gallies riding in it, with their Heads towards him, he had then exposed the Fleet to a most palpable Hazard; nor could they have hoped for any thing but Destruction, should the Enemies Ships have been brought down upon him in the mean time as he lay at the Mouth of the Tijo. And had the Fleet mifearry'd by this Conduct, he made it appear, that the Army too must have undergone the same Fate. The Castle of Caseais was now surrender d on Articles, and a great part of it blown up; and to make themselves some amends for their Expence, the English seiz'd about 60 Hulks belonging to the H.ns-Towns of Germany, laden with Wheat, and all manner of Naval Stores, to equip out a new Fleet against England. These Vessels had fail'd round by the Oreades, the Hebrides, and the Coult of Ireland, and made a tedious and dangerous Voyage, to escape falling into the Englifb

English Hand; notwithstanding the Queen had 1589 given Warning before, by her Royal Letters, Ann. 32 that the Hans-Towns should carry no warlike Provisions into Spain or Portugal, on pain of lofing their Ships and Cargo. The English fet fail from thence (Don Antonio not being able to detain them longer) and burnt Vigo, a Town on the Coasts, quite deferted by its Inhabitants. Having pillaged the Country all about, they return'd into England with 150 Pieces of great Ordnance, and a very rich Booty; Part of which was divided among the Seamen, who began to mutiny, but could not faitify them. Most Men were of Opinion, that the English hereby answerd all Points both of Revenge and Honour, busing in a flower of Council Cou having in fo fhort a Compass of Time taken one Town by Storm, made a glorious Affault upon another, driven before them a very potent Army, landed their Forces in four feveral Places, march'd feven days together in Order of Battle, and with Colours flying, through the Enemies Country, attack'd a ftrong and flourishing City with a small Handful of Men, and lodg'd for 3 Nights in the Suburbs of it. Befide that, they beat the Enemy back to the very Gates, after they had made a Sally; took two Cattles lying on the Sea, and spoild the Enemy of all their Stores and Ammunition. However there were others, who thought all this was no manner of Equivalent for the Damages fuffain'd in this Enterprize; the Lofs of Soldiers and Seamen, by Sickness alone, amounting to 6000. But most certain it is, that England was so far a Gainer by this Expedition, as from that time to apprehend no Incurtions from Spain, but rather to grow more warm and animated against that Country. Whether this Sickness seiz'd the English, through their immoderate Use of the Wine and Fruit of the Country, or the Intemperance of the Climate, or all together, has occasion'd various Difputes: And it has been observ'd, that hitherto all the Expeditions made into Spain by Land, have prov'd fatal to the English : Witness that of John of Gaunt D. of Lancafter, about the Year 1385; wherein perifh'd 10000 out of 20000 : As likewife that of the Marquels of Dorfet, in the Year 1512, in which there died 1000 out of 10000, in a very short time, of a pettilential Difease; and that in the hithermost Parts of Spain. But the learned have made this Remark, that Armies marching from South to North, grow more hardy, according as the inward Heat is either evaporated or compress'd by the outward Air, fo that they have justify'd the Observation of Fitruvius, viz. That they which are transplanted from cold Countries to bot, cannot bear the Change; but are in some measure melted down from their Firmness and Strength: whereas those that remove from worm caustries Northward, are so far from impairing their Health by this Alteration, that they grow more strong and The Hanfe-Towns began now to vend their Complaints not without fome menacing Refent-ments for the Seizure of their Hulks, which they took to be an Infringment of their ancient Privi-Answer to leges. The Queen's answer was, ' That she had given them a Caution, not to affift the Enemies of England with any manner of warlike

Provisions; and that fince they had transported fuch Provisions, the had lawfully intercepted 'em, and was oblig'd to do as she did, unless she would connive at the Ruin of herself and Peo-' ple: That Privileges founded on private Laws only, are neither to be pleaded nor granted in bar to the publick Safety, which is the fupreme Law. Nay, That in the Privilege granted by King Edward III. to the Harfe-Terms, it was exprelly provided, That they flouid not im-

That a Neutrality is fo to be manag'd, that in lending Amstance to one fide, the other shall receive no Damage. That it became not private Cities and Towns to threaten crown'd Heads; and that for her own part, the fear'd not the Menaces of the most potent P.inces, much lefs of particular Cities; and as for the just Rights and Privileges belonging to States that were Neighbours, the would take care to observe them punctually with all the World. Nor did she fail in this Particular; for she not

Hereupon the Popish Princes of France, with the privity of the Pope and the King of Spair, entred into a private and dangerous Treaty, call'd The Holy League; wherein, under pretence of afferting the Catholick Cause, they attempted to ruin the King, by railing in the Peoples Minds a Jealoufy and Difaffection towards him through their evil Infinuations; as also to crush the Reform'd Religion, by cutting off the Succession of the lawful Heir. The Parties concern'd in this Conspiracy took all of 'em an Oath, That they would suffer no Man to be King of France, who ever had, or should hereafter profess any other than the Catholick Religion: Nor would they accept of any who had been educated in any other Perfuation, tho' he should abjure it, laib upon his accession to the Throne, he should overthrow the old Religion, &c. That all this tended to the Exclusion of Naturre and his Coulin Conde, no Man made the least doubt. However, this League began to be made more publick, and to gather Ground in all Parts of the Kingdom, making its way by thele gradual Advances. Duke of Guile, the Head of this Faction, was wonderfully cry'd up and carefs'd by the common People and Ecclefiasticks, who rated him above the King himself, as the great Bulwa k of Puperry, and the chief Thorn in the Side of the Proteitants; and all this because ne stoutry defended Poictiers against the Protestants in his youthful Days, routed the German-Horse which Alinfon had fummond in as Recruits, and but a firtle before put to flight a numerous Army of the German-Horse under the Command of the Baron

How-1589. ever 'twas not long before he caufed him to be Ann. 32 bafely stubb'd within the Court-Walls, and his Brother the Cardinal to be strangl'd some time Duke of after: For in truth he ftood in fear of him, as a Creature whom he had render'd Formidable, by ftabb'd. advancing him to fuch an Height, that the Laws could not reach him, and he suspected moreover that his Ambition would carry him beyond what was just and reasonable, if he were not already persuaded that the Duke had laid Snares for his Life, and that there was no other way left to fecure his Royal Person and Prerogative, but by this violent Remedy. The Duke of Guife's Son, the Cardinal of Bourbon, and as many of the Confpitators as he could apprehend, were commitimprison'd ted to Prison. Whereupon there arose such mighty Diforders through all France, that like a Body in Convultions, that fair and flourishing Kingdom was ready to break afunder. For the People, having now got above the Magistrates, confusion ransfack'd the King's Palace at Paris; and the in France, Several Cities of the Nation were differently inclin'd to a Democracy, Arifforacy, or Oligarchy; but most of 'em declar'd downright against Monarchy. The Confpirators fet up a new Synod, and order'd a new Seal for the difpatch and confirmation of Bufiness, affum'd a kind of Regal Authority, possess'd themselves of the Forts and Caftles, nay of intire Provinces, feiz'd on the Crown-Revenues, and invited the Spaniards out of the Netherlands to come in to their Affillance. In the mean time four of the principal Parlia-ments of France approv'd of what was done, and the Ecclesiasticks serv'd for Trumpeters of Rebellion against their Prince: So that the King was forc'd to fly to the Protestants for Relief. whom he had not long fince incens'd and provok'd. But the Cabal eafily broke these meafures, and by a most notorious Act of Villany, French K. got him murder'd by the Hands of James Clement murder'd a Monk. The King of Navarre, whom the King had declar'd at his death his right and lawful Successfor, was excluded the Throne by Proclamation, as an Heretick profess'd, and one that brought an hoftile Army of Foreiners into the Kingdom. However, agree they could not whom they should have for their King. Charles Duke of Mayne, Brother to the late Duke of Guise, made forme Pretentions to the Crown for the great and eminent Services perform'd by him against the Protestants: And for that the chief Cities had tender'd him their Homage and Allegiance. Befides, the Cardinal of Bourbon was under Confinement; who, being an infirm Man, and in Orders, could never make himfelf acceptable to so warlike a Nation, as France was; befides, fhould they make him King, they would Iplo facto establish the Title of the House of Bourbon, and renew the antiquated Claim of the Uncle against the Nephew. Others were of opinion, that the Duke of Lorain, or one of his Children, ought to be advanced to the Throne, which would be but the restoring of a Family to its just Right, which had been heretofore wrongfully depriv'd of the Crown of France by Hugh Capet. 'Twas thought too, that the K. of Spain would countenance the Rife of this House, and readily bestow his Daughter on any Branch hereof, that should be elected to the Kingdom. Others were ready to nominate the Duke of Savoy, who was Son to the French King's Daughter, and Son-in-law to the King of Spain, befides a vali-ant Prince, and a Neighbour. Nor were there fome wanting, who were for complimenting the King of Spain with the Government, as indeed the most confiderable Prince of all. However, the far greater part, out of a pretence of Justice i and feeming Regard at least to the Merits of the 1589. Cause, inclin'd to the Cardinal of Eourbon, who Ann. 32. was by one degree nearer of Kin to the murder'd King, than his Nephew of Navarre, and one who had been a great Sufferer for the Catholick Caufe, whom it was not difficult, they thought, to free from his Confinement, and he might then prove an happy Instrument of uniting the Catholicks, to the total Suppression of the Protastants, and that, without being beholden to any forein Aid or Affistance whatever. To this opinion they all subscrib'd, chiefly at the Instigation of Mendoca the Spanish Ambassador; who thought that by this means his Master the King of Spain might have the easier access to the Throne of France. Thus was the Cardinal of Bourbon proclaim'd King of France, and Monies The Cardinal friumpt with his Effigies, and the Tiele of dinal of Charles X. Prisoner, or else force him to quit France.

The King of Navarre being reduc'd to this Extremity, encamp'd with his Forces near the Town, and dispatch'd into England Montieur Beavoir de Noclè, and foon after him Buby and Buzenvall, to request some Succours from the Queen, and to defire a League Offentive and Defentive. The Queen, that the might not be wanting to a Prince of the fame Perfuation, and fo confiderable for his Bravery, in fo ticklish and Q. She made Sir Thomas Wilford afterwards Marshal, and Sir John Broughs, Sir Tho-mas Drury, and Sir Thomas Baskervill, Knights, Colonels, and readily gave 'em a Month's Pay beforehand. Hereupon the Conspirators, who had a little before receiv'd an unexpected Defeat, and were put to flight by the King in the Battel of Arques. Being now quite out of Heart and Hopes, got away the very day before the English arriv'd. The King being ftrengthen'd by these Supplies, march'd directly towards Paris. The English and Switzers being towards Paris. order'd to Affault that Part of the Town which brake through the Trenches, and gain'd the The Seri-Outworks, and advanc'd as far as St. Victor's Gate, Particular which they were very near making themselves English.

From thence they marched to Estampes, and Willoughby was left behind with the English to block up the Passage of the opposite Party, till the Town and Calle were furrender'd to him. There died by Sickness Hunnings and Stubs, who (as I faid before) loft his right Hand for writing a Book against the Duke of Anjou's Marriage with the Queen, but was very much lamented after his death. Sir William Drury, a very fine Gentleman, was kill'd in a Duel by Sir John Boroughs, on this occasion; That being Knight of the Garter, he claim'd Precedency of Boroughs, who was the younger Son of a Baron, contrary to the Order of Heraldry observ'd amongst the Nobility of

The Queen was concern'd at the discharging the English, and fo was the King too, when both of 'em came to be certainly inform'd, that the King of Spain had private Aims upon the Crown of France. For, it feems, he had made a Propo-fal in the Convention of the Leaguers, by the Commendator Morea John de Taxis, That in confideration of the great Expence he had been at in relieving them with fuch vaft Recruits and Supplies, he might be proclaim'd the Protector of the Catholicks in France, with the fame Authority which he holds in Noples and Sieily, to confer by Proxy what Offices he should think fit, both Civil and Spiritual, all over France, which the Pope's Nuncio, Cardinal Cajetan, earnestly pressing at the same time, it wrought a great many Frenchmen, otherwise stanch and true to the Catholick Interest, into a Disaffection and Dislike of thefe Proceedings.

As Queen Elizabeth defir'd nothing more than to fettle Navarre in the Throne of France; fo had the of late a mighty inclination to advance a Match between his Sifter, the Lady Katharine, and the King of Scots: For indeed both these things appear'd highly requilite, in order to baffle the Attempts of the Papifts against the Protestants. But things did not answer her Expectation; for that Lady was a little advanc'd in Years, and had but a fmall Portion, which the King her Brother, being drain'd by the Wars, was not like to increase: And whereas formerly the King of Scots had frequently confulted with Queen Elizabeth about the choice of a Wife, and fhe had appear'd loofe and remifs in the matter, the Sects began to suspect, and give out publickly, That the English were jealous of the Honour as well as the Off-Ipring of their Prince, for fear he should avenge the Death of his Mother; as well as that they wanted the Opportunity of excluding him from the Succession of England. The Queen, as foon as fine heard this, advised the King in the first place to choose a Wife agreeable to himfelf, and not altogether unacceptable to his People, and fuch a one as might confent to the holding a good Correspondence with England, without bringing him under terms of Sufpicion. The King, having above a Year before placed The King, having above a real veloce process resistant of his Affections on Ann the Daughter of Frederick III.

There were fome who were fo wife to attribute thefe Storms to the power of Magick and Enchantments, because 'twas observ'd the Winds were more furious and bluffring, the Waters higher and more enragd, and the Gufts fhorter and more frequent, than what are generally produc'd by natural Causes. And because, as they thought, the Damons, who are perty Princes of the Air, have a more uncontrolable Range in these Northern Countries, which are rude and heathenish, than any where elfe. And to corroborate this Opinion, there were certain Witches and Necromancers apprehended in Scotland, who publickly confess'd that they had rais'd those Storms on purpose to keep off the Queen from the Coasts of Scotland; and that Bothwel had like-wise transacted with them about murdering the King. This being made a capital Crime in Scot- Bothwel land by a Law of Queen Mary, he was hereupon cast into imprison d: But in a little time he got loose from Prison.

Queen Elizabeth, who always paid the first regard to Peace in all her Deliberations, tho fome Port not fo neither, as to be unconcern'd about the necessary Provisions for War; that she might not be surprized by the Spaniard, levied fresh Forces in the beginning of the Spring, both in Fngland, and in the South of Ireland. Here the fortified and in the South of Irel.nd. Here the fortified Dungsnon at the Mouth of the Suire, and Milford-Leaven in Wales, with new Ramparts: Towards the repair of her Navy fle appointed a yearly Sum of 8970 Pounds Sterling: And the in the Year 1787, fle had lent by Sir Haratio Pallaciem, towards suffice on Associated with the Sterling of the towards raising an Army in Germany, for the King of Navarre's Service, under the Command of the Baron Dobna, 101560 French Crowns; and the very last Year 71165 more, on Security given by Beavoir, Bubi and Buzenval, and had likewife confum'd 20000 in fending over the Recruits under the Lord Willoughby. Nevertheless, upon Se the French curity offer'd by the Viscount Turenne, she advan-King with ced in the first place 33;33 Crowns more, for levying Forces in Germany under the Command of the Prince of Anhalt, and afterwards the fame Sum on the Credit of Beavoir and Incarvil: And besides all this, she paid every two Months, to the Garifons in Flushing and the Brill, 125000 Florins, and 26000 more to three thousand Horse and Foot, which ferv d in the Natherlands. She moreover furnish'd out several Ships to all Parts; was at vast Expences in oppoting the Attempts of the Pope and the King of Spain in Scotland, and difcharg'd all the Arrears she owed her Subjects, beyond Expectation; infomuch that many wonder'd whence the procur'd fo much Money to answer all Emergencies, considering she ran not in Debt, (as most other Princes do) and was in a Capacity to support herself and Kingdom without any forein Affiflances, which was a thing that could not be faid of any of the Princes that were her Neighbours. But the truth is, she was provident and frugal to a great degree, and scarce spent any thing, but in the necessary Support of her Royal Character, the Defence of her Kingdom, or the Relief of her Neighbours. Befides, the Lord-Treafurer Burleigh narrowly inspected the Officers of her Cuftoms; through the Avarice of whom either the Queen's Cath had been impair'd or her Dues loft for want of demanding. But this Defeet was mended, after the Queen, being inform'd by one Caermarden, a fubtle and prying Fellow, of the great Abufes of the Cuttom-Houle-Officers, was pleas'd to order Sir Thomas Smith, the Farmer of the Cufloms, who held them at 14000 of English Money per Annum, to pay from thenceforward 42000 Pounds, and to advance a confiderable Sum besides for having 1590. enjoy'd so advantageous a Bargain for several Ann.33. Years, and after that further raifed the Agree- she adment to 50000 Pounds a Year. This the Lord-treasurer, Leitester and Walfingham opposed all Farmor they could, and order'd the Gentlemen of the ber Su-Bed-Chamber not to give admission to Cocomar-flonis, den; nay they went so far as to dispute the matter with the Queen, alledging, That it would be an open Difparagement to herfelf and Council, to liften to the Infinuations of fuch a petry Informer. But the answerd, That it was the Duty of a Prince to manage things equally between Perfons of all Ranks; that fuch as accus'd Magistrates, or other publick Ministers, without producing good Proofs to back their Charge, were punishable; whereas fuch as brought true Informations, deferv'd Encouragement: That the meanest were her Subjects as well as the biggeft; and that fhe refolv'd never to flut her Ears against them, nor to endure that the Farmers of the Customs should fuck, like Horfe-leeches, till they burft again, with the Blood of the Commonwealth; which running fo fast out of the Treasury, must needs bring it into a fatal Confumption : On the other fide, fhe would never fuffer her Exchequer to fwell and thrive upon the Spoils of the Poor. And to fay truth, the Queen ever abhorrd all Acts of Extortion, and Demands of ble in derigorous Taxes and Contributions; a thing manding which other Princes before her had Arts to pal-Taxes. liate under the fofter terms of the Peoples Bounty and Liberal Grant, &c. The laying of the Poll-Tax, propounded first in the Reign of Edward VI. she would never fuffer to be fo much as mention'd. Besides, the People were always cheerful in paying their Subfidies; and tho' the Affelment now than in old Times, yet was it manag'd with all the Candor imaginable, and no rigorous Exactions made; infomuch, that Taxes were then a kind of free Contributions, and always laid beneath the Estimation of the Government; nay the Queen's method was to refer it to her Parliament fo to order it, that the Rich might bear the greater share of the Burden, and the Poor be eas'd; which had been done before in the Reign of Richard II. But it was now order'd otherwise: For, upon a fair Computation, it appear'd, that the Taxes would amount but to an inconfiderable Sum, should Men of narrow Estates, which make by far the greater number, and whom we call Pound-Men, pay any thing fhort of what they used to do.

Now that the Queen might preferve the better Relieves Correspondence with her Neighbours abroad the states the refus d to take Greeningen under her Protecti- in the on, (which was a rich City of Frizeland, that refus'd both to fubmit to the Spanish Yoke, and to bear that of the States) for fear of giving the States any difgust. And the the Zelanders had disoblig'd her, in casting themselves upon the French King's Protection, without the knowledge and confent of the States of Holland, (of which the French King himfelf inform'd her) yet fle was fo Gracious to reconcile them to the Hollanders. France.

In the mean time, to continue a good Agreement with Scotland, the fent Edward Somerfer, Earl ma e Kis of Wireester, to congratulate the King on his Marriage and lafe Return out of Demark, and to let him know, that himself and the French King were created Knights of the Garter; but withal to recommend to him the timely Suppression of the Catholicks in Scotland, which were now grown up to a numerous laction. The King received him very courteoutly; and, the better to preferve a good Correspondence with England, and express his fingular Affe-tion to the publick Tranquillity, he disparch d Colonel Stuart into Girmany, to concert fome Meafures with the King of Denmark, and the Ambaffadors of the Princes there atlembi'd, for renewing the Peace between England, Spain and France.

France (as I before took notice) was at this Q. E'ra. time miferably confumed by the Flames of Civil Frency R. War, kindl'd by the King of Spain and those of the Holy League. In order to extinguish which, and relieve that Nation, the Queen used all possible Means, and held several Consultations and Debates: As, whether the old English Soldiers in the Low-Countries would not do well to join with the German-Forces, which were coming down? Or, whether it were not a better way to fend a strong Army into the Netberlands, to give the Prince of Parma a Diversion, who was now projecting a Descent into France? But the great Query was, how the Spaniards might be kept off from the Coasts of France, who (she heard) were attempting to reduce New-Haven, by bribing the Garison, and then to send a Fleet into Bretaign.

Whilst these things were on the Anvil, the Prince of Parma entred France with a powerful Army, at the Command of the King of Spain, who was prevail'd on, through the Entreaties of those of the League, to take this course under co- in the sink this said Popish Thunder, who was a Pro-

On the other hand, about the latumnal Equinox, there arrived at. Laset in dretaign other spenish Loops under the Country of Don John D. Aquelle, who belief d. H. woon fmall but ftrong Town upon one Ser, 1801 it by the Affiftance of Philip Emanuel, to Mercaur, of the House of Lorain. He .. ! ted them in just at the time when the L. A. s. were in hopes of fharing and parcelling ou France between 'em, and he had promis'd himfelf the Dukedom of Bretaign, part of it at least, for his own fhare, by the Affiftance of Spain, and in Right of his Wife, who was the only Daughter of Sebostian Martigues, whose Mother Caroletta of Bretaign was Heirels to John Brose Duke of Estampes.

This was an Opportunity the King of Spains was mighty willing to take hold on, as thinking that Bretaign did justly belong to his Daughter; forafmuch as it was a Feminine Fee, and the was a Branch of the eldest Daughter of Henry II. King of France; which eldeft Daughter (her Uncles happening to die without Issue) had a right to fucceed to the Crown of France, unless the Salick Law interpos'd in the case. And tho' he knew very well that Bretaign was in the Reign of Fran-cis I. united for eve to the Kingdom of France, yet could he not fwallow what the Lawyers af-of France, is for the future infeparable from it.

As foon as these Spanish Forces arrived, Henry Q Eliz.

Bourbon, Prince of Dumbez, and Son to the Duke defined to of Montpenfier, and whom the King had joined feed fome with La Nove in the Government of the Province of Bretaign, defired he might have fome Auxiliary Troops from England, to go against them. But the Queen and Council thought it no way convenient to furnish a Subject with Supplies of that kind, since the king himself neither knew of, nor requested any such thing, being at that time fufficiently taken up elfewhere, and in Affairs which were like to colt him Trouble enough. However she was far from neglecting the arthicted Condition of Bretaign, for the could not bear the Reflection that the King of Sp in should reduce fo wealthy a Country, and which being fo near a Neighbour, was too conveniently fittated for the Invation of England, Holland, or Zeland: And in this five declar'd herfelf to be much more nearly concern'd than was Edward III. Io long ago, who at a vait Expence was pleas'd to intereft himself in the Quarrel of John Montford, to hinder the French from making themselves Ma-sters of Eretaign. Some Persons there were who attempted to perfuade the Queen to fpare this Charge, to take care of her own Affairs rather than other Mens, and not to truit the French too far that 'they had been false and treacherous to their own Princes, had lately murder d one that was a zealous Afferter of Popery, and at this instant were profecuting another with Spa-

o' teftant: That within the Compass of one Age, 1590. ' they had injuriously robb'd the German Empire Ann. 33. c of Metz, Toule, and Verdun: That they were fworn Enemies to the English; and therefore when they most pretended to be their Friends, were even then treating them after a base and ungrateful manner; and had moreover fo often chous'd them upon the Loan of Money, that they came at last to call all Creditors they refolved to cheat, in way of proverbial Derifi-on, Les Anglois: Moreover, that what by ill Counfels, and a worfe Destiny hanging over their Heads, they had fo rent and mang d that once flourishing Kingdom, that its Neighbours rather confider d it as an Object of Pity, than Terrour; fince, like an unwieldy Body, 'twas ready to fink under the Weight of its own Bulk; at least it was grown so light and unfleady, that if it met with no Enemy abroad, it would feek for one within its own Borders; for they were now grown fo wretched y ftupid, (a thing which will puzzle the Faith of future times) as to invite an Army of Spaniards into their Country, and receive them into their Towns. However, the Queen being greatly concern'd for the Safety of the French, rejected all these Remonstrances, as Affronts to that potent and honograble Nation. Nay, upon other Suggestions of the like Nature, which were started by French, as well as Englishmen; as, That whilft Spain and the Juncto were parcelling and dividing France into several Principalities, she might feize on the maritime Countries of Picardy and Normandy; and when they reminded her at the same time, of what the warlike Charles of Burgundy used to fay, viz. That the neighbouring Nations would be in a blessed Condition, when France should be govern'd, not by one King, but by twenty Petty-Princes: she heard them with Regret, and disdainfully put them off, saying, That most assuredly the Day which determined the Fate of France, would prove the Eve to that of England's Ruin.

Death of Whilft these things were under Debate, Amete E. of brose Dudley Earl of Warwick, the Son of John Warwick, Duke of Northumberl-ind, and Knight of the Garter, a most excellent Person, departed this Life, and Sir without Hilue: And not long after him, Sir Francisco

ter, a most excellent Person, departed this Life, without Isfue: And not long after him, Sir Fran-Fra. Wal cis Walfingham, the Queen's Secretary, Chancel-fingham, lor of the Duchy of Lancafter, and Knight of the Garter, died of an Excrescence about his Privities, or rather through an intemperate Application of Physick. He was a Person of great Prudence and Industry, and had been concern'd in feveral honourable Embassies: He was a most steady Afferter of the Reform'd Religion, underflood well the Intrigues of Government, and as well how to gain and improve the good Affections of the People, fo as to ferve his own Turn; infomuch that his Quickness and Dispatch of Bufiness made him consider'd by the Queen, as a Man that even out-did himself; and the Papists found him, to their great Mortification, a Perfon of that Intelligence and Penetration, and fo dexterous at finding out their Tricks and Deligns against Religion, his Prince and Country; that they complain'd of him as a very fubtle and infidious Man. Indeed he watch'd the Practices of these Men with so great an Expence, that he lessen'd his Estate by that means; and brought himself so far in Debt, that he was bury'd privately by Night, in S. Paul's Church, without any manner of Funeral-Solemnity. He left but one Daughter behind him, whose first Husband was Sir Philip Sidney, who had a Daughter by her, afterwards marry'd to Roger Earl of Rutland. Her fecond Husband was Robert Earl of Effex, who had a Son and feveral Daughters by her; and her third Husband was the Earl of Chm-Richard, an Iriflman, who had Children by her of both Sexes.

A Month or two after Walfingham, Thomas Ann. 33.

A Month or two after Walfingham, Thomas An Randolph, his intimate Friend, departed this Life. This Person, whom I have had occasion to men-ration fo often already, had a Brother, Edward by Name, a brave Soldier, who died in Ireland, af-ter having obtain'd a Victory, Ann. 1567. In his younger days he study'd the Civil-Law at Christ-Church in Occasional and was Deciminated in the Church in Oxford, and was Principal of Broadgates. Afterwards he was employ'd in feveral Embaffies; thrice to the Peers of Scotland, during the Disorders there; as often to Mary Queen of Scots, after her Return from France; feven times to James VI. King of Scots; thrice to John Basi-lides Emperor of Russia, once to Charles IX. King of France, and once to Henry III. These great and eminent Services of his, for his Prince and Country, the Queen was pleas'd to repay, by making him Chamberlain of the Exchequer, (a Place formerly of great Honour) and by giving him the Post-Master's Place, with some small Manours to maintain them. Nor did he desire any larger Returns, (fo far was he from a covetous Man) although he had many Children. It may not be amis, to mention a pious and ferious Piece of Advice which he gave Walfingham, a little before his Death, by Letters which I have feen myfelf, viz. How decent, and even neceffary a thing it was, for them to lay down the invidious Employments, the one of Secretary, and the other of Ambaifador; to give themfelves the more Leisure to meditate on Heaven, and re-concile themselves to God by a timely Repen-

The next that quitted this earthly Abode, was and sic F. Sir James Crofies, who in Exhvard VI's Reign de-Crofies, fended Hadington in Scotland, againft the French, and was for fome time Governour of Ireland. He was condemn'd for Treafon in Queen Mary's Reign, but acquitted by Queen Elizabeth; and being made Governor of Berwick and the Eaft-March, Comptroller of the Queen's Houfhold, and a Commillioner at the Treaty of Berburg, he got above the Envy of the Court, which however had well nigh cruff d him, and died in a good Age his Prince's Favourite, and in fair Eficem with all that knew him.

The fame Year concluded with the Death of and the E. George Talbot Earl of Shrewsbury, the Son of Fran- of Shrewfcis, and the feventh Earl of this House and Line. bury. In Queen Mary's Reign, being then a very young Gentleman, he was entrufted by his Father, who was General in the Soutish War, with 2000 Men, with which he brought off the Earl of Northumberland, who was in great Danger at Louick, after which he was made Captain of a Troop of 500 brave Veterans in the Marches. Q. Elizabeth order'd the Queen of Scots into his Custody, and after the Duke of Norfolk's Death, advanc'd him to the Honour of Earl-Marshal of England. In those ticklish times, he made a shift to affert his Honour, and make good his Trust for 15 Years together, against all the Machinations and Slanders of the Court-Party, and the ill Conduct of his fecond Wife, to fuch a degree, That he left behind him the double Character of a wife and faithful Statefman, and a brave and worthy Commander. He had thefe Children by his first Wife, who was Gertrude the Daughter of Thomas Earl of Rutland, viz. Francis, who was taken away by an untimely Death; Gilbert, who succeeded him in Title and Estate, and marry'd Mary Cavendish, his Stepmother's Daughter; Edward, who marry'd the Daughter and one of the Heirs of the Lord Ogle; Henry and Thomas; Katharine, marry'd afterwards to Henry, Son of the Earl of Pembroke, who died without Issue; Mary, Wife to George

Oneal, had the Year before accused Hugh Earl of Tir-Oen of holding a fecret Correspondence with certain Spaniards, who were calt on the Coalts of Ireland in the Year 1,88. The Earl, to prevent any farther Difcoveries, furprized him first, and then had him strangled; but the Russians he employ'd, who were in other respects brutish enough, yet refusing at that time fo barbarous an tis faid he drew the Cord himfelf, and Office, fo choak'd him. Hereupon he was fummon'd into England, and had the Queen's Pardon, upon terms be s his humble Submiffion, and most folemn Protepardon'd. flations and Engagements, before the Queen at the Honour of Greenwick; That on the Faith and Word of a Man of Honor, he would live peaceably with Turlough Leinigh, and at his Neighbours, (for Performance of which he gave Security) and that he would disclaim the Title of O-Neal, or any Jurisdiction over those Lords that were his Neighbours; That he would form the Country of Tin-Oen into a Country: That he would not exact that Lish Tax call'd Bonaghry of any of his Dependents: That he would thenceforward put no Man to death, but according to Law: That he would not ftop the Conveyance of any Ammunition or Provisions, defigned for the English Garrisons at Blackwater, or the River More: That he would not admit into his Territories any Monks, Friers, Nuns or Male-contents: That he would use all Endeavours to civilize the Inhabitants of Tir-Oen, and to bring them to better Order; with other Conditions of the fame Nature: Provided still that Turlough Leinigh, and the neighbouring Lords should like-wise engage themselves to an amicable Correfpondence with him; that whilft he himfelf avoided all Acts of Hostility, he might not be exposed to their Insolence or Barbarity. Being difmifs'd home, he promis'd a fecond time to Sir William Fitz-Williams, the Lord-Deputy, and to the Gentlemen of the Privy-Council, that he would observe every Tittle of his Engagement. And for fome time he was indeed very punctual to all the Duties and Observances which could be expected from a good Subject, and a vertuous Man. He was Master of a Constitution that His Chacould endure the Difficulties of Watching and Hunger; and join'd to that a most indefatigable He had a generous Soul, and capable of the weightieft Undertakings; and was besides an expert Soldier, and a subtle Politician: Info-> or as much Hurt. 'Twas not long before, that Hugh Roe-Mac-Ma-hon, a potent Lord in the Territory of Monaghan, was feiz'd in his own House, by Order of the Lord-Deputy; who, though he had but just before given him the Precedency in a Contest that happen'd in his Family upon that Point; yet did he fuffer him to be try'd by Common-Soldiers, and the Scum of the People (as the Irifle complain'd) for having by Force of Arms extorted from the People those Subsidies, which are demandable by the barbarous Cultom of the Country. The Effect of this was, that they con-much that fome have concluded beforehand, that he was born to do Ireland a great deal of Good, demn'd and executed him, and divided his Efface (which was a very good one) betwixt the English 1590. and fome of the Mac-Mahons; affigning to them Ann 23 feverally a certain yearly Revenue, that they 'Y might enjoy it according to the Laws of England. This he did on purpose to weaken the Interests of a Family, that was too powerful in Creatures and Dependents; as likewife to put the same End to the Title and Tyranny of Mac-Mahon; for, it feems, this Privilege of the Family render'd om infolent and usurping, and prone to use all the Methods of an insupportable Oppression. Hereupon Brian O-Rork, a mighty Lord in the adja- 2-3erk cent Country of Brenn, apprehending the very ribeis. fame Fate, rose in Rebellion against the Queen; but being chased and routed by Sir Richard Bingbam Governour of Connaught, he fled into Scotland. The Lord-Deputy in the mean time being highly concern'd that the Honour of this Piece of Service came not to his Share. The King of Scots, upon the Queen's Demand, very chearfully furrender'd him into her Hands, protesting that he confider'd all her Enemies as his own. Nor was this a bare Complement; for he flighted all the Remonstrances of the Popish Nobility in Scotland, and the Motions of the Earl of West-moreland and other Male-contents in England, who did what they could to incense him against the Queen. He likewise demanded Security of Fames and Donald Mac-Conells, that they would not molest the English in Ireland, either from the Hebrides or Scotland.

The Four and thirtieth Year of her Reign.

was not more intent on any thing, than the Care Care of of Bretagne in France, and how to relieve the Affairs of the French King; which appear'd to be indeed in a finking Condition. She therefore fent Edmund Yorke early in the Year, to give him a gentle Touch upon his three Months Silence, and to remind him of what immediate Importance it was, to provide for the Defence of Eretagne, as foon as possible; and to perfuade him by all means to oppose and prevent the Designs of the Prince of Parma, who intended another Invasion upon France, in order to join the Spinish Forces in Bretagne. Towards the dispossessing of thefe, she promis'd him her Affistance both by Sea and Land, on Condition he would appoint a Place of Retreat for her Forces, and join a competent Number of Men with hers. The King was highly fensible of the Oucen's generous Regards for him, return'd her hearty Thanks for it, and promis'd faithfully that nothing flould be wanting on his part. He required, in the Fr. King's first place, 3000 Men, to support his Affairs in Demands Bretagne; and some Regiments to be immediate- and Overly dispatch'd for Picardy. He nominated Chertures. bourg, Granvill, or Brest, for Port-Towns of Re-treat for her Majesty's Forces; but principally Blauett, taken lately by the Spaniards, as the most commodious, (but whether in jeft or earnest, I cannot tell.) Then he gave Orders to Beavoir de Nocle, his Resident in England, to draw up Articles of Agreement, and he did accordingly manage the Contract with the Lord-Treafurer Burleigh, Charles Howard Lord-Admiral, and Hunsdom Lord-Chamberlain, who were Commissioners for the Queen: That 2000 English should be fent o- Contract ver into Picardy and Bretagne, with necessary Pro- of Assertions to maintain the War: That the King should, stance. in the Space of one Year, reimburse their Pay into the Queen's Exchequer, beside the Charge of their Transportation, and the Expense of Ammunition, &c. or sooner, provided the Enemy were disposses'd before that time. The Queen was the more eafily inclined to join in this Treaty, as being inform'd that the Spani-1591. ards were admitted into Paris, the Metropolis of Ann. 3+ France; and that the Citizens acknowledg'd the King of Spain for their Sovereign, and gave their lawful Prince no other Title than the Bearnois That the Spanish King did from hence encourage himself with the Hopes of wearing the Crown of France; and that he had declared as much to of Prance; and that he had declared as much to frain, who was Commissioner fent from the Leaguers to the Court of Spain: As also, that Pope Gregory XIII had on this occasion raisd Forces against the French King, in Italy and Swinzerland, under the Command of the Duke de National Land and Michael Research Lead and Michael Research. Montmartin, and had publish'd a Bull of Excommunication against him; which was nevertheless condemn d by the Parliament of Paris, now met at Tours, and order'd to be first fix'd to the Gallows by the common Hangman, and then burnt A Procla- to Ashes. Hereupon a Proclamation was iffu'd mationre out, forbidding the Exportation of Provision or lating to Aims into those Ports of France, which the Leaguers had in poffession, upon pain of High-Treafon; which also the King of Scots had done before. Sir Henry Palmer was likewise sent out with a Squadron of Men of War, and took 13 of their Ships, in their Return from New-France; and not long after, Sir Roger Williams went over to Diep with 600 Men, with express Orders to lie ready in those parts; because the Enemy were very near that Town, and had threatned it hard. And North a few days after, Sir John North fee fail for Bre-fent to tigne, with the reft of the Forces; which (un-Bretigne, der him) were commanded by his Brother Henry, and Zinthony Sherley. These Recruits join'd the King's Forces, and made a brisk, but unfuccefful Attempt upon Lamballe, which was defended by the Leaguers; and here died that eminent La Nevé, Soldier Francis la Nevé, of a Wound he had receiv'd. After this, however they took Chaftillon, and gave fome Check to those of the League; tho' they could not totally rout or dispossess 'em. Sir Roger Williams, with his own Forces and those of Monsieur la Chatré, Governour of Diep, broke through a Barricado at Cinquessaunce, made of Wine-Fats fill'd up with Earth; and put to flight fome of the Party, who were appointed to fcour the Ways, under the Command of Tremblecourt and Lounde: for which Act he was highly applauded by the King, in his Letters to the Queen. Hereupon he grew more hardy; and not fo well considering the Charge he had undertaken, he went along with the King to the very Suburbs of Paris; and in a short Letter sent a Challenge to the Spaniards, to dispatch 200 Pikemen, and 1000 Musketeers, to engage in the Field with the same Number of English. He had scarce got to Diep, but the King fent for him, and order'd him with his Troops to Noyon, quite contrary to the Orders which he had receiv'd from the Queen. Here he behaved himfelf with that Heat and Rafhness, as to throw away the Lives of a great ving not confented to, was therefore much displeas'd at. At the fame time the French King acquainted her Majesty, by Anthony Reaux, that he was refolv'd to fecure Rouen and New-Haven, before the Prince of Parma arrived with his Forces in France; and to that purpose he defired the Queen to fend 4000 English into Normandy, with two Months Pay; and if they flay'd longer, he engaged to pay them himfelf; and promis'd most faithfully, that as foon as they landed, his Forces should be ready to join them; and he would tarry in Piearly in the mean while, left they of Rouen should

New Sup-have any Suspicion of his Design. To this the plies gran- Queen agreed, as being very delirous to drive the Lucmy farther from the Sea-Coaft, Hereupon, a new Contract was made on the Terms proposid; but with this Provifo, that it should be 1591. ratify'd, or (to use the French Term) verify'd by Ann. 34 the Authority of the supreme Parliament. Within a few days thefe Forces were rais'd, and arriv'd at Diep, under the Command of Robert Earl E. of Efof Esfex, a young Nobleman, who had much in Jex comthe Queen's Grace and Favour. He was attend-them, ed by feveral Gentlemen of the first Quality; and Sir Thomas Leighton and Sir Henry Killegrew Men of great Experience, were appointed as Affiftants to him, where Conduct and Counfel were required. At his Arrival in France, he found the King was at a great Distance, as far as Noyen: In Normandy he perceiv'd there was not the least Preparation made, nor could he learn by any means, how he was to dispose of his Forces; so that he began to ftomach the King's Ill-treatment of himself and his Men, and resented very much his Breach of Promise. Some time after, came to him Sir Roger Williams, and intreated him in the King's Name, to make what Haste he could He poes to to him at Noyen, in order to concert Measures the Ring. for carrying on the War: Whither being at last arrived, after a difficult and very hazardous March, the King told him, that he must needs go in Person into Champagne, to join the German Army; but promis'd to send Marshal Biron and the D. of Montpensier, with all possible Dispatch, to the Siege of Rouen. The Earl with much ado got back to his Men, who had their Camp at Arques; and the better to gain the Affections of his Army, and encourage them at the fame time, he knighted feveral, the he happen'd by fo doing Mikes feto disoblige some Persons who had obtain'd that veral Knts. Honour before they fee out, and might perhaps think that he cheapen'd that Character, which had been hitherto in mighty Efteem among the English, and which the Queen hid conferr'd but on a very few Persons, and those of a distin-guish'd Note and good Family. After all there Is impostd was no Appearance either of Biron or Montpenfier : on by the The latter was gone into Champagne, to attend at French. the Nuptials of Viscount Turenne and the Duke of Bonillon's Daughter; and the former was mar-ched out of the Way, to lay a fruitless Siege to the Castle of Pierrepont. And now was another French K. Message dispatch'd to England, by Reaux, to acmessage quaint the Queen with the Reasons which hinExcuse to der'd the French King from belieging Rouen; for the Q. the Queen had warmly press'd this Siege by Sir Henry Unton, her Ambassador in France, and likewife the Verification of the Contract, by Confent of Parliament. Effex all this while lay unemploy'd in his Camp, and was not a little difturb'd that he was cheated of fuch Opportunities of diffinguishing himself: He happen'd once Essex's to approach too near Rouen, and lost his Brother Brother by a Shot from the Town. The Queen blam'd shot. him by her Letters, for following the King with-out giving her Notice, and for coming fo indifcreetly under the Walls of Rouen. But he made his Peace upon the easie Terms of a few smooth Words; and in the mean while marching with his Forces to Gornay, he was very ferviceable to Biron in the Reduction of it.

Mean while the King folicites the Queen by Beavoir to fend Effex, with the English Forces under his Command, out of Normandy into Champagne, having feemingly laid by all Thoughts of belieging Rouen. This the Queen took so ill, as to expostulate the Matter with him; forafmuch as two Months had now pas'd, tince the figning of the Contract, and the Soldiers were fill out of Pay: That for her Part, both file and her Friends had been fo long finamid and im-posed on, and either totally diffregarded, or else posted about from place to place, and exposed to infinite Hazards by the Bargain; and the King 1591. moreover was so unsteady to his Promises and Ann. 34. Resolves, and had occasion'd her so vast an Expence to fo little Purpofe, that fhe determin'd to French K. call home her Forces, unless he would keep his breaks his Word, and take some course to defray the Sum Promite, agreed on. He prefently endeavour'd to excuse Himfelf, and pacify the Queen by complaifant Letters: Wherein he laid the fault upon the Hurry and Confusion of his Affairs. In the beginning of November, when the Prince of Parma was taking the Field with a well-disciplin'd Army; he in a flow and dilatory manner began the Siege of Rouen. Effex was fent into England to haften over new Supplies; and upon his return, not many Days after, about Chrissmas-Eve, an Attack was made on St. Katharine's Tower in four places at once, and in three of 'em the English were expos'd to extreme Hazard. At the very same time the King solicited by Mornay Flessis a speedy dispatch of fresh Recruits to serve against the Prince of Parma; and these the Queen granted, after a modest Reprimand of the King's Neglect, as to the Siege of Rouen, and his stopping the Prince of Parma's advances. it likewise her Request, that the English might be treated at a better rate, and not thrust always into the midst of Danger. But this I must be contented to leave with the Writers of the French History, who were either very little acquainted with these Proceedings, or else have pitifully mifrepresented them. Nor will I rob the Church-Historian of his Right in conveying to Posterity the wild Enthusiasm of William Hacket, together with all those abominable Blasphemies, which I almost blush to mention. However, that I may not be charg'd as a Friend to his Follies, or an Enemy to Truth, I shall venture on this short Narrative till the World is supplied with a better and fuller Account.

This Hacket was a Fellow of mean Extraction, born at Oundle in Northamptonshire, a very illiterate Man, and as Haughty and Infolent as he was Ignorant: He was moreover of lo revengeful a Complexion, that pretending to be reconcil'd to a worthy Schoolmafter, to whom he bore a Grudge, he clean bit off his Nofe; and the poor Man defiring to have it again, that it might be fewed on whilft the Wound was green, the Report goes that he fwallow'd it after a most favage manner. So bitter an Enemy was he to all Goodness and Vertue, that he would expose and ridicule the facred Truths and Doctrines he had heard at Church, and make 'em the Entertainment of his Cups and Frolicks. After this, having fpent an Eftate, which he had by his Wife, who was a Widow, he put on a demure Face, and grew a mighty Saint all on a fudden. Accordingly he was the most constant frequenter of Sermons, and the most inquisitive Searcher of the Scriptures you should hear of. At last he came to manage the Pretences of an inward Call and fupernatural Revelation, with that Confidence and Dexterity, as to work himself into the good Opinion of a fort of Divines, who were itark-mad for introducing the Presbyterian-Difcipline after the Geneva-Model into England. One of this good Brotherhood was Wigginton, as Brainfick a Teacher as any of the Club, and as ftanch an Enemy to Government. This Man brought Hacker acquainted with Edmund Copinger, a Per-fon of a good Family, who was likewife puffed up with the conceit of being a chosen Veffel for the benefit of the Church, and that God had vouchfafed him wonderful Discoveries for reducing the Queen and her Council to a better fense of Things, even to the embracing of the Geneva-Discipline. And this he afterwards communicated to one Arthington, a great admirer of this way of Worship. For it feems some of these 1591. Teachers had before infused it into him. That cannot the control of the cannot be God did every day stir up one or other of these extraordinary Labourers to work in his Vineyard. This he imparted in the great Joy of his Heart to Hacket, who with a Sanctity, which he could well enough diffemble, encourag'd the Humour, and by praying Extempore and with great Fervours, by Sunday-Fasts, and by frequent Boastings of his Conflicts with Satan, swore at the hazard of his Salvation, that all this was true, and brought as a Proof thereof feveral pretended Revelations and familiar Intercourses with God, which with many Oaths and Imprecations he likewise afferted. And he had the good Fortune to find fo much Credit with the Fraternity, that to find to much create with the Francisco, under they confider'd him as a special Favourite of God Almighty, and a much greater Prophet, without all doubt, than Mefer or St. John Baptift, Nay, he proceeded so far, as to give broad light that he was appointed as a special Prophet to denounce God's Vengeance against fuch as slighted his Mercy; and foretold, That the Reign of Papacy was at an end, and that England this very Year should be afflicted with the three Scourges of Famine, Pettilence and Sword, unless the Discipline of the Lord (for that was their Cant) and a new Reformation were put in practice. Towards the effecting this, they form'd a Charge of Treason against the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Lord-Chancellor, (their ftiff Oppofers) as afterwards appear'd by their Letters, and threaten'd to take them off, if they any way oppos d the Schemes of these Novel-Reformers, in the Star-Chamber. They endeavour'd likewise to stir up the Mob to Rebellion, by seditious Papers and Rimes. In which they maintain'd amongst other Politions, That a true Child of Grace, tho' a mere Ignoramus, might lawfully teach Kings their Duty of Governing, and Dethrone the Queen to boot, unless she would lend an Hand to their blessed Reformation. It may appear from this one Instance, how inveterate an Enemy Hacket was to the Queen's Person and Character, that he used to whisper it about, that the had quitted her Title to the Crown; and in Rage fluck his Dagger into the Breaft of a Picture of hers which was drawn upon a Board. Nor was this any wonder at all, forasmuch as he had now wrought himfelf into the belief, that God had put the Empire of Europeinto his Hands, and that therefore he ought to admit of no Corrival. He likewise made a shift to persuade Copinger and Arthington themselves, that they had a more than Prophetical Spirit in them, and were a fort of Angelick Visionaries: They therefore conceiving themselves to be under the influence of a divine Inspiration, instantly paid him all Homage that could be expected from a King that had dropt down from Heaven; and began to foment Rebellion as fast as they could. July they went to a certain Nobleman; and after having offer'd him the first Place of Authority next to the Queen, they presented him with the Description of Hackets's Life and Arthington's Prophecy. But he had fomething elfe to do, and fo difinifed the Men about their business. Sometime after they intimated to Wigginton, That our Saviour had appear'd to 'em the Night bebefore, not with the Body which he wears in Heaven, but with that ruling Spirit which was fhed on Hacket in a more abundant measure than on any other; and that Hacket was that very Angel who should come before the approach of the last Day, with his Fan and Crook. or proach of the latt Day, with the Latt and Cook, to feparate the Sheep from the Goats: That he fhould likewife bear down Satan, and pull Vol. II. the Kingdom of Antichrist up by the roots. 1591. They then left Wigginton, and went to Hacket Ann. 34 before whom, as he fat upon his Bed, they fell down, and were feiz d with a violent fit of Devotion. Hacket got up, and joined with them in Prayer, earnestly desiring, that the Spirit would direct 'em to do every thing to the Glory of God, and fo went to Bed again. Arthington immediarely advised Coppinger to anoint their King with the Holy Ghott, in the Name of the Lord Jesus Chalt. Coppinger fell proftrare, and having with a profound Reverence kifsd the Floor thrice, approach d neurer Hacket; who put him back, faying, Tast he need not be anointed by him, fince he an Unition from the Holy Ghoft already; to confrom which he begun in this thrain: Do ge my Common bacuts: Go and declare through the City, that Julius Chilift is come with his Fan in his Hand to judge the World: If any enquire where he is, show 'em this place; and if then they will not believe, let 'em come and kill me if they can: As it is most certain that God is in Heaven, so 'iis as true Christ is come to Judg-

> As foon as he had faid this, out they went, and proclaim'd all the City over, that Christ was them in Commission; often repeating in a louder Tone, Repent, Repent, till they had got as far as Cheepfale; where being throng d by the Mulritude, up they got into a Cart; and what by the help of their Memories, and a written Scroll they had for that purpose, they proclaim daloud, 'That Hacker was, by the Spirit of Christ, made 'a partaker of his gloristed Nature, and was 'now come with his I'an to plant the Gospel throughout Europe, and to fet up a Form of Government and Church-Discipline in England, (and pointed withal to his Lodging). Then they declar'd, 'That they were two Prophets, the 'one of Mercy, the other of Judgment, who 'were given to Hacket as Co-adjutors and Fellow-labourers in so important a Work: All which they affirm'd upon the Salvation of their Souls to be true. They farther declar'd, That Hacket was the first and supreme Monarch of the Universe, and that all the Princes of Eu-' rope held their Scepters as fo many Dependents on him; and therefore that he alone claim'd an univerfal Obedience; and that as for the ' Queen, flie was to be deposed. In the same Place they fell a curting the Archbishop and the Lord-Chancellor, as Enemies to the fincere Profession of the Gospel. Hereupon the Throng gathering fo fast that they could not get forward to other Places of the City to make the same Oration, and being likewise advised by some of their Friends to withdraw, they fairly return'd to Hae-> ket's Lodging. Being fome time after apprehended, they carried themselves with that insolent Sawciness before the Magistrates and Council, as to refuse the Civility of their Hats, and to tell them in plain terms, that they were above all human Laws. Hacket was afterwards indicted of Treason, and confess'd himself guilty; but made his Hearers tremble at the Blasphemies then utter'd by him. This, tis possible, he did with a cunning Intention of poffelling the Judges that he was a Mad-man, whereas his Gravity and composed Mien shew'd in other respects that he was no such Thing. After his Condemnation, he was drawn upon an Hurdle to the place of greatest Concourse in the City, crying out in a most dreadful Tone, feboush-Messia! Jeboush-Messia! fee the He. ven open! behold the Son of the most High descending to deliver me ! At the Gallows, when he was importun'd to acknowledge his Sin against God and the Queen, he, like an execrable Wretch, in-

kings, God everlassing, Thou knowest that I am the true Jebovah whom Thou hoss sense, show some Miracle out of the Clouds to convert these Instidels, and deliver me from mine Enemies: But if not, (I tremble almost to repeat it) I will fet the Heavens on fire, and with these Hands pluck thee from thy Throne: With a great deal more which he utter'd to the fame purpose, and in the same stile of Blasphemy. Then turning to the Hangman, who was faftening the Rope about him, Thou Baffard, faid he, wilt thou hang Hacket, thy Sovereign? Having the Rope about his Neck, he lift up his Eyes Heaven, and, with a frightful Grin, faid, Dost thou reward me thus, instead of giving me a Kingdom? I come to revenge it.

In the midft of these loud and horrid Blasphe-Hacket is mies, the Halter difpatch'd him: But the Mob hang'd & quarter'd. would have had the impious Villain cut down alive; which was afterwards done, his Bowels ta-ken out, and his Body quarter'd, according to Sentence pass'd upon him. Thus does the great Enemy of Mankind cajole those who pretend an outward Sanctity, but are not fincerely and foberly Wife and Good. Coppinger after this flarv'd flarves himself to Death in Prison; and Arthington, be-himself. ing referv'd for Repentance, shew'd it in good Arthing earnest, and wrote a Book to testify his Hearti- ton recants

Nor were these Persons the only Opposers of the Church; but feveral others, who had hitherto made fruitless Efforts to overturn its Discipline, by deriving Slander and Scandal upon the Name and Function of Bishops, having got some Common Lawyers on their fide, fell to employ their Tongues and Pens in crying down their Authority, and traducing that Power which was given them by the Queen, as illegal and unjust.

That the Oath Examp 34. officio in those Courts, as well as in others, has been demanded time out of mind, for the difcovery of Simony, Adultery, and other heinous Crimes, especially when (to use the Law-Phrase) Infimatio fuerit clamosa, i. e. the Suspicion was loud and violent: And tho' no Man be oblig'd to accuse or betray himself, yet when common Fame has already made him guilty, ' he is bound to clear and vindicate himfelt if he can, forafmuch as the Penance impos'd is not, ftrictly speaking, of the nature of a Punishment, but rather a fort of Remedy to cure Offenders, to prevent Scandal, and to deter others by Example, according to that Saying of Scripture, For thy Soul's fake be not asham'd to speak Truth. For there is a confusion that leads to Sin, and there is a kind of fhame, the iffue of which is Grace and Glory. But I shall not in-fift farther on this Head, there being several Tracts to the purpose learnedly written on both fides, by Richard Cofins, Doctor of Law, John Morris and Lancelot Andrews.

English wait for

About this time, Thomas Howard, the Duke of Norfolk's fecond Son, was waiting, as he had done for fix Months before, for the Sp.inish Plate-Fleet homeward bound from America. During his flay at Flores, one of the Isles of Azores, the Seamen being most of 'em sick, (for Soldiers he had none at all) Alphonso Bassano, who was fent out with 53 Ships to convoy home the American-Fleet, attack'd him to unexpectedly, that Howard in the Admiral, and the reft of the English Ships, had much ado to get out to Sea. Sir Richard Gre. nvil in the Vice-Admiral, call'd the Revenge, as he staid behind to call his Men back out of the Island, and out of a rash piece of Bravery, would not fuffer 'em to fail, was pent in between the Island and the Spanish Fleet, which was divided into four Squadrons; one of which he refotutely attempted to break through: The Spanish Admiral, nam'd the St. Philip, got to Windward of him, and ply'd hard on one fide, and three Ships more from other Parts as warmly entertain'd him on the other; the Spaniards often boarded him, and were as often bear off and thrown overboard, and fighting the whole Night with fresh Recruits from their Fleet, they loft a vast number of Men. The English now began to want Powder, besides which their Pikes were broke, all their bravett Men either kill'd or wounded, their Masts split, and their Rigging damag'd, the Ship batter'd with 800 great Shot, and Greenvil himself wounded, and whilft the Wound was dreffing, fhot again a fecond time, and the Surgeon flain by his tide. By break of day, the Hatches appear'd all over Blood, and the vaft shoal of Carkasses, and Men half dead that lay featter'd up and down, presented a very lamentable Spectacle to those who were left alive. After a Fight of 15 Hours, Geeenvil, being now past all hopes of Life, order'd the Ship to be sunk. The Master countermanded it, and by confent of the major Part, got into the Boat and yielded themselves to the Admiral, on composition for their Lives and Liberties. Greenvil being now almost at his last Breath, was convey'd into the Spanish Admiral, and died within two Days, with high Commendations, even from his Enemies, of his Conduct and Bravery. The Ship was furrender'd; but shortly after funk in a Storm, with 200 Spaniards (on board her, and fo did fome other Veileis; fo that it may be faid, the Revenge made good its Ann. 34 Name, and forc'd the Spaniards to pay dear for The this new Victory.

In the mean while Howard, depending more links. on his Courage than Strength, had a great mind to venture into the midst of the Enemy's Fleet; but so far was the Matter from confencing to it, that he faid he would first leap overboard, before the Queen's Ship should be exposed to so palpable an Hazard; nor did the rest think it proper to fight against such apparent Odds and Danger, and with little or no Probability of refeuing their Friends: For, to venture ; Ships against 53 of the Enemy's, besides the Extrava-gance of the Action, would, in their opinion, be nothing elfe but to augment the Giory or pain, by weakning England, and at the Expense of a great many Lives belides. However, he an inte relt, especially Sir Thomas Variafor, (who always the Revenge for two Hours together) fought bravely as long as they had the advantage of the Wind, and did all that could be expected from Men of Courage, till the Night parted them.

The English made themselves an ample amends spinish for the lofs of the Revenge, by taking feveral Spi- Ships nish Ships; in one of which were feiz d about takens 20000 Indulgences, design'd for America, and a rich Treasure besides; the Indians, it seems, being forced to purchase their Pardons at a yearly Rate, by which the King of Spain's Coffers are fill'd, and good Grift carried to the Pope's Mill.

George Riman, a flout and able Scaman, and A Volve James Lancafter, made about this time a Voluge to the East to the East-Indies, and had the good fortune to vides. double the Cape of Good Hope. At Cabo Corrents the Admiral was cast away, and Riman in her; The Adand not long after there was a mighty Thunder. tried cast Storm, and four of the Seamen, who were on the other Versels, had their Necks to distorted by the force of the Lightnian. force of the Lightning, that they inflantly died, and above ninety were ftruck Blind, and others Lame, besides tome who were seiz d with horrible Pains, who yet recover'd all of them to a miracle, and refolutely kept on their Voiage. At the Isle of Comoro, 30 of them and the Master were murder'd by the Barbarians, as they stopt to take in fresh Water; and at Zanziber they win-

and Rice.

After this, they fail'd to Zealand, and fo to Nicubar, an Island that abounds in Cinamon and Diamonds. And finding they had but 33 of their Crew left alive, and that their Provision grew fhort, they fleer'd their course homewards. At the Ille of St. Helen they got some Refreshment; and leaving that, they were driven to Trinidad.s where they met with poor Comfort and hungry Entertainment. At last they met with Charles Barbotier a Frenchman, whom gave 'em fome Relief; but was treated by them not with that Candor and Fairness he had reason to expect, but as Seamen afe to do when they are half thaty'd and long for plunder; tho' he provid at last too cunning for them, and prevented their Designs. Afterwards, as Lancafter was refreshing hinder with fome of his Men in the Island of Ane, near Hi-(peniela, the Ship was driven away by a Storm, and not above feven diffress d Persons an her, but got home fale and very rich, teaving behind them their Companions in great Mifery and Dibeing flot through her Keel in feveral places, she streets, who afterwards by the Civility of some Frenchmen were brought home, and had the Re-1591. putation of being the first that taught their Coun-Ann.34 trymen the method of Trading in the East-Indies.

In the mean time Thomas Cavendish having faildiffer voiced round the Globe, and return'd home with age to the Honour An. 1578, undertook this Year a Voiage age to the Fronour 2nt. 1978, infactions this Teach and Straits of to the Strait of Magellan, which not being able to Magellan pass by reason of bad Weather, and contrary Winds, he was driven back to the Coasts of Bradeferted him.

The War now growing hot, there was iffued a Proclamation, forbidding any Person, upon pain of Treason, to carry Grain, Ammunition, or any kind of Naval-Stores, into the King of Spain's Dominions: And this Reason was altered of the best of the state of the best of the state of t ledg'd, That he, being the declar'd Enemy of England, had refused to ratify the ancient Treaties between their Predecessors.

And forafinuch as English Priests began about this time to convey themselves privately into England from the Popish Seminaries abroad, in greater clusters than they used formerly, (the Spanish King having lately founded an English Cloister at Valladolid) and endeavour'd to bring off the Queen's Subjects from their Allegiance, and draw 'em over to the Spaniards Party: There was publish'd a Proclamation in October; That no A Proclamation Man should barbour any Person whatever, except he against fift enquir'd who he was, whether he frequented the Service of the Church, what Estate he liv'd upon, where he refided the Year before, and other Circum-flances of the like kind. That whoever could not readily answer to these Querics, should be sent to the Justices of Peace, appointed in every County, that so the Government might suffer no Prejudice.

This Proclamation being fomewhat harsh and fevere, occasion'd the Papills to put out several Pamphlets full of biting Reflections upon the Lord-Treafurer Burleigh, as the fuppos'd Author thereof. In which, however, they bestowd high Commendations on Sir Christopher Hattom, as a Person better affected to their Interest, and who was of opinion, that Religion was not to be propagated by Fire and Sword: But it pleas'd God that he died of a Diabetes the very day before this Proclamation was put out; and twas thought his Diftemper was heightned by the Regret he conceiv'd at the Queen's demanding from him a large Sum of Money in confideration of the Tenths and First-Fruits of which he had the Management; which Sum he hop'd would be remitted, as he was so great a Favourite with her Majesty: But when she had once sunk his Spirits by an unkind Expression, all that she could do by Visits or any other methods to raise them again, was to no putpole. He was born of a Family in Northamptonsbire more Ancient than Rich. And being a young Gentleman, tall, handsom and well-shap'd, he so wrought himself into the Affections of Queen Elizabeth, that she made him one of her Band of Gentlemen-Penfioners, which were fifty in number; and after-wards, for his modest and courteous Behaviour, the admitted him a Gentleman of her Privy-Chamber, made him Captain of her Guard, Vice-Chamberlain and one of her Privy-Council, and, to crown her Favours, made him in the last place Lord-Chancellor of England and Knight of the

He was a Person Pious and Charitable, a great Patron of Learning and good Sense, and for that reason chosen Chancellor of the University of Oxford. And he was one that manag'd that weighty Poft of Lord-Chancellor with that Equity and Clearness of Principle, as to be able to fatisfic his Conscience, and the World too. His 1591. Funeral was solemnized with a due and decent Ann. 34. Magnificence in St. Paul's, and William Newport, his Nephew by his Sifter, whom he had adopted his Heir, by the Name of Hatton, erected a stately Monument for him.

The Great Seal was for some time lodg'd in the Hands of the Lord-Treasurer, the Lord Hunfdon, the Lord Cobbam and the Lord Buckburft, and fome time after deliver'd to John Puckering the Puckering Queen's Serjeant at Law, tho' not with the Title of Chancellor, but Keeper of the Great the Great Seat. Now came on the Trial of Brian O-Rork in West- O- Kork's minster-Hall. He was a powerful Lord of Brenny Tital. in Ireland, very much in the Spanish Interest, and was the last Year deliver'd up by the K. of Scots, and fent into England, as I said before. 'He was impeached for having flirred up Alexander Mac-Conel and others against the Queen: For ' ordering her Majesty's Picture to be hungat an ' Horfe's Tail, and carried about the Streets in 'contempt, and at last cut in pieces: That he had shelter'd in his House several Spaniards that were Shipwreck'd, contrary to the Lord-Deputy's Proclamation: That he had fet his Instruments to burn down the Houses of several of the Queen's good Subjects, and had murder'd others; and had made an Offer of Ireland to the 'King of Scots. When this Indicament was explain'd to him by an Interpreter, (for he did not understand English) he was so strangely Insolent, as to refuse submitting himself to a Trial by twelve Men, unless a longer time were allow'd him, and good Council also appointed him. And he demanded likewife, that the Impeachments fent out of Ireland, might be deliver'd into his Hands, and the Queen herfelf manage the Trial in Person. When the Lord-Chief-Justice had answer'd him by an Interpreter, 'That if he re-'fus'd in plain terms to take his Trial by a Jury of twelve Men, they were oblig'd however, by the Laws of England, to bring in their Verdict 'according to the Articles of the Indicament; he made no other answer than this, That they might even do as they pleas'd. Sentence of Death being pass'd upon him, he suffer'd as a Traitor Hang'd. fome Days after at Tyburn, without the least touch of Remorfe for his Crime, but ridicul'd Meilery Creah Archbishop of Cassil, (who ministred Advice and Comfort to him in the Irish Tongue) and charg'd him as a Man of unfleady Principles and a lewd Life, calling him a kind of Apostate from the Franciscan-Order.

This Year her Majesty (to her immor- An Uni-Honour) founded a College at Dublin, versity the Metropolis of Ireland, and dedicated it to erected at the Holy and Undivided Trinit; for the Adry fame place where the Monastery of All-Saints ftood formerly, and endow'd with the usual Privileges belonging to Universities; of Teaching, Reading, and Conferring honorary Titles or Degrees upon Men of Learning: (the fame thing that the Pope had done for this Place, about the Year 1320.) This the Queen did, to propagate Piety and good Manners through the whole I-fland, and to eafe the Inhabitants of a great Expence in sending their Children to a great Diftance, for the Advantage of Education.

Not long before this, Hugh O-Donell, whom Sir John Perott, the Lord-Deputy, had fecur'd on board a Ship, and afterwards confin'd in the Ca-Commotions; got out of Prison, and sent the Lord-Deputy Word, that his Father had confign'd to him the Authority of O-Donell, viz. the 1591. Government of Tir-Conell: And from that In-Ann.34. Stant he began to rebel in Ireland, as Bothwell did o Donel in Scotland. Of whom it may not be amiss to add a Word or two, (tho' it may feem a Digreffion, to meddle with the Affairs of Scotland) because these Matters are so link'd and twisted with the Transactions here at home, that they will give Light to the following Hiftory, which would otherwise appear more difficult and perplex'd.

Bothwell having been charged with dealing in Witcheraft, had now broke out of Prifon, and maintaining a most implacable Harred against Maithind, the Lord-Chancellor; whom he fuspected as the principal Party in his Impeachmint; and having a Mind likewife to get both him and the King into his power, about the end of December he broke into the King's Palace at Edinborough, and with a Party of English and Scotch Borderers, attempted to force open the Queen's Chamber, to fire the King's Lodgings, and to feize upon the Lord-Chancellor's House all at the fame time: But he was foon repuls'd and put to flight by the Citizens that gather'd together upon this occasion. Some of his Followers were hanged for their pains, and the Hammer was fix'd to the Queen's Chamber-door in remembrance of the Fact.

The Five and Thirtieth Year of her Reign,

Bothwel The beginning of this Year, the King by Proproclaimd clamation declard, that Bothwel was the Author Traitor. of this bold and dangerous Attempt: That he was moreover fo entirely abandon'd to Vice, and loft to all fense of Vertue, as through an 'infolent Pride to trample on the Laws of God and Man: That fince his return from Italy, he had been at the bottom of all Commotions, whether he were directly concern'd in 'em or not: That he had barbarously murder'd David Humes, and receiv'd his Pardon for that Crime; but 'that he now defied the Laws, and feem'd to take Sanctuary in repeated Villanies; and fo ' much the more, because an Italian Wizard had told him, That he was in danger of receiving a just Fate from the Anger of his provok'd Prince: That his Apprehensions grew upon him after the murder of William Stuart of Achiltre, the King's Servant: That from that time he began to herd with a Gang of loofe and profligate 'Fellows, as bad as himfelf: That he conspir'd with the Pope and the Spanish King to ruin both Kingdoms: That he afterwards join'd with those, who out of a private Grudge had taken up Arms against some Courtiers, at Deebridge, a place far distant from the Court: That 'as foon as the King began his March, they threw down their Arms; but that he himself encamp'd near Edinborough, the King's Residence, intercepted several Persons, and did not withdraw till the King was in the Field just ready to engage him: That not long after, he applied himfelf to the Black-Art, and conful-ed with Necromancers and Witches, low to ' take the King off when he was in Denmark, out of a Confciousness of his Guilt, and the Hopes he had conceived of escaping Scot-free, and fecuring the Crown to himself: That being hereupon cast into Prison, and just upon his Enlarge-ment on certain Terms and Conditions, his Conscience stung him to that degree, that he broke the Prison, and getting together a Gang of desperate Debauchées, attack'd the King's Pa-lace with no other design than to tyrannize with more Security when he had murder'd the King's Person, and in him the Laws of the Thomas Lord Buckhurst, Sir Robers Cecil the Lord

'Land: That he made a very strict fearch for the King, fet his Chamber-door on fire, attempted to force open the Queen's Lodgings with an annie; Hammer, flew fome of the King's Servants, and wounded others, and all this out of pure Malice to the King. The King therefore commanded, that no Man should harbour or relieve him or his Accomplices, upon fuch Pains and Penalties as are allotted to the Receivers and and Harbourers of Traitors.

I shall refer it to the Scottish History, which is chiefly concern'd in the Relation, to give an Account of the Earl of Huntley's purfuing him, authoriz'd by this Proclamation, and the Chancellor's Instigation; how he assaulted Vurray's House, who had conceal'd Bothwel; how Murray was flain and Huntley imprison'd for the Fact, and in a fhort time bail'd out on Security given for his Appearance at his Trial; of his return home afterwards, and the infolent and rude Treatment he there met with from the Clan-Hattons and Alarray's Friends, who feem'd refolv'd upon a Re-venge. However, it will be of use in pursuing the Thread of our English History to touch upon the fo lowing Particulars.

Bothwel having got together a loofe Gang of He mod Fellows from the Borders, and out of England, letts the where he had for some time skulk'd, return'd in-to Scotland, and once more outrag'd the King, in the Month of June, at his House at Falkland, but with the fame Success as before: For no fooner did the Courtiers oppose him, but he fled into England as fast as his Fears could drive him. The Chancellor however was remov'd from Court upon his Friend's Solicitations. In the mean while, the Jefuits were every-where very Industrious with the Nobles to advance the Romish Interest: And the Clergy at the same time, for the defence and prefervation of their Religion, preferr'd a Bill in Parliament, 'To have all those 'excommunicated who refus'd to join in the Service of the Kirk of Scotland; and if they con-tinu'd obstinate the space of a Year, that their 'Lands and Chattels should be forfeited during their Lives.

Amongst the excommunicated Party was one George Kerr, a Doctor of Law, who deligning be-fore the Year's end to travel into Spain, was so closely and briskly pursued by the Clergy, that they took him just as he was ready to go on Board; and in their fearch of his Things they found feveral Blanks, fome in the form of Letters Missive directed to the King of Spain, others relating to private Leagues, and every one of them subscrib'd and fign'd with the Names and Seals of William Earl of Angus, George E. of Hunt-ley, Francis Earl of Aroll, and Patrick Gourdon of Achinden: But these Circumstances will be better left to the Scotch Writers, who are more fully acquainted with 'em.

'Tis now time to return to the Affairs of Eng-An enqui-land; for never was Ireland in a more composed by after State. However a very exact Enquiry was made Sir John all the Illand over into the Life and Morals of Perror's Sir John Perrot, the late Lord-Deputy, who was choice one of the Queen's Privy-Council for the faithful and honourable Discharge of his Trust But the Lord-Chancellor Hitton, who had a Creature of his own to prefer, and other of Perror's Enemies at Court, spar'd no pains to get him out of his Place, under pretence of his being a very proud Man; and to far the matter went, that having got one or two bijh Evidences to inform against him, he was brought to his Trial, in April, the' the Lord Hitten was dead, His Trial, and Burleigh used all possible means to prevent it. The Commissioners were Henry Lord Hunsdon,

Burleigh's

Burleigh's Son, (who being a Gentleman of promiling Parts, was of late an Affiltant to his Fa-minast ther in Serte-Matters, and made a Privy-Coun-fellor) befides Sir John Fortefeue, Sir John Wolley, and fome other Jultices.

Charge.

& Anfw.

He was impeach'd in the first place, ' for having abused the Queen's Person, by contume-' lious Expressions; faying, that she was illegitimare, inquifitive, and faint-hearted: That the ' him from reducing Ulfter; and that one time or other she would want his Assistance. Secondly, 'That he had foller'd and reliev'd Popilh' Priefts, and notorious Traitors. Thirdly, That he had held private Correspondence with the ' Prince of Parma, and the Queen's Enemies. Fourthly, 'That he had fomented the Commotions rais'd by O-Rorke, and those of the Clan of Burgh.

He did not deny, but that he had thrown out fome reflecting Words upon the Queen's Perfon, but alledg'd that those Expressions proceeded not from Want of a just Regard for the Queen. He profess'd himself to be very much concern'd, that through an indifereet Paffion he should ever let fall such Expressions; the Occasion of which was, his being hinder'd from carrying on the good Defigns he had began in Ireland. As for the rest of the Charge, it being neither made out by clear Proof, nor competent Witnesses, he got clear of it, as a Person no ways deserving the Character of being a Friend to Popery.

Amongst the Witnesses that appear'd against him, was Philip Williams, formerly his Secreary; Dionyfe O-Roghan, an Irifh marry'd Prieft, to whom he had given a Pardon for Life, after having counterfeited his Hand, in hopes of discovering the Practices of the Priests through his means; and last of all, Walton, a Man of stain'd Reputation. After ne had maintain'd stoutly his own Charge against Popham the Queen's Attorney, and the other Council, till Eleven at Night; he was by the Jury brought in guilty of Treafon: But the Sentence of Death was deferr'd till another day; which it being absolutely necessary to pals in Form of Law, at the Instigation of his Enemies, it was pronounced about twenty days after; and a Report went, that Burleigh shed Tears at the same time, for the unhappy Fate of that Gentleman, and said, with a Sigh, That the more unjust any Man's Malice is, so much the more keen and behaviour its of Courfe. O-Roghan the Priest had a Pention of 40 l. per ann. affign'd him. As for Perott, he fell lick in the Tower, and died in dies in the September; when he had hopes of Life, through the Queen's Clemency, who was now appeas'd. Hereupon she was often heard to applaud that Rescript of Theodosius, Honorius, and Arcadius: If any Person speak ill of the Emperor, through a foolish Rashness and Inadvertency, it is to be despised; if out of Madness, it deserves Pity; if from Malice and Awerfinn, it calls for Mercy.

His Estate went, by the Queen's Favour, (as he had formerly settled it) to his Son, who marry'd the Earl of Effex's Sifter. Thus did a Gentleman, otherwise very well deserving, occasion his own Ruin, by the ill Management of his Tongue. For fure it is, that reflecting Speeches cannot but leave a scurvy Tincture of Resentment on the Minds of Princes.

We have formerly observ'd, that the French K. encamp'd the last Year, when cold Weather came on, against Rouen, with the English Auxiliaries under the Command of the Earl of Effex; and there he winter'd, inconveniently enough, with the finan Forces he had. On the Approach of the Spring, when the King had pretty well fa-tigud himlelf with the Hardships of a Winter-

Siege, and finding himfelf not ftrong enough to take so well fortify'd a City; he forbore making 1592. any nearer Approaches, (tho' he had a Supply Ann. 35. of 2000 fresh Men from England) and made no farther Attempts: Nor would he liften to Effex, who being led on by a Defire of Glory, undertook to make a Breach, and enter the City with the English Forces. (But the Truth is, the French were too cautious a People to expose a wealthy City, which they hoped in a fhort time to get into their own Hands, to be plunder'd by those of the English.) Essex despairing now of doing any great Feats, after he had (to no purpose) fent a Challenge to Villars, the Governour of Rouen, to fight him fingly; left the Care of his Men to Sir Roger Williams, and took leave of the French Effex red King, in order to return for England. For the turns out Queen call'd him home, and his Friends acquain- of France. ted him, that his Enemies at Court had postes'd the Queen against him, and made their Advan-tage of his Absence. Within a few days after, the French King himfelf was forced to break up French K. this tedious Siege; his Men daily revolting from quits the lim, the Enemy making frequent Sullies, and Siege of the Prince of Parma being jult ready to attack him: Wherefore he left fome of his Forces in the Camp, and return'd with the rest to Diep. The Prince of Parma was now a fecond time invited into France, by those of the Affociation; and he and his Son Rainutio brought an Army thither once more; and making a Feint, as if he defign'd the Relief of the Garrison in Chaumert, they took Chafteau-Neuf. After this he had good Success in a small Skirmish with the King's Horse at Aumarle, which animated the People of Rouen to that degree, that they made a Sally, fell on the King's Camp, and feiz'd his Ordnance. Parma return'd after this to Abbeville, as if with an Intention to go home; and the King supposing he had been gone, and being straitn'd for Provitions, brake up the Siege, and disbanded a great part of his Army: But the Prince of Parma, just nicking the Opportunity, carry'd on his Defign with new Supplies, took Caudebeek, and open'd the River Seine, for a Conveyance of Provisions to the City, which was now half-famish'd. Entrance into Rouen flush'd and harden'd the Rebels; but being too politick a Soldier to engage Parma the Enemy, he foon return'd home, with the returns.

Lofs of his Health, and a great Number of Men. How bravely the English behaved themselves on English this occasion, when the Van of the Leaguers Ar- Valour. my were beaten out of their Trenches, and routed at Tvecourt, the King himfelf was pleas'd to take Notice, in Iome Letters to the Queen, dated from Viccara-wille; wherein he applauded Sir Roger Williams, as a fecond Cefar, and bestow'd great Commendations on Sir Matthew Morgan.

The K. being almost crush'd with the Weight of fo tedious a War, was forced to apply once more to the Queen for fresh Recruits of Provision and 6000 Men, for the British Service. She a- succours greed to furnish him with 4000, besides some sent again Pieces of Ordnance; and hereupon enter'd into to the Fr. a Contract with Beavoir Noclé, and Sancy, who were fent as Deputies from the King. The Conditions were: That the King should neither make Peace with the Affociators, unless they first submitted themselves, and join'd with him in driving the Spaniards out of France; nor with the Spaniards, unless with her Consent: That he should put into the Hands of the English, whilst they were employ'd in Bretagne, a fortify'd Town, and fome Haven for a Retreat: That he should add of his own 4000 Foot and 1000 Horfe: That he should in a Years time repay the Charges of transporting the Forces, and all the Money which went to pay the Sol' diers; and that this Contract should be recor-1592. ' ded in the Chamber of Accounts. Hereupon Norris, who had been call'd home to inform the Queen of the State of things in Bretagne, was fent again thither in October: Where the French break the not joining with him, according to Promife, but inflead of that, fending him from thence from place to place, and ordering his Forces into La-Main and Normandy; (whilit the Spaniards in the mean time fortify'd themselves in Bretagne) The Queen resented it very highly, and often demanded the Performance of Conditions; tho' to no purpose. And she had probably call'd her Men home, but that fhe was certainly inform'd, that the Prince of Parma had a Defign of making a third Expedition into France, with Recruits for the Spanish Army in Bretagne, and in order to secure the Sea-Ports there.

Death of of Parma.

Raleigh

America.

But during his Preparations for this Defcent, the Prince he was taken away by Death, having been fourteen Years the King of Spain's Vice-Roy in the Government of the Netherlands. He was a Prince that had all the Accomplishments fit for a General, and had deferv'd the highest Love and Respect, even from his Enemies. Queen Elizabeth never named him but with great Regard and Commendation; but yet with fo prudent a Re-ferve, that her Praifes might no way turn to his

ry well, that the King of Spain advanced his Arms, not so much by the Strength of his Country, as the Advantage of the American Gold, which let him into the Cabinets of Princes, debauch'd their Councils, and stole away the Honesty of their Subjects; resolv'd to send Sir Walter Raleigh into America, with 15 Men of War, to seize on Panama, whither the Gold is brought, to be put on board; or elfe to intercept the Spanish Fleet. But having the ill Fortune to be detain'd in Port, for three Months together, by contrary Winds, he fet sail a little too late: Having pass'd Cape Finistre, or the Land's-End, he receiv'd a most certain Account, that the King of Spain had given positive Orders, that not a Ship should fail from America this Year. Shortly after, the English Fleet was separated by a violent Storm, and they loft their Long-boats; fo that his Project was quash'd: and he, designing to return, divided his Fleet into two Squadrons; one of which he entrusted to Sir John Borrough's fecond Son, and the other to Sir Martin Forbisher. He order'd Sir Martin to cruize upon the Coasts of Spain, and to prevent any Ships from coming into Harbour: And he commanded Sir John Borroughs to wait at the Azores, to surprize the Caracks that came from the East-Indies. And this Attempt was not altogether without Success; for the Spanish Admiral was most intent upon For-bisher, and neglected the Safety of the Caracks. Borroughs, befides that he took some small Vessels from the Spaniards, and escaped a very notable Danger, by his Conduct and Courage, being hemm'd in between the Spanish Shoar and the Enemy's Fleet; arrived fafely at Sancta Cruce, a fmall Town in the Isle of Flores; and in a few days got Sight of a Spanish Carack, which was chased by three English Ships, under Command of the Earl of Cumberland, and very likely to fall into their Hands, but that they were becalm'd and could not come up with her : A Storm, however, arose in the Night, which obliged both the English and Portuguese to weigh Anchor. At break of day, the English observed, that the Portuguese were unlading the Carack in a great Hurry, at the Flores; and upon the Approach of the English they immediately fet her on fire. Borroughs being inform'd by one or two Prifoners he had taken, that there were other larger Caracks behind, ranged what Ships he had for two Leagues 1592. together, near the Island, and spread them to Ann.35. fuch a Latitude, as that they could eatily differn whatever was around them, at a great Distance. They had not tarry'd long, before a large Carack, call'd the Mother of God, which was 165 Foot from Stem to Stern, and a feven-deck'd Ship, came in Sight, most richly laden, and with 600 Men on board.

The English play'd furionsly upon her with their great Guns, and fired in Broad-fides upon her, being animated with the Hopes of a confiderable Prize: But they foon sheer'd off again, being fomething furprized at the Talness of the Ship, and the Number of Men to defend her; till Sir Robert Cross laid the Queen's Ship, call'd the Providence, athwart her Stern, and stood the Brunt singly for three Hours together: After which, the other Ships ply'd her to warmly, especially at the Stern, that no Man had the Courage to stand at the Helm any longer. The first that boarded her was Crofs himfelf, follow'd by feveral others. The Victory obtained, they found Takes are every Place full of flaughter'd Bodies, and a con-other. fused Heap of dead and dying Men, which with the maim'd and wounded, who lay every where fcatter'd up and down, made a very lamentable Spectacle: fo that the very Sight inclined them to use their Success with Clemency and Moderation. The Prize, when 'twas brought home, was valued (on Report) at 150000 l. Sterling; Some of befides what the Officers and Seamen had pilfer'd imbezet'd. and got into their own Clutches. But although Commissioners were appointed to make strict Search after the Men and Goods, as having ftoln the Custom; and a Proclamation was issued out, as feveral others had been before, that they fhould produce the Goods they had purloind or convey'd away, upon pain of being profecuted as Thieves and Pirates; yet did they manage the Roguery too dexteroully for the Commissioners Care, or the Rigour of the Proclamation to lay any hold upon 'em: for they forswore the Fact, and that secured them. And they were observed to fay, That they had rather trust a merciful God with their Souls, tho' stain'd with Perjury; than ven-Danger and Pains, into the Hands of unmeriful Men.

Nor was the Dishonesty of some particular

Merchants less infamous, who, upon the break-Merchants ing out of a dangerous War between Spain and fend Guns to Spain and Spain to Spain England, (tho' not yet declared) privately furto Spain.
milli d the Spaniards with Brafs and Iron Guns for their Shipping; which the Queen being mude fensible of, prohibited the Exportation of them, under such Penalties, as are due to those who aid and affift the Enemies of their Country: and withal, she forbad the Iron-workers from that time forward to cast any Ordnance bigger than those we call Minions, and those not above fix-teen thousand Pound Weight.

The Queen, in her Summer-Progress, pass'd Q visite through Oxford, and stay'd there several days; Oxfords where she was agreeably entertain'd with elegant Speeches, Plays, and Disputations; and receiv'd a splendid Treat from the Lord Buckburft, Chancellor of the University. At her Departure she took her leave of them in a Latin Oration, whereby she let them know, that she prefer'd the fincere and cordial Respects of that learned Body, to all their Entertainments; tho' they too were very acceptable to her. She return'd em abundance of Thanks for their Civility, made a fhort Prayer, and left fome good Advice with them. Her Prayer was, that as the defired nothing more earnestly, than the Sasery, Honor and Happiness of the whole Kingdom; so, that the University Vol. II. Cccc (which

(which was one of the Lights thereof) might 1592- flourish and rife up every day to a greater Lu-Ann. 35. fire: Then for her Advice, it was this, that they would in the first place be careful to serve God, not with the novel and fantastical Devotion practis'd by fome, but according to the Laws of God and the Land: That they would not outrun the Laws, but follow them; nor difpute the Fitness and Authority of them; but sincerely obey those that were in Force, and submit to their Superiours: And, in the last place, that they would preserve Peace, Union and good Agreement among themselves.

There was both this Summer, and the last, so great a Drought all England over; that the Fields were burnt, and the Lountains dry'd up, and a great many Beatls perifid every where for want of Water. The Themes likewile, the nobleft River of all Britain, and which has as full and large very low. a Tide as any in Europe, (for it flows twice a day above 60 Miles from the Mouth of it, and receives an Increase from the Mixture of many other Streams and Rivers with it) was however funk to that degree, (to the Wonder of all Men) on the 5th of Soptember; that a Man might ride over it near Lendon-Bridge; fo shallow was the A Ghefsat Channel. Whether this Effect was owing to that is Carle. Dreight, or the Violence of a strong South-West-Wind, which blew hard for two Days togither, and fo drove the fiesh Waters upwards, and kept back the Sea-Tide at the same time, I cannot determine: especially the Moon being then at the I ull, and Southerly, and the Sun near the Equinoctial; at which Seafon Seamen have remark'd, that there are the highest Tides in the River Thames. Some there were, who maintain'd from Philosophy, that this was occasion'd by some occult Quality in Nature; and affirm'd, That as a Quartan Ague returns precifely at its Hour, as the Gout observes its Time, as a Purpation keeps a stated Period, unless some Impediment be in the Way; and as the Fatus is ripe at its Month: fo have the Waters certain Spaces and Diftances for their ebbing and flowing: But some being leffer than others, are therefore the more easily observ'd; though the greater are no less certain than the other. Nor is this to be wonder'd at, when we fee, the whole Order and Course of Nature turns, upon fet and determinate Seafons. The Winter has never yet mifcarry'd, and the Summer-Heat has return'd in its Seafon: The Spring and Fall succeed one another as they us'd to do; and the Solftice and Equinoctial keep their exact Times and Measures. There are likewife fome Laws and Periods in the fubterranean World; which tho' we know little of. yet are they as fix'd as the Center of it. 'nay easily conceive, that the fame Cause which governs the visible Earth, is observed in Proportion, in the Regions beneath it. L. Monta- This Year died Anthony Brown Viscount Mon-cute dies. tacute, (Son of Anthony, Master of the Queen's Horfe, and Standard-Bearer of England) whom Queen Mary honour'd with this Title, because his Grand-mother was the Daughter and one of the Heirs of John Nevill Marquel's Montacute. She likewise made him Knight of the Garter, and fent him to Rome, with fome other Gentlemen, to tender Obedience to that See, in the Name and Behalf of the whole Kingdom. Queen Elizabeth having experienced his Loyalty, had a great Efteem for him, (tho' he was a stiff Romanift) and pay'd him a Vifit fome time before his Death: For the was fentible that his Regard for that Religion, was owing to his Cradle and Education, and proceeded rather from Principle, than Faction, as fome People's Faith did. He was succeeded by Anthony, his Grand-son, who very commendably follow'd the good Example 1592. fet him by his Grand-father. Ann. 35. About the fame time died Herry Lord Scrope As does of Bolton, who was likewise Knight of the Gar- As does ter, and Warden of the West-March towards Scotland; a Person whom I have made frequent Mention of. He left for his Successor his Son Thomas, whom he had by Margaret Howard, Sifter to Themis, the last Duke of Norfolk.

Nor must we forget Sir Christopher Wray, Lord and Judge Chief-Justice of the Queen's Bench; a Person Wray. mention'd more than once already, and whose Memory is valuable upon the account of that profound Knowlege he had in the Law; as well as for the Probity of his Life and Actions. He was happy in his Family, and was a great Benefactor to Megdalen-College in Cambridge. He was succeeded in his Office by John Poph, m, the Queen's Attorney; a Person of a bitter Temper and censorious Disposition.

The Six and thirtieth Year of her Reign.

In February the Parliament met at Westminster, A Parliaand made feveral good Laws, to reftrain Diffenment ters, and Popifh Recufants, denying themfelves, meetsand diffuading others from holding Communion with the Church of England; concerning the Revenues of Monasteries and other religious Houses granted to Hen. VIII. the Relief and Maintenance of Soldiers and Seamen; the not Building of any Houses, within three Miles of the City of London; and feveral other Matters. And when they had closely debated and weigh'd (as the Acts of Parliament themselves declare) how earnestly bent the Enemies of our Constitution were, upon the Ruin of England; having already fubdu'd our confederated Porces in France, Scotland, and Holland, and feiz'd on all the Places that lay convenient for annoying England: they thought it proper to provide necessary Supplies to divert this impending Danger. Then, after bestowing large Encomiums upon the prudent and wife Conduct of a Maiden-Queen, temper'd with that affectionate Care and Regard for her Subjects; who had disburs'd so vast a Supply from her own Treasury, to carry on a War (with good and happy Success) against an opulent and potent Enemy; as none of her Ancestors had ever done before: and all this, without any burdensome Grants from her People; tho' she had occasion not only to act on the Defensive, but to assist and support her Allies: On this account, the Clergy freely and chearfully confented to advance two entire Subfidies, and the Laity three; together with fix Fifteenths and Tenths, to be paid at a certain time or Date. But they humbly requested withal, That forasmuch as those Acts were to be kept upon Record, a Caveat might be enter'd in express Terms, that these large and unufual Grants, which were made to a most excellent Princefs, on a most pressing and extraordinary occasion, might not at any time hereaf-ter be drawn into a Precedent. The Queen coming into the House on the last Day of the Seffion, to give her Royal Affent and Confirmation to the Laws that were made; after a fo-lemn Profession of her Love to her People, was pleas'd to make this Protestation, in the first place: 'That her first Care and Concern had e Queen's ver been for the Advancement of God's Glory, speech to and that of the Publick; and that flee had ap-them.

ply'd her constant Endeavours to this end. She then reprefented, in a very few Words, but full of Weight and Sente, 'how free she had always' been from Abjectness or Despondency of Spifrit, fince having God and a good Conscience 1593.

for her Security, flee knew not how to fear type? the most powerful Enemies that could affault Ann. 36. ' her. After this, to encourage her Subjects, fine faid a great deal of the Bravery of the English; and among other things, 'That their English Na. nemies knew to their Cost, that the English Na-' tion are embolden'd by a kind of Native Courage, to look Danger in the Face; as they had often prov'd, if they would not difguise the Matter; and would hereafter have occasion to do, to the still greater Advance of the English Glory and Honour. Let the English only look about them, and not fuffer themselves to be ' furprized; and their Enemies would foon perceive, that it would cost them dear, to provoke a Nation so able to revenge its own Cause. She concluded with her Thanks for the Supplies of Money they had granted, and promised to employ all her Thoughts upon Religion, and the Care of her People Appendix.

How just she was to the first Part of her Promife, the Care of Religion, you may learn from the Church-Hittory of that time, in the Punishment the inflicted on Henry Barrow and his Followers, who began to diffurb the Peace of the Church, by advancing monthrous Opinions, crying down the Church of England, and leffening the Queen's Prerogative in Matters Spiritual: And how well she acquitted herself as to the Civil State, will appear from what follows.

The Queen took no less Pains to weaken and divert the Spaniards, and drive them out of Bretagne in France, than the did to keep them off from Scotland; being very much afraid, left the Confusions which were on foot in that Kingdom, might open a Gap, to let in the Spaniards, to the absolute Destruction both of that and En gland. For she had not long since receiv'd most certain Intelligence, as I hinted before, that the Catholick Noblemen in Scotland had, by the Help of the Priests, conspired to let the Spaniards into Scotland, to change the Face of Religion there, and to invade England from that Quarter; and that Creighton the Jefuite, who was, by reason of his great Age, enlarged from his Confinement, upon giving his solemn Word, that he would artempt nothing against England, was, for that purpose, frequently dispatch d into Holland and Spain. The Queen likewife readily forefaw, what an cafie matter it would be, to debauch the common fort of People in the West of Scotland, being generally poor and indigent, by some round Offers of Spanish Gold. She likewise reflected what convenient Sea-ports they had in those Parts, from whence they might land their Forces without the least Opposition; what a warlike Nation it was, and how well provided with Cavalry; and how easily they might enter England from thence, as it were by a Back-door: Add to all this, that those of the English, who lie in the Neighbourhood of Scotland, were a fort of fickle and unfleady Subjects; most of them either Papiffs, or true Lovers of Change and Novelty, that subsisted upon bare Hope and Prospect: And then again, that the Affailants are generally more active and couragious, than those who are put upon the Defensive; because they seem to be reduced to the Cast of a Die, whether their Estates shall be their own, or not.

The Queen therefore communicates all this to the King of Scots, and advises him to crush betimes the Power of those Scottish Nobles; to exercife his Royal Authority upon his feditious Subjects, and not flew himfelf as it were the Shadow of a King. He, for his part, was very well prepared to follow this Advice, and put out very fevere Laws against the Catholicks and their Abettors, punish d David Graham of Fentre, one the Earls of Angus, Hontley, and Arre'. In the 1593-mean while, Bothwell lay skulking in England, Ann 36 and fent fawning Letters to the Queen, (whose V large Promifes, that were he once more re-ad mitted into his Prince's Favour, he would ferve him most faithfully, and do his best to coush the Spanish Faction in Scotland : Wherefore he humbly intreated the Queen to mediate with the King his Master, for his Pardon. But she finding that the King very much stomach'd his being receiv'd in England, was so far incens'd at the Impudence of the Man, for daring to affault his Prince, God's Image and Vice-gerent, and to bring him into daily Fears and Apprehensions; that she fent the Lord Borough Ambassador into Scotland, to as fure the King, in her Majesty's Name, that Buchwell had clandestinely stoln into England, and that file would certainly punish those that harbourd or reliev'd him. His Commission was likewise to ensame the King yet farther against the Spanish Faction, and to fet up an opposite Association of Protestants in Scotland, for the Preservation of the King's Person, and the joint Defence of the Religion of the Kingdom, against all sorein and feditious Attempts whatever: And this Affociation was enter'd into in a very fhort time of the Affociation, and purfu'd and early routed A after. Upon the King's Return from the North, the Lord Berough requested this of him in Writing: 'That he would please to certify the Queen's 'the Queen of any Attempts or Designs the Spa-Demands. ' nish Faction might have upon England, and that he would be so just to protect the Crown from any Usurpations upon it: That if he could not do Justice on the Persons of those Traitors, he would at least confiscate their Estates: That he would admit none to his Council, but Perfons of known and experienced Loyalty; and that he would inform the Queen of all thefe Particulars, under his own Hand, to make it appear to her and other Princes of the same Perfuasion, what Care he had taken to oppose the common Enemy: And in the last place, that he would liften to an Accommodation with the Borderers. If he would confent to thefe Terms, he promis'd, that her Majesty would be wanting in no possible Service to him, and that fhe had already inflicted strict Penalties on those of her Subjects, that had conceal'd Both-

To all this he answer'd severally, That he had King's already given the Queen Intimations of all that Aniwer. he knew of the Spaniards Defigns: That he had he knew of the Spaniards Deligns: That he had purfued and manag'd the Rebels to the beft advantage he could: That he had pur fome to Death, and fin'd others, and pur Commiffioners in poffedition of their Eftates, and that he defign'd to Outlaw them every one by an Act of Parliament: That after the Outlawry, he would difpose of their Eftates: That he should choose of his Council Persons of Probity, who were single of their Eftates. Religion and Hawning for the cereby affected to the Religion and Hawning for the probability. cerely affected to the Religion and Happiness of their Country: That he would ratify and con-firm all this by a Writing under his own Hand: That as for the Borderers, and what related to them, he would be fure to observe the strictest measures he could; but that he thought it but reasonable that the Queen should advance Sup-plies for the carrying on of these Matters, and fend her Affiftance as well to the fubduing the Spanifi Faction, as the Rebels, who were now grown every way Formidable. He requir'd in the laft place, That she would be verely profecure Bethwels Abettors; and that she would deliver Butwell him up, where-ever he happend to be found in demanded England, as an Inftance of Treachery and Perbidiounness, which all Princes were obliged to Never-theless some Scotchmen, having possess the Q. that the King was favourably inclin'd to the Catholick Peers in Scotland, the made answer to Robert Melvin, who came to demand Bothwel, and to ask fome Aids against the Rebels, 'That Bothwel should be surrender'd according to the Articles of the former Treaties, or else banished out of England; and that as for Supplies, they were not, according to the purport of the Treaty, to be lent against any but Foreiners. However some Money was sent, and Bothwel, who had Rereturns from Money was fell, and Bubbes, who had into Scott, been declar'd a Traitor by the States of the Realm, being now return'd privately to those of his Party, was conducted by his Friends as privately to the King's Chamber, where, to the King's great furprize, he threw himfelf on his Knees, cast his Sword on the Floor, and implor'd the King's Mercy and Pardon, which he obtain'd at last, at the Instance of those who were with him, and upon certain Conditions to be observ'd by him, viz. That he should immediately depart from the King's Prefence: That he should be ready to answer the Charge of consulting with Wiz reds; and that he should attempt nothing against the King's Ministers. If he could net clear himself as to the point of dealing in Witchcraft, he should depart the Kingdom, and dispose of himself as the King should direct, and there stay during his Royal

> For all this, the Day after he had receiv'd his Pardon, he feiz'd forcibly on fome of the King's Servants in the Court; and his Party was fo prevalent there, that the King was not only oblig'd to reftore both him and his Followers to the possession of their Estates, for his own and the Kingdoms present Safety, but to remove from Court his most faithful Friends, the Chancellor and the Treasurer, with the Lord Humes, and Flerfure.

The King alkerts in y Anguish of his Heart, what Concessions he authority had made, not only against his own Inclinations, but absolutely unworthy of the Royal Character, he declar'd openly in Parliament, 'That he could 'look on himself as no other than a Caprive: That he was evidently Bothwel's Prisoner; and, 'That he could no longer endure that a mutionous Subject should dare to Insult his Ministry, 'after having had the Boldness to Outrage him ' three feveral times within the Walls of his Paclace. Upon this he got the States to declare him forthwith a Prince absolutely Free to exercise his Royal Power, and chuse what Ministers he thought fit. He then recall'd the Chancellor, and the reft of his Friends, to Court; and reveked those Grants which he had so unwillingly made to Bothwel. But so merciful a Prince was he, as to forgive all the Crimes which that ill Man and his Accomplices had acted against him, and made them an Offer of their Estates too, if they would ask 'em in a fuppliant manner, and keep peaceably at home, and not come to Court till they were call'd. As for Bothwel, he was to go beyond Sea within a prefix'd time, and to flay at fome places of the King's Appointment, during his Pleafure: Such mighty Changes did fo [mall a Time produce in the Court; and Bathmel accordingly was banish'd for a little time; Bathrel accordingly washamin a for a little time; or, to speak more properly, withdrew limself to the Borders of Scotland, where he retir'd to brew new and greater Mischieß. But neither did thete Methods put an end to the Troubles in Scaland; for the Clergy were very Angry, and mischably teaz'd the King for not protecuting

the Catholicks with the utmost Severity; informuch, that they join'd themselves in a Body, 1593. and without staying for the Royal Orders, they Ann. 36. fummon'd the Lords and Conimons to a Convention, to prevent any Damage that might accrue to the State of the Church or King-

About this time, there were publish'd in Germany several infamous Libels against the Queen; infinuating, That she had concern'd herself in flirring up the Turk to advance his Arms against Christendom; and there were certain Letters produced, which she had fent to the Great Turk, but with feveral malicious Alterations, and falfe and feandalous Additions. The Queen did so well Q elig: justify her Honour from these slanderous Asper-clears herjustity her Honour from these nanderous Aspections, by a Message sent on purpose to the Emforme Aperor, that the Pamphlets were call'd in, the fpersions Prints forbidden, and the Copies burnt at Prague, in relation and the, for her part, used all her Endeavours to the against the Turk, as the Emperor readily and Gr. Nor indeed had she any thing to do with him, further than to procure her Subjects a free Trade in his Country. which purpose she serrled an Agent at Constantinople, to transact Business there at the Merchant's Cost; just the same as the French, the Polanders, the Republick of Venice, and other States, had

The next thing she did, was the taking upon She makes her an honourable Umpirage, in mediating a Peace be-Peace between the Swede and the Moscovite, and tween the fetrling likewise a good Agreement between the Swede and Turk and Sigismond Bathor, Prince or Vaivod (as and Turk they call him) of Transilvania. For the Turk, it & Vaivod. feems, exceeding the Limits which had been fixed by Compact, and imposing such Burdens, as did not only clash with the tenour of that, but which were really intollerable in themselves: The Vaivod Address'd her Majesty by Stephen Kakafy, That if the had any Regard for him, the would make use of her Interest in the Turkish Court, To put a stop to every fort of Breach or Variation from the ancient Treaties, and to all Encroach-ments upon his Bounds and Possessions. This the Queen undertook, and happily effected, in confideration that 'twas a Christian People and Province which was concern'd, and as fhe always lov'd to Succour and Relieve the Di-

Espinay of St. Luke, who promis'd to join him; Bretaign. in which time a Sickness swept away a great many of the English, and the Queen advanced a weekly Pay of above 3200 Pounds of English

In April, Espinay joins his Forces, and routs Ravender's, taking his Standard at St. Supplice; Guereb was likewife forced to furrender, and the Troops of the Governor of Laval were entirely defeated and put to flight, but not without the loss of a great many Men, and among the rest, Randolph, Purley and Christmas, brave Commanders on the English fide. When D'Aumont still put off his coming into Bretaign, and no Place of Refuge was yet granted to the English, the Queen calls North home; and D'Aumont on the other fide preffes hard for his flay, and makes repeated In-itances that fome fresh Recruits should be sent

Whilst the Queen is affisting France, under the French K. profent Exigence and Difficulty of Affairs, at fo leas to vaft an Expence, and with fuch an infinite Trout the Chool ble to herfelf; there was a Report spread on a Rome, fudden all over England, That the King was either turn'd Catholick already, or elfe refolv'd to do fo. way thither to learn the truth of the matter; 1593; and if he had not yet chang'd his Religion, to dama;6. diffuade him from a Revolt by the beft Arguments he could use, and to put 'em in Writing.
But before his Arrival, the King had made a folemn Profession of the Romish Faith at the Church of St. Denis; the there were some of the religious Orders of that Church, that at the fame time laid Snares for his Life. However he gave Wilks an ingenuous and clear Account of the Reasons inducing him to abjure his Religion, in Terms to this effect. 'As foon (fays be) as I 'was made King of France, I took an Oath to learn the Principles of the Romish Religion within a certain time; and this was the very Condition of my being admitted to the Crown. I have defer'd this Exercise these four Years, and was at last brought to it with some Reluchancy: For when the King, my Predecessor, was dead, I was under a kind of necessity to govern myfelf by the same Council and Miniftry, and to take their Advices in all Matters of Debate; and they made a shift to manage forestal all the Measures I could think of taking against the Conspirators, by such kinds of Artifices and Agreements, as to leave them altogether fruitless and unfuccefsful. the Proreffants, who were the best Friends I had to advise with, they were seldom or never at the Council-Board, being so entirely taken up with Business of their own, that I was stript of those I had most reason to depend on, and was not without Apprehentions that the Romanists would defert me too; so that I was forc'd to take up with their Directions in my own Defence. I do moreover folemnly protest, that as foon as I was call'd to the Government, Eight hundred Persons of Quality and nine Protestant Regiments revolted from me, and I could not preferve them on any Terms whatever; fo that I had none left abour me, but a few of my Domesticks, and fome Gentlemen of my Chamber. The Catholicks. feeing me totally abandon'd by those of my own Perfuation, began to affume a Power, and press me to a Change of Principle; affirming, that true Catholicks could not, with any good Conscience, submit to an Heretick. Nevertheless I suspended the matter from one day to another, till they plainly discover'd my Weak-ness, and found it impossible for me, by the help of a few Friends, to be a match for the united Force of the Pope, the Leaguers, and the King of Spain; till a third Cabal was patch'd up out of the Princes of the Blood-Royal, the Officers of the Crown, the Prelates, and feveral Noblemen, who began to form Measures with the Heads and Governments of Cities and Provinces, about deferting me, as a notorious ' Heretick, and fharing the Kingdom feverally amongst themselves. When I could find no other way in the World to contravene the Projects of these Men, I gave 'em my Word, that I would inform myfelf in the Articles of the Romish Religion. They granted me a Month or two for my better Instruction; and fent fome Persons away to Rome to procure me an Absolution and formal Admission into the Church. Those of the Cabal, to prevent this, made all the dispatch they could toward the chusing another King. A great many Noblemen affifted the Pretentions of the Duke of Guife, on Condition he would fecure to them and their Heirs the feveral Governments they were in poffession of. For these Reasons I refolvd, upon mature Deliberation, to embrace the Romish Religion. The Bishops however refus'd me Admission into the Church, without the Pope's leave; at leaft, till I had put them beyond all fear, that they might accept of my Conversion, without the least Enquiry Ann. 36. or Hesitation. By this means, I gain'd over the third Faction to my Interest: I prevented the Duke of Guise his Election: I fecur'd the Love and Refpect of the French Nation, engag'd the Friendship and Service of the Great Duke of Florence, in Things of the nearest Concernment to me, and at the fame time preferv'd the Reputation of the Reform'd Religion, which must needs have suffer'd greatly, had my Change proceeded upon Difpute or from Inftruction. The substance of this, was in the mean time communicated by Morley to the Queen, who en-deavour'd to colour over the Aims and Inclinations of his Prince with as fair Reprefentations as might be. But the Queen was very much disturb'd at the matter, and under those Resentments took up a Pen and wrote the King the following Lines.

'Tis hardly possible to express the extreme Q. Eliza Grief and Diffatisfaction which has feiz'd me Letter on upon Morley's reprefentation of Things. Or, could you, when you entred on it, entertain a Jealoufy, that the gracious Being, who had fo loug fupported and prefervd you, would fail and abandon you at laft? 'Tis, believe me, a dangerous Experiment, to do evil that good may come of it. But I have you may be yet recover? This he gave the Queen an account of by Mony, a Person of Quality, and one of his Bed-Chamber; and acknowledg'd his Crown and Safety to be chiefly owing to her Majesty, and promis'd withal to fend an Army into Bretaign as foon as the Treaty was concluded, and his & France, Affairs dispatch'd.

In the mean time, a Treaty was made between him and the Queen at Melun, in the Month of August, under their Hands and Seals, and in the Faith and Word of Princes, to carry on a mutual War, Offensive and Desensive, against the King of Spain, as long as he should be at Variance with Either; and to make no Peace on either fide, but by each others Consent, and so as both should be included therein. However, Bretaign was altogether neglected,

France being torn with miserable Convulsions at home, and the English could not possess either Pimpel, or the finall Island of Brebac, with the Parts adjacent, for Quarters of Safety and Refreshment, but upon scurvy and dishonourable Conditions, viz. That they should not be allowed to put Garifons into them, or be quarter'd in any Priests or Gentlemens Houses. Nevertheless the States of Bretaign petition'd the Queen not to call home the English Troops, which had been before determin'd. And they obtain'd their Request: For the Forces were continu'd there, and winter'd after a wretched manner, in a parcel of fmall Villages, where they lay exposd to the inclemency of a bad Air, and their Enemics Ailaults into the bargain. (For all this while Pimpol was too small a Place to afford them all convenient Quarters). The Queen fail'd not in the mean while to acquaint the King, how much he was concern'd, in point of Interest, to pre-ferve and defend the Sea-Coasts; which if once they should come into the Enemy's Possession, would prove an Inlet into his Kingdom, and hardly be recover'd without much Hazard and Difficulty. And she recommended the Proteftant Religion, and its Professors, over and over, to his Care and Protection, by Robert Sidney. But when Sidney mention'd Brest as a Place of Retreat for the English, and a Cautionary-Town for the Money owing to the Queen, according to her own defire and inclination; he could not be prevailed on to agree to it; for the French could not endure that the English should enjoy one Foot of French Ground, tho' it were in their Sea-Ports. Perhaps it was yet too fresh in their Memories, how the English setting out from those Ports in former Times, march'd through their whole Country with Triumph and Victory, and were not easily perfuaded to quit their Possessions. Thus did the French practite that piece of Advice upon the English, which the Queen had directed them to use against the Spaniard.

But to guard her own Subjects the better from the in the Infults of the Spaniard, the order d a Garifon Brauß- to be kept in the Isles of Silley, and a Fort to be built in the Island of St. Marie, which was call'd Stella Marie, from the form of a Star which it represented. At the fame time the leading Men of Ulfter, who were jealous of coming under the Restraint of the English Laws, which would by degrees lessen their usurp'd Authority over the People, by parcelling out their Territories into Counties, (an Example of which they had already feen in Monaghan) began now to foment a Rebellion, which they began now to ionient a reconsor, when they had been a long time brooding: And to begin the Tumult, Hugb O-Donel feiz'd unawares upon A Quaret the Castle of Montros. Chancellor and others, That all that Part The Earl remonstrated before the Deof Ulfter which he had reduc'd to their Allegiance, at the Expence of fo much Sweat and Blood, was more at the Marshal's Service and Command, than his: That the Marshal had fuborned a Pack of pitiful Fellows to accuse him of Treason, had incens'd the Lord-Deputy against him, laid Snares for his Life, and had basely misrepresented him to the Queen. Marshal however found Credit in Court, till the Earl fent Letters into England, and offer'd himfelf to be tried either there or in Ireland. Certain it is however, that he, together with the Grandees of Ulfter, were about this time engagd in a against the private League, to support the Catholick Religion, (for now-a-days Religion is the ordinary Mask for Rebellion) as also to thrust the English Sheriffs and Garifons out of their Territories, to affert every Man their own Rights, and to revenge the Wrongs they had luffer'd from the English. Mic-Guire, a great Lord in Fermanah, was the Person prevailed on to give the next alarm. He was a Man turbulent and quarrelfom, and his Complaint was, That the Lord-Deputy had given himfelf and his Friends a great deal of Interruption and Diffurbance. On this Pretence, he falls a pillaging all the Country about, and enters Connaught with one Gauran a Prieft, at his Heels; who being Ordain'd by his Holiness, Primate of Ireland, commanded the other to trust in God and push his Fortune; and withal, promis'd him a most infallible Victory. But it fell out otherwise; for Mac-Guire was routed by the Valour of Richard Bingham, and the Primate flain, with a great many more. Not long after, Mac-Guire breaks out into open Rebellion, and Tir-Oen pursuing him, like a good Subject, as he would be thought, receiv'd a Wound in the Skirmish, which got him the Reputation of a stout and loyal Man. However, he takes the Honour with some Shiness at first, lest any of the Family of O-Neal should seize upon it; and he promises to throw it up, but begs heartily withal, that he may not be oblig'd by Oath to do it. After this, he seiz'd on the Sons of Shan O-Oneal, one or two of whom had got out of Custody through the Neglect of somebody or other, and resus'd to release them, tho' at the repeated Orders of the Lord-Deputy; for he knew their Power and Interest at home would prove too big and unweildy for his usurp'd Authority. Without taking there-tore any farther notice, he fulls to charging the Lord-Deputy with abundance of ill-will towards him, and complains heartily of the Injuries offer'd him by the Soldiers in Garifon, and from the Marshal's Designs against him; which however he managed with that Art and interess, it is brought them to a fair 111a, or expense them to the time, that he feem'd to have forgot them out of the Kingdom, and declared them to the World

The Queen promis'd herfelf an happy conclufion of that dark Conspiracy which was hatch'd in Spain, and broke out in Ireland, could she but once crush that open and barefac'd Faction which lorded it in Scotland. When therefore the King of Scots asked her Advice upon an Order made by the States of Scotland, for the Security of the Church and Kingdom, fine dispatched Edward Lord Zouch into Scotland, to six the Peers L. The King answer'd, that he would put the TheKing's Laws in execution to the very utmost against answer. those Catholicks; and if they would not be bet-ter advis'd, he would be sure to prosecute them till he had reduced them to Obedience, or driven them out of the Kingdom, provided the Queen, whose Interest was as much concerned as his, would lend her Affiftance. When Zouch began to use more pressing Arguments for the Prosecution of this Party; the King demanded of him, whether he thought he was at the Beck of another? Or, whether the Queen rook upon her to Direct how a Prince, absolute as he was, should govern his Kingdoms? However, he protested he would strenuously affert the established Religion, and preserve inviolably a good Agreement with the Queen. But he could not forbear complaining, that Bothwel, a most pernicious Rebel, had been supported in England, whereas he was ready to deliver up some time fince, the Irish Rebel O-Rork into the Queen's Hands.

Nor was it long after that Bothwel made a new Bothwel Effort of Sedition, and advanced against his tebels and Prince. Who were his Abettors, I leave the Prints a Scotch to tell. Most certain it is, that the prime Manniegles Ministers of that Kingdom did frequently complain to the Queen, that their Prince was Partial on the Papists side. Bothwel having entred Scotland with 400 Horse from the Borders, came as far as Leith without any Resistance: Where he put out a specious Declaration, as Rebels use to do, and cloak'd his Treafon under the following Pretences.

' Forafmuch as the true Religion, the King's Safety and Honour, together with the Laws of the Land, the State ittelf, and the good Correspondence between the two Kingdoms of England and Scotland, are brought into Hazard by some bad Ministers, who have crept into the Government; and not only permit the Romish Priests to carry their Matles from Street to Street, but invite the Spaniards to Suppress the Church and State, and interrupt all good Agreement with the Fnglish: He therefore being with the Nobles, Lords and Burgeffes Allembled, to prevent thele to great Inconveniences, had in the Fear of God, and out of a due Relpect to his Prince, reloiv'd to punish the fe evil Counsellors, till he had either brought them to a fair Trial, or expell'd them

World the Betrayers of their Country; and he refolv'd to lofe no time in the Difpatch of this Affair, forafmuch as the Spaniards were just ready to invade them. Wherefore he intreats the King, perfuades the Nobles, and commands the Commons, to join their Arms in this fo pious, just and necessary a Cause; and requires the Magistrates to be assistant with their Prefence and Authority. He declares those downright Rebels to the King, who shall aid or af-fift his Counsellors, and threatens to proceed against them with the utmost Rigour.

To this purpose, he wrote to the Parliament, which was then held at Dunbar, and also to the The King enough to favour his Defigns; and the very fame marches day that he understood the Royalists advanced from Edinborough, which was scarce three Miles off, he departed from Leith, with his Army, divided into two Bodies: But being far unequal in Number, by reason that sew came in to him, he did what he could to keep out of Danger, by turning out into By-Roads, and had once the Fortune to attack fome of the Royal Party that purfued him, from a fleep Hill, whom he bear back and took fome, but without killing one Man. He then advanced to Dalkeith, without breaking his Ranks; and from thence his Conscience scared him away into his usual Lurkingplaces upon the Borders of the two Kingdoms. The Queen fent out a Proclamation over the Kingdom, forbidding any to harbour or conceal him: And this the King took very well, and having made a chearful Profession of the Queen's Goodness, he call'd a Parliament to consult about the Outlawry of the Popish Earls. The Peers, who were but few of them present, were very loth to pass their Votes against'em, forasmuch as they had no other than prelimptive Evidence of their main Defign, tho nothing could give a greater Sufpicion of their Ains, than the blank Papers fent over by them. Neverthelefs, they were caft by the Votes of the Ministers and Burgeffes, who were far the greater Number; and their Coats of Arms were, after the Scotch manner, torn in Pieces, and cast out of the Windows of the Town-Hall, and their Proscription proclaim'd abroad by a publick Herald. After this, Argyle was employ'd against them, who being routed at Gentlivet, in a warm Engagement, the King himfelf undertook a tedious and difficult March into those Parts, over the rough and craggy Mountains; and having suffered Huntly's Hou-fes at Strathbolgy, Slany, and Newton, to be pull'd The Earls down, he reduced the Earls to those shifts, that fly the Huntly was forc'd to take Sanctuary, first with his Aunt, the Countess of Sutberland, and then in France; and all the reft were forced to quit the Kingdom.

The mutual Friendship and good Agreement between the Queen of England and the King of Scots, back'd by his constant Adherence to the Protestant Religion, which neither Money, Promifes, nor the Tricks and Solicitations of the Romilh Party could bribe him from; as also the thrick Laws enacted against Jesuites and Men of that Complexion, the Execution of Graham of Fentre, the Ringleader of the Spanish Faction, the State's placing the Supreme Authority in Matters Ecclefiaftical, in the King, and the Affociation, form'd against the Papists. All these Considerations did fo damp all their Hopes of refettling the Popish Religion in Scotland and England, that fome of them in England, who had before been vehement Sticklers for his Mother's Title, began now to think of lifting some English Catholick into the Succession.

But not being able to pitch on a proper Per- of fon of their own Perfuasion, they cast their Eyes 1594. on the Earl of Effex, a Gentleman that could ne- Ann. 37. ver endure the Maxim of murdering People for the fake of their Religion; and they borrow'd Effexprohis Title from Thomas of Woodfock, King Edward piled as this Title from Thomas of Woodfock, King Edward spiled as III's Son, of whom he was defecteded. In the to the mean while, the fugitive Peers were for the In-Crown of funns of Society by Companion Common Co fanta of Spain; but fearing the Queen and the England. Nation would put in an Act of Parliament a-gainst it, and impose an Oath on every one, to reject that Title; they thought it enough for the present, by this means to raise a Difference between the King and the Earl of Effex : To this Parsons purpose there was a certain Book printed and opposes dedicated to Effex, under the Sham-name of Dole-his Title. man; which was a notorious Act of Malice in Parsons the Jesuite against Doleman, a Priest of a modest and quiet Temper, (so far as we may truft that Order) for the true Authors of the Book were Parsons, a great Enemy of Doleman's, Cardinal Allen, and Sir Francis Inglefield.

The Purport of this Book, which quite laid afide the Bufiness of Birthright, was: That the ancient Laws of the Land, relating to Hereditary Succef-fron, ought to be alter'd: That new Laws ought to be made about the Choice of a King, and that none but a Roman-Catholick, how near akin foever to the Crown, ought to succeed to it. Most of the Kings of England they traduced as meer Usurpers, and all of the Blood-Royal in England, as illegicimate, and so uncapable of Succession. The King of Scots Title to the Crown, though most certain and indifputable, they attempted to invalidate; and by Sham-Tricks and Devices endeavour'd to They fet fer up the Infanta Isabella, the King of Spain's up the Ir Daughter, purely for being a Roman-Catholick; fanta of spain. a thing I am affiamed and griev'd to mention, because the Priest Lips ought to preserve knowlege, and they should fund boring their lain girt about bir trub. Their first Plea was, because, as this Book pretends, the fetches her Pedigree from Constance, the Daughter of William the Conqueror, King of England, and Wife to Alan Fergant, Earl of Bretagne; whereas notwithstanding Gulielmus Ge-meticensis, who liv'd about that time, declares in his last Book, that she died without Issue, and he is follow'd by the Consent of all the Writers of the Affairs of Bretagne. The next Pretence was, because she had her Descent from Eleanor, the eldest Daughter of King Henry II. who was marry'd to Alphonsius IX. King of Castile; whereas Pope Innocent III. makes it out in Matthew Paris, pag. 381. that Maud, the Wife of Henry Leo, Duke of Saxony, and Mother of the Emperor Otho IV. was his eldest Daughter; and Robert, Abbot of St. Michael's Mount, who christen'd her, affirms, that she was born ann. 1162. A third Argument was, because she was a Descendent from Blanch, the eldest Daughter of the said Eleanor, which was prov'd to be false both by Roderigo, Arch-bishop of Toledo, in his Ninth Book, and Pope Innocent, a Writer of better Credit, and both of them living in the fame Age. Another Reafon alledg'd was, because she came originally from Beatrice, the Daughter of Henry III. King of England; though 'twas forgot, in the mean time, that the had two Brethren Edward I. King of England, and Edward Earl of Lancafter, from whom a great part of the Nobility of England were lineally descended, besides the Royal Family. Again, they afferted the Infanta's Claim by the House of Portugal, and maintain d on the same bottom the Title of the Dukes of Parma and Eraganza, from Philippa, the Daughter of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, whom they make to be his eldest Daughter by his Wife Elanch; whereas Frefard, who was a Courtier at that time, proves fol. 169. of the Second Part of his 1594. Hiftory, that his eldeft Daughter was Elizabeth, Ann. 37. Wife to John Holland, afterwards Duke of Exeter, from whose Loins proceeded a large Race of Nobility, all the Kingdom over. But I have already confuted thefe genealogical Whimfies, and prov'd them to be the Brats of Spleen and Falfhood, the main Furniture of that Libel. Thefe things however they made a Shift to impose on the World, clean contrary to the Character of their Function; and in Contempt of the Council of Trent's Authority, and that of Toledo like-wife, as also of their own Laws, a Review of which was made at Rome the Year before: And all to curry Favour with the King of Spain, to caiol and abuse Mankind, to promote Sedition and Diforder, and to erect Scaffolds, from whence ambitious Men might catch a Fall, tho' in open Defiance to Truth they mafqu'd their Pretences under the venerable Difguise of Religion. Nay they carry'd the matter so far, as to force the English Priefts in the Spanish Seminaries (if we may take their own Words for it) to subscribe to this fpurious Claim of the Infanta's. Yet all this was excused not long after, when K. James was proclaim'd King of England, by the general Votes of the People, by Parsons, in a Letter to a Friend of his, as not having proceeded from any Defign to hinder King James's Title, but from an eager Defire to gain him over to the Romish Religion; and he hoped he should be easily excus'd, fince these Methods had prov'd no real Prejudice of the King's Claim, i. e. in effect, because the Success was not answerable to the Villainy of his Intention.

But whilft these vagabond Projectors were fearching out for a false Heir in Spain, God, who laugh'd at their Inventions, rais'd up to K. Fames a Son in Scotland, who was undoubted Heir to the Crown of England. For on the 19th. of Fe-Henry Pr. bruary, was born Henry Prince of Scotland, the Darling of Britain, to whom Queen Elizabeth flood God-mother, and fent the Earl of Suffex on an honourable Embaffy, to affift at the Ceremony as her Proxy.

Now whilft these bookish Outlaws endeavor'd to write the Infanta of Spain into the Crown of England, there were others of the fame Principle and Perfuasion, that were making the same Use of their Swords, as these did of their Pens; and fent over fome villainous Assassins to murder Queen Elizabeth, whilft certain Spaniards attempted at the same time to take her off by Poison. The Spaniards however suspected the English in a Matter of that Moment, and so made use of Roderigo Lopez, a profess'd Jew, the Queen's dome-flick Phylician, and of Stephen Ferreira Gama and Emanuel Losse, Portugueses, a great Number of whom had in those days crept into England, as Retainers to Don Antonio. These Persons being apprehended, by means of some Letters, which happen'd to be intercepted, were about the end of February try'd at Guild-hall in London, and charged from their own Confessions, with an Inrention to poison the Queen. Lopez, having had the Reputation of a just and faithful Person for a long time, did not fo much as fall under the least Suspicion, (barring the naked Probability that forein Physicians may be guilty of Treason or Murder) till he confess'd himself, 'That he was inveigled by Andrada a Portuguese, to use his best and most private Endeavours for the King of Spain: That he had received from Christophoro Moro, his chief Favourite and Coun-' fellor, a rich Jewel: That he had thereupon given the Spaniards frequent Advertisements of what fell within his Cognizance: That at last

he was prevail'd on to give his Promife to poifon the Queen, upon an Agreement to receive 50000 Ducats for his Pains: That Emanuel Loi-1594 fie was likewise privately sent to him by Fuen- Ann. tez and Ibara, to press Lopez to disparch the matter out of hand. Emanuel own'd, that Count Fuentez and Ibara, after he had given them his Promife to conceal the Defign, flew'd him a Letter written by Andrada, in Lopez's Name, about taking off the Queen; and that he himfelf was fent by Fuentez to transact with Ferreira and Lopez, about dispatching the Queen with all speed, and to promise Lopez himself Money, and his Children Dignity and Preferments. Lopez did not plead much at the Bar, but ex-Lopez claim'd against Ferreira and Emanuel, as most base friest to and notorious Liars: 'That he had no ill Intentions against her Majesty, but abhorr'd from his Heart the Bribes of a Tyrant: That he had presented that Jewel, which the King of Spain fent him, to the Queen herfelf; and that his great Aim in what he did, was to gull the King of Spain, and get a little of his Money. The rest said nothing on their own behalf, but cast the Blame wholly on Lopez. They were all of He and of them condemn'd, and, after three Months, hang'd there are at Tyburn; Lopez affirming to the last, that he condem'd lov'd the Queen. as well as Holly Child Which E lov d the Queen, as well as Jefin Chrift. Which Ex-pression, coming from a Jew, put the Spectators into a pleasant Fit of Laughter. The next day after their Condemnation, Patrick Cullen receiv'd his. He was an Irish Fencing-Master, who had receiv'd vast Promises from the fugitive Malecontents in the Low-Countries, and was fome time fince privately fent over, with Money enough to bear his Charges, on purpose to kill the Queen. He did as good as confess the Crime, and it being likewise prov'd by undeniable Evidence, he was taken and hang'd; tho' he were fick enough already to have fav'd the Hangman a Labour. Edmund Yorke and Richard Williams were likewife apprehended, as Persons who had been employ'd by Ibara, and the other Rebels, to kill the Queen; and other Incendiaries at the fame time, who were employ'd to fire the Navy with Balls prepared for that purpofe. Thus did the English Fugitives, lewd Prietts, and Lay-Villains together, plot and contrive the Ruin of the Queen, by all the Arts they could use; and all from a precious Principle of Bigottry, rooted in their Minds, that Princes excommunicated are not fit to live; and the Spanish Ministers seconded the Defign, and improv'd their Hatred as far as it would go. However the Queen was neither alarm'd nor daunted at the matter, but endeavour'd by a pious and provident Caurion, to prevent or contravene their Measures; often calling to mind that Passage of the Royal Psalmist, Thou art my God, my times are in thy hands. Yet did she not fail to inform Ernest Archduke of Austria, and the King of Spain's Governour of the Netherland Provinces, of these several Plots and Conspiracies hatch'd by Ibara and other Spanish Ministers, and English Renegado's, against her Life. She Queen acdefired him likewise to acquaint the King, his quaint K. Master, therewith; that so he might clear himfelf of any Imputation, by punishing his Officers and Ministers, and delivering those Englishmen into her Hands, who were the principal Agents fome Commotions he had rais'd in Arragon, and 1594 abfoonded at this time in England; the declared Ann. 37 he was fent over without her Knowlege, by the French King, to his Ambassador; and that she Perez not neither would relieve nor protect him. Indeed England, fhe had a perfect Aversion to him, for betraying his Prince's Secrets; and the Lord-Treasurer Burleigh would scarce vouchfafe him the Civility of a Conference. Esfex, 'tis true, entertain'd him at his House, and furnish'd him with considerable Sums; for he confider'd him as the great Oracle of Spain, that knew the Mysteries of the Spanish Court, and was profoundly vers'd in the Foliticks of that Kingdom: yet was his Condition fo fickle and full of Change, (as the Lot of fuch Men generally is) that he us'd to flyle himfelf Fortune's Monster, and us'd those Words for a

Now did the Leaguers begin to abate fomething of the Violence of their Measures, by which they had plagu'd and harafs d France for the frace of eight Years: For when the King, who had weaken'd them by his Arms, and in League diffoly'd. fome measure broke their Alliance, by a politick embracing of the Romish Faith the Year before; came to be folemnly install'd the beginning of this, and had granted them a Truce; some of the Nobility, being overcome with large Promifes, strove who should be foremost in returning to their Allegiance. Others fubmitted on Condition they might still hold the Governments they had got, in the fame manner as Hugh Capet had in times past, to secure himself the Affections of the Nobility, granted them the hereditary Policifion of their respective Governments. Hereupon fome of the Cities that were in Rebellion, fur-render'd themselves; others were taken by Surprize; and even Paris itself invited the King privately into the City, and with great Joy deliverd itself into his Hands; and the Spaniards (who had now quite lost the Hopes of the French Crown, and of a Match between the Infanta and the Duke of Guife; and all through the Duke of Mayne's Emulation and Jealoufy of his Nephew) were pack'd away hag and baggage, and not withour fome rude and infulting Reflexions from the French, who before this time repented heartily of their late Proceedings. But forasmuch as those Spaniards who were invited into Bretagne by the Duke de Mercaur, made an obstinate Resistance, and put strong Garrisons into the Seaports, in order to defend what they had got; Norris, who had been call'd home to give the arms to Queen, in person, an Account of the State of Bretagne, the War in Bretregne, was remanded back thicher, with Orders to feize on the Spanish Fort at Crodon near Breft; and on the aft of September arriv'd with fresh Forces at Pimpol. At the very same time the Marquess D'Aumont and Sir Thomas Baskerville, who commanded the English Forces in Norces's Absence, besieged Morlaix; and upon Norris's Arrival, took it upon Capitulation: And although it had been concluded upon Treaty with the French Ambassadors in England, that it it were furrender'd, it should be deliver'd to the English for a Place of Retreat; yet, to prevent it, D dumont added this Paragraph in the Articles of Surrender: That none but a Roman-Catholick should be received into the Town. After this, the Mar-Quimper- shal and Sir Henry Norris having taken Quimpercorentin, the French and English came on the 1th of November before the Spaniards Fort at Crodon; where Sir Martin Forbifber lay at Anchor with ten Men of War, expecting their Coming. This Place is on two fides guarded by a Moat; and there fund two tall and large Forts facing the Land, between which there runs a Wall 37 foot wide, and within that a thick Bank of Earth,

The Forts are defended on both fides with Rocks, which have feveral Pieces of Cannon mounted on them. The English and French having got se- Ann. 37. veral Mortars out of the Ships, began to break Ground, and carry'd on a Trench on that fide the Fort, which lay to the Land; aud the Spaniards making a Sally to hinder the Works, were repuls'd: But Sir Anthony Wingfield, Serjeant-Ma-jor of the English, a brave old Soldier, was slain with a Cannon-Shot, having made his Will just whith a Camon-bot, having made in win Jin the day before. On the 3d, they made a fmall Breach, with 700 Shot of great Ordnance, and threw down the Counterfearp, which Lifter and his Party immediately feiz'd on. But whilst their Eagerness prompted them on too far upon the Enemy, who made a flout Reliftance, feveral of them were flain, and amongst them Bruder, fackson, and Barker, Officers of try'd Courage and Bravery: Several more were wounded in the Attempt; and others miferably finged with Gun-powder. Some were apt to charge Norris as having lavish'd away the Lives of his Men by exposing them to needless Hazards; and the Q. herself, out of her usual Tenderness, sent him Orders to place the Safety of his Men, upon the Same Level with his own Honour, and not to hazard their Lives too far in a War, which was outely undertaken for the Affistance of others: For the said, That the Blood of Man ought not to be squander'd away at all Adventures: That the boiling Heat of pushing and forward Men had need be curb'd, and not uncouraged and egg d on into Danger and Ru-in: That if he observed these Measures, he would save the Credit of his Conduct, and sit free at the same time from the Charge of Cruelty; and the herfelf should upon bester Grounds commend his Care and Regard for her subjects. But these Instructions came too late. During the Heat of this Siege, D'Aumont and Norris thought good to undermine the Eastern Bulwark, on that fide where the French were poted, and to blow it up; which they did, and made a very confiderable Breach: Then did they attack the Fort on all lides; Latham, Smith, and others, with the English, storm'd the Works on the West-side; and the French made the Assault on the Eastern Part at the same time; and the rest fell to battering the Wall on the South, which lay between both: And this held from which lay between both: And this need from Noon till Four of the Clock At length the Exglif got Possession of the Western Work, and Thomas de Parades, the Spanish Commander, being cut off, they entered the Fort, pull'd down the Spanish Flags, and open'd a Passage for the rest, who put the Garrison (about 400 Men) to the Sword, and razed the Fort to the very Ground: And all this on the very day that Don John d Aquila was coming to their Relief. However this anti was coming to then Keitel. Frowever this victory coff the English much Bloodshed; for ma-ay good Soldiers perish d in the Attempt, and Sir Death of Martin Ferbisher being wounded in the Hip with Sir Martin 4 shall Shot, died as soon as he had brought back Farbisher. the Fleet to Plimeuth. Thus fell a Man of undaunted Courage, and inferior to none of that Age in Experience and Conduct, or the Repu-tation of a brave Commander, as I have already obterv d.

Not long after, there being certain Intelligence that feveral Spanish Officers were come into heland, to raife a Rebellion; Naris was once more recall'd from Bretagne. The Ships which were to bring him ever, upon their Arrival at Morlain, were forbid to enter the Port; fo that they were forced to put to Sea again in extreme cold Weather, and to make for Ruscou, which is a very dangerous Road. This the Queen took to much the worfe at D'Aumont's hands, because he ow'd the taking of Morlaix to the English.

The first place he rought at, was the Isle of St. Ann; where making a stay of three Months to refresh his Men, the least of his Ships by chance took Fire, and was burnt. After which he took a Portugueze Vessel over against the River of Plate, and the Governor of Peru having notice of his coming, prepared a Fleet to intercept him; and after this another of his Ships by stress of Weather return'd to England, for which the Captain was punish'd. Thus being left alone, and at a great distance from Shoar, in the Latitude of 50 Degrees, he happen'd upon a fruitful Coast, abounding with Wood, and having good Harbours. Here he cruiz'd up and down from West to North for the space of 60 Leagues, till being driven back by Passes the contrary Winds, he made the Strait of Magellan just before the end of Fanuary in the same Year, which he found to be nothing but a Sea stock'd with a great many Islands; and herein he fail'd to the 56th Degree of Latitude. After he had spent six Weeks among these Islands, and strove with uncertain and dangerous Currents, he got fafe into the open Sea, and was, according to the Spaniards Account, the fixth Man that had the Honour and Fortune to pass that Strait. As he fail'd afterwards along the Coast of Chili in the South-Sea, he took five laden Merchant-men at Villa-Parissa, one of which he carried off, and the Mafter of the Veffel, and the rest he ranfom'd for 2000 Ducats, whereas they were valu'd at more than 20000. After this he fteer'd his Course for Arica, where Bertrand di Castro, at the Viceroy's Command, attack'd him with eight Ships, tho to his own Damage, his Powder and Shot Afterwards, having receiv'd being all spent. fresh Supplies, he made a second Assault upon him in the Bay of Attacame, but with the same Success: For the Fight was closely and briskly maintain'd on both fides, and feveral Men loft, infomuch that the Spaniards thought it fafer to ply them at a diftance with their great Guns, and endeavour to difable their Ship; which having done for three whole Days together without intermission, Bertrand sent his Glove, and in the King's Name offer'd Hawkins and the rest their Liberty, if they would furrender themselves. This Condition he accepted, and most of the rest, for they were miserably Wounded and unable to hold out any longer. Whereupon Bertrand treated them with a great deal of Civility: But it feems a Doubt was made, whether Faith was to be kept with them or not? Whether Bertrand, whose Commission was immediately from the Viceroy, not from the King himself, could make Hawkins fuch a Promife in the King's Name, when he produced an Authority directly from the Queen? At length the general opinion was, that a Faith plighted in the King's Name, was to be observed, by reason that he was no Pirate, but a fair Enemy: Nor could the Spaniard Act by any other martial Laws in the South-Sea, than what were agreeable to the Pra-Hawkins was fent into Spain, and there retain'd feveral Years in Prison, the Bertrand press'd hard for the performance of the Articles made by him: But the Spaniards were for uting this Rigour to deter others from venturing into the South-Sea. But at length the Conde di Miranda, President of the Council, declar'd positively, that he ought to be discharg'd, for as in military Cases the Promises made in the Royal Name ought to be 1794. facredly observed by all Captains and Officers, dim 27 for otherwise no Man would ever furrender him-

James Lancafter had notwithflanding better Lancy-Success in an Engagement with the Spaniards in another Part of America, being equipped with pedition three Ships and a long Pinnace by fome Merchants of London, whose Piffechs the Spaniards had foized on: For he took three sine of their Ships, and then taking Venour an English n into his Company, beindes fome Holl inders and Prenchmen and Sucwho were cruizing in that Sea, he refo.ved to cefs.

But when he faw the Shoar lined by great numbers of the Enemy, he fingled out the ftouteft of his Men, and clapping them into Boats, made them row away with fuch force as to fplit them in pieces. Nor did the Project fail of an answerable Success; for after they had courage-oully driven the Enemy to the upper Town, they made themselves masters of the lower Town and the Port, and maintain'd it thirty Days together, against all the Force and Policy of the Enemy, refuing all Terms of Accommodation, baffling all their Arrempts of bring the Fleet, and at last filling fifteen Snips with the Cargo of the aforefaid Carack; as also with the Sugars which are made here in great Plenty from the Moifting of a fweet fort of Cane; belides a quantity of Brazil-Wood, which borrows its Name from this Province, and is very much used in dying of Cloaths: With this Lading, and some Gassieror or Cotton, they returned fast none.

Whether it be worth while to mention what follows, I cannot say, unless it may serve as a curb to the Ambition of Youth. Sir Nicolas (lifford and Sir Anthony Shirley, two young English Knights, had behaved themselves so bravely under the King in the French Wars, that he honour'd 'em with the Order of St. Michael, and they took the Oath in the usual Form, returning afterwards with the Enfigns of that Order, and shewing themselves thus equipp'd in the City and Court, the Queen took it ill that they should take an Oath to, and receive an Honour of that nature from any Prince, without her leave and cognizance, as if they had been his Subjects, and not hers; and for this Prefumption they were fent to Prison. She was so tender however, as not to have them Profecuted according to Law, because they were young Gentlemen, and consequently err'd out of Ignorance, as well as out of her great Veneration for the French King, who had conferred on them fuch an honourable Title. But she ordered them notwithstanding to refign the Character and fend back the Enfigns of it, and to endeavour to get their Names itruck out of the Register of that Order; which the French King hearing of, 'tis reported he said in a plea-sant Humour: I could wish the Queen would do me the same Favour, and make some of my aspiring Subjets she happens to see next in England, Knights of the Round Table. For that Order, which had been the subject of so many old Tales and Stories, was long ago worn out of date, as of late the Order of St. Michael in France has funk fo low through the Confusion of the Times, that a French Nobleman said, That the Chain of St. Mi-French Nobleman said, That the Chain of St. Mi-chael was formerly a Character only of the Nobility, but now it was a Collar for all forts of animals. 1594. len, commonly call'd the Cardinal of England,

Ann. 37. whom I have often mention'd already. He was born in the County of Lancafter, of worth Padrad Cardin rents, and allied to fome noble Families. He da Allien had his Education at Oriel-College in Oxford, and was Proctor of the University in Queen Mary's Days, and afterwards a Canon in York-Cathedral. Upon the Change of Religion in England, he left the Kingdom, and profess'd Divinity at Doway, (which was made an University An. 1562.) and was made a Canon of the Church of Cambray. He procured a Seminary to be founded for the English at Downy, and another also at Rhemes, where he was likewise created Canon, besides a third at Rome, and two more in Spain, in order to keep up the Profession of Popery in England, for which he had so intemperate a Zeal, as to lay afide both his Duty to his Prince, and his Love to his Country, and stir'd up both the King of Spain and the Pope to attempt the Conquest of England. Upon which account he engaged deep in hazardous Projects and Defigns, after Pope Sixtus V. had dignified him with the Character of Cardinal of St. Martin in the Mounts, and the King of Spain had given him an Abby in the Kingdom of Nuples, and nominated him to the Archbishoprick of Mechlin. For when the Invincible Armada was preparing against England, he brought a Bill of Excommunication against the Queen into the Low-Countries, and order d it to be printed in English; and he wrote likewife a kind of Memorial to his Countrymen, perluading them to adhere to the Pope and the King of Spain. But he return'd to Rome under a great Disappointment; and being at length tired out with the Heats and Diffentions of the Fnglish Fugitives, both Scholars and Gentlemen, he died in the 63d Year of his Age, and was buried in the English Church of the Hely Trinity. He wrote a Treatife of the Eucharitt in Latin, and some Apologies in English; one for the Seminaries, another for the English Catholicks, and a third for Sir William Stanley, who betrayed Deventer to the Spaniards. He wrote, belides thele, the a-forefaid Memorial, and a Book of Purgatory. which are all that I have feen.

rick of Durafia to that See. About the beginning of this Year died Ferdi nand Stanly Earl of Derby, whom I mention'd the laft Year, in the ve y dower of his Youth, and fome suspected he was persond, because he was troubled with strange Pains and Vomitings of a da.kish co'our, not unlike rusty Iron. There was found in his Chamber an Image of Wax, with Ilais thrust through the Belly of it, of the same colour with his own, which better Judges thought to be placed there on purpote to avoid the hilpicion of his being poison'd. The Matter which he vomited left fuch a flain upon the filver Basons, that no Art or Care could posfibly recover them to their usual Brightness; and his Corps, tho' roll'd in Lead and laid in a Searcloth, was fo notion and offentive, that no Man could endure to come near the Place where he was buried for fome confidenable time after. The Gendeman of his Horfe was shrewdly suspected; for as foon as the Earl took his Bed, he rid away with his belt Horse. His Brother William enjoy'd after him the Honour and Title of Earl of Derby, who had afterwa do a Trial with the fensible that the English Fugitives and the Spaniards had an eye upon that Isle, committed the 1594. Government of it to Sir Thomas Gerard Kt. for his Ann. 37. approv'd Loyalty, and by reason of his near Neighbourhood thereto, till the Claim should be derermin'd.

Mean while, the Queen's Counfellors, who very well underftood the Laws, and were nice Judges of fuch Cafes, maintain'd from the Quirks and Subtilities of their Faculty, that the Right of that Island belong'd to the Queen, and that the Stanleys and Earls of Derby had held it by a wrong Claim for 200 Years last past. For (to The Title go a little higher) Henry IV. as foon as he was in of the Possession of the Crown of England, Attainted Earls of William Scrope, Lord of the Isle of Man, and gave Derby to it to Henry Piercy, Earl of Northumberland. A Month after, there was an Agreement made between the King and Stanley, That those former Patents which run for Life, and fome o-thers granted by the King, should be deliver'd up and cancell'd, and a fresh Grant of the Island flould be made to Stanley, in this Form: We, in regard the faid John Stanley hath deliver'd up to us the faid Letters-Patents to be cancell'd in our Court of Chancery, have therefore granted unto the aforefaid John Stanley the Island aforefaid, &c. Upon these Words, and notice taken of the Circumstance of Time, that those former Patents were granted for Life, before fuch time as the Earl of Northumberland was Attainted, the Lawyers were of the opinion, that the King could not legally make any such Grant for Life, because he was not yet entired to the Forfeiture; and confequently, that the latter Letters-Patents being grounded on the delivery of the former, were invalid; but that the King had been imposed on by a false Pretence, and therefore the Grant was null and inlighticant. However the Queen gave up the Claim, and then an Agreement was made between the Uncle and Nieces. Gregory Feines, whom I mention as being the The death

Sir William Fitz-Williams, the Lord-Deputy of Ireland, was call'd home, and in August his Commission was given to Sir William Russel, the youngeft Son of Francis Earl of Bedford; after that Hin-Deputy of ry Duke and Edward Herbert, who were fent with Ireland. Men and Provisions to relieve the Garison of Ineskilling, belieg'd by Mac-Guire, had been a little before put to flight, and miferably beaten by the Rebels. As foon as he had receiv'd his Patent, Tir-Oen, having got Letters of Protection, contrary to all Expectation, applied himfelf to him, and on his Knees begg'd Pardon in Writing for not obeying the Summons of the former Lord-Deputy, which he endeavour'd to excuse, by alledging that his Enemies had laid Snares for his He complain'd that he had, through their false Suggestions, lost the Queen's Favour, which he acknowledg'd he had enjoy'd a very liberal share of, and that as he was a Creature of her own raining, fo she might as easily blatt his Honours, and cast him out of the Kingdom. He defired he would please to consider the Equity of his Cafe, and made large Promifes of performing whatever should be enjoyn'd him as to raising the Siege of Iniskilling, and driving out the Island Scots. He likewise protested before God and the World, that altho' in compliance with a Dictate of Nature he endeavoured to fave his own Life from the malicious pursuits of his Adversaries, yet he never would take up Arms against the Queen. And in the last place, he humbly in-treated the Lord-Deputy, and the Council of the Kingdom to interceed with the Queen for his re-admillion into her Favour. There was prefent at the fame time Sir Henry Bagnal, Marshal of the Irish Army, who exhibiimpeach'd ted these Articles against him; viz 'That he by Bagnal. 6 had privately fent Mac-Guire and the Primate G.tur.in (mention'd before) into Connaught: That he had held a Co-respondence with Mic Guire, O. Donel, and other Conspirators: That he had affisted 'em by his Brother Cormac Muc-Baron, affifted and his base Son on, in destroying Monaghan, and besieging Ineskilling; and had menaced the Commanders of Kilulto and Killmarny out of f their Fidelity and Allegiance. All their things he flatly denied; and as if he had been as clear as Innocence itself, he declar'd To a he would forfeit the Ben fit of his Protection, could this Charge be provid against bim.

Hereupon there pass'd a close Debate in Council, whether he should be taken in Cultody, till he'h d answer'd to this Impeachment? the Lord-Deputy's Opinion, that he should : But the rest, out of an idle Apprehension they should thereby violate the benefit of his Protection, or else out of private Respect to his Person, thought that he ought to be difmiss'd, and the Business deferr'd till another Opportunity: Whose Judgment, as being the major Part, and more experienced in the Affairs of Ireland, the Deputy complied with, the' with fome reluctancy He was therefore difinifed, without fo much as an Hear-ing given to the Evidence and Witnesses who were there present.

The Queen was much concern'd at this, because all the World were acquainted with the Villany of his Deligns; and the Queen had fignified her Royal Pleafure to have him confind till he could clear himfelf of the Crimes laid to his Charge.

He gave notwirhstanding great Encouragement to the Council of England and Ireland to hope the best of him, and was ready to engage of for any thing almost that they propounded to him, viz. That he would fecure his Brother Cormec, and his Party, from assisting the Rebels, or M.c. Guire: That he would endeavour to thrust the Island-Scots out of Ireland: That he would perfuade O-Donel to do the fame : That in the Lord-Deputy's absence, he would defend the Frontiers with his own Troop of Herse: That 'he would perform the Article for supplying Provisions: That he would build a Prison at Dunganon: That he would, upon certain terms, ' allow of a Sheritf and Justices in the County of Tir-Oen: And, That he would be Security that 'Turlough Mac-Henry should not let the Island-Scots ' into Ireland.

The Lo.d-Deputy marching foon after to raife L Deputy the Siege of Inukilling, put the Rebels to Flight, reliev'd the Town, and fortified the Garifon: after which he biskly purfued Teagh Mac-Hugh, who was in Arms in Leimfer; ander pretence of going one day on Hunting, he had very like to have taken him; for he forced him from his own House at Balleneure into the steep Valleys which they call Glennes, where he placed a Garifon, and purfued him to narrowly by fome Parties he fent in quest of him through the by-ways and unfrequented Roads, that scarce a Day passed, but they brought in, according to the custom of the Country, some of the Rebels Heads. They likewife apprehended Rhife Teagh's Wife, a Woman of a masculine Spirit, and a Courage above her Sex, who was fentenced to be Burnt in Terrorem, but had her Life spared by the Queen's Clemency.

Sir Henry Bagnal was then fent by the Lord-Deputy into another part of Ireland, where he relieved the Cattle of Monaghan under a desperate Siege laid thereto by M. c Guire and Mac-Mahon, and put a fresh Garison therein. But the Lord-Deputy, having difmiss d Tir-Oen, could not by any means perfuade him to return to him again, tho' he made him feveral courteous Invitations. At the first he made Excuses, as if he was afraid of the Marshal And not long after he began to talk high of a Truce or Accommodation, which is a fubject Princes are not pleased to have their Subjects infult on; infomuch, that every one wonder'd to observe so odd a change in the Man, when but a little before he had made his Submillions in fo mean and abject a man-

The Eight and Thirtieth Year of her Reign.

The Queen and the whole Kingdom did at K.of Scots this time Express a publick Satisfaction for the makes Friendship of the King of Scots, and the great Preporti-Care he profess to keep up a good Agreement (managamit with England: For he fent out a Proclamation ...) with England: For he fent out a Proclamation and for levying Fo ces to ferve against the Sp niards, who were reported to have a vait Armada ready to ruin all Britain. And that he might fucceed the better in his Preparations against them, he admonishes all his Subjects in the first place, to lay atide all those Heats and Quarrels, which are more frequent among the Natives of Scotland than any other Kingdom. He laid alfo a strict Charge upon the Borderers, who had been corrupted fome of them, with Spanish Gold, to infelt and plunder the English Territories, on purpose to create a Breach between England and Scotland, not only to forbear committing any A is of Hoftility upon England, but likewife to be very fedulous in preferving that good Co respondence which had been confirm'd on both sides by the nearners of Relation between the two Princes, as well as parity of Religion and fimilitude of Cufforms

The Queen also put forth a Proclamation much to the same purpose: And whereas some Injuries had pass'd on both sides, it was agreed, That Commissioners should be assign'd to hear and examine them, for the better Establishment of Peace and Justice between both Nations. In less than two Months from the beginning of this Year, were Edmund York, Nephew to that York who betray'd the Fort of Zusphen to the Spaniards, and Richard Williams, who, as I faid before, were both of them apprehended the last Year, executed at Tyburn for High-Treason. Tork confess, That Holt the Jesuit, Hugh Owen, Jacomo de Francisco, and others, had offer d him an Affignment of 40000 Ducats, subscribd by Ibara the Spaniard, if he would either murder the Queen himself, or assist the said Richard Williams in the Fact: That this Assignment was lodg'd in Holt's hands for his use; and that Holt had kis'd the confecrated Host, and sworn, that the Mo-ney should be paid as soon as the Murder was committed; and that he likewife bound York and Williams by their Oaths and the Sacrament to dispatch the Business. To say truth, there was nothing more notorious than the lewd and villainous Attempts of the Fugitives about this time: For fome were employ'd in hiring Affaf-tins to murder the Queen, and others, for the take of Money, were ready to ferve as Actors in the infamous Parricide, tho' they no fooner took the Pay, but reveal'd the Secret: Others again were fo untrue to their own Villany, as to

She then laid before him, the necessity of calling home her Men out of Bretaign, because there were several Commotions in Ireland: Besides that, they were by Contract to remain there no longer than till the Spaniards were removed from the Fort of Breft. No fooner had France and Spain blown the Erumper to an open Hostility, but a miserable War broke out in the Countries of Luxemburgh, and Picardy, Chaftellet and Dourlans, were taken by the Spaniards, and Cambray affaulted. Here- 'him. She promifed to give him for the future

However, they fell to making a Levy without delay; and upon occasion, they were to be She affilts disposed of to Calais, Boulogn, Diep, and other him, Sea-Ports. And this Sir Roger Williams represented forthwith to the King and the respective Governors of those Towns. The King's Council in Bretaign made at the same time pressing In-stances for Aids to be sent thither: But because they mention'd no certain Number, nor on what Delign they were to ferve, nor took care of any Place of Retreat, the Queen could give them no direct Answer.

There were about this time spread abroad most probable Reports from all Parts of Europe, that the Spaniards were ready to fail for England with a more formidable and better provided Fleet than the former. Whereupon great care was taken to raife the stoutest Fellows in all the Maritime Counties of England, and strict Watch was kept upon all the Sea-Coasts. In the mean time two Fleets were got ready, one to encounter And prethem in the British-Sea, and the other bound for parez America, under the Conduct of Drake and Hanv- against a kins.

2dSpaniffs Invation.

All Men began now to expect and prepare for War, and the general Concern was, that so many brave Men, capable of doing their Country the best Service, and so much good Money too, were thrown away upon France; for certain it is, that the Expedition to Brest stood the Nation in 47248 Crowns de Soleil, and above 2000640 more were spent upon the Forces under the Earl of Effex, besides the Money that was lent; and 'twas a new subject of Grief to the very Women, to reflect that their Sons and Relations were unhappily taken off, and not referv'd for this glorious Occasion.

Mean while Lomeney arrives here from France; Her answ. and tho' he did difguife the taking of Cambray, to the Fr. yet he pressd hard that some Auxiliaries might Kng's de madte. be fent into Picardy, and then Commissioners ap mands. pointed to treat about Measures for maintaining the War. Which appearing fomewhat odd to the Queen and Council, he grew very uneafy, and charg'd the loss of Cambray upon the Queen, saying, That she seemed to triumph in the King's ill Success, and thereby would oblige him to make a Peace with Spain. She return'd him an immediate Anfwer, which she likewise did soon after by Let. ters, and by Sir Thomas Edmonds, who then was her Ambaffador at the French Court, which Anfwer was to this effect.

' That the was much concern'd for the lofs of Cambray, but more that Lomeney should lay the loss of it at her door, because Supplies were not fent from England. She made it appear it was impossible to dispatch them at so short a warning. Nor should she have been thought a prudent Woman to expose them to an Army flush'd with Victory, after having twice routed the French; but on the contrary, to have had very little Regard to the Welfare and Safety of That she was so far from taking her Subjects: any Pleasure in the King's Misfortune, and thereby obliging him to conclude a Peace with the common Enemy: That neither the King himfelf, nor any-body elfe, had the leaft imaginable reason to suspect any such thing, if he would but take the leifure to reflect how confrant and ready she had been in her Services to all the Aid and Affiftance she could, forasmuch as they were imbark'd in one and the same Interest, and their Affairs equally imbarrass'd. Nor could she be fairly blam'd for any Omissions or Neglects in respect of the Spaniard, since from the very time that they began to difcover their Spleen against England, she had never ceas'd to we ken and divert his Forces both by Sea and Land, and all for this reason barely, That she had a mind to rescue her Neighbours from the Tyranny of a Spanish Yoke. And she was at this very Jun&ure wholly employ'd in providing a Fleet and Army to oppose him; she was therefore very much to be excused, if she did not fend the French King Supplies out of hand, fince thereby fhe must have exposed either England or Ireland to her Enemies, who lay ready to invade one or t'other, for want of Forces at home to defend them. And whereas it was privately whifper'd by fome Subjects of his, That she either suspected the King's Honour and Conttancy, or elfe envied his good Success; she protested, that such Thoughts were too unworthy of a Prince, to find the least Room in her Breast, for that she really believ'd fhe had a fecure Interest in his Friendfhip, and wish'd him from her Heart all the Happiness and good Fortune he could de-

Besides this, she order'd Edmonds to put the King in mind of these Particulars. That 'tis a fovereign Piece of Prudence in Princes to bear and forbear, in little and private Instances, (tho' perhaps against the grain) the better to keep their Subjects in Temper, and their Government in Peace; and that because the love of the People is the furest safe-guard of the Prince. Now this having been the Method of the King of France himself, 'twas necessary she should observe the same Measures, and omit nothing for the Security of her Subjects, who were so dear to her, and for whose chearful Obedience, Courage and Fidelity, fhe own'd herfelf greatly indebted to the divine Goodness. All this France itself was able to teffify, for that many of them had bravely ventur'd their Lives there, and a great many more were ready to do fo, were they not detaind for some time at least by the Crys and Tears of their Wives, Children and Relations, especially at a time when the common Enemy threaten'd the Subversion both of England and Ireland. Would the King but impartially confider thefe things, the question'd not but he would pass a fair Construction upon her Answers, and give no ear to those who were serving the common Enemy by diffolving that Friendship which had hitherto been preferv'd between his Majesty and herself, and endeavouring the Ruin of them both by that means. That some Men made it their business to do ill Offices on both fides, and so to rob Princes of the Lives of their bravest Subjects, and the Affections of the rest; yet could fhe never believe that those kind of Practifes would ever induce him to make a Peace with Spain, without the concurrence of England, (as Lomeney had often hinted) on pretence that he had not receiv'd more Supplies from thence. Nay, fhe profess'd herfelf very well affur d, that to confiderable a Prince as he, must needs have a greater Regard for his Reputation, and set an higher Value upon his Vows and Promifes, than ever to forger the good Services of the Fnglish, or once admit a Thought into his Bofom of that unworthy and dishonourable nature, as to deferve the worst Cenfures, should it be harbour'd in the Breast forbid) be brought to fuch a Compliance thro the Importunity of the Popish Leaguers, yet 1597. she depended still on a good Providence to pre-Ann.38 ferve England: That as foon as the could thoroughly learn the Defign of the Spaniard in thole fresh Preparations, the was ready to lend him the best Assistance she could, to prevent the Enemies reaping that Advantage for the future which they had already made of his Necessity. This is what Edwards, and after him Sir Henry Unton, the Queen's Ambaffador, communicated to his Majesty more at large upon his return to France.

But, to fay the truth, the Troubles in France French K. increasing every Day more and more, there were perfuaded a great many that prefs d the King to enter on to mike a Peace with Spain, and endeavour'd to perfuade Spain him, that the Queen did nothing but amuse him with a few fine Words. Others, on the contrary diffuaded him from it, particularly Kath. of Navarre the D. of Bouillon, and Sir Henry Unton, the English Ambaffador. And they intimated withal, that there were little or no Hopes of their having Peace with Spain, which had so long withheld from him the Kingdom of Navarre which belong d to his Predecessors, and had likewise embroild France, in hopes one Day to govern it; when that Prince had moreover claim'd Little-Bretaign, as his Daughter's Hereditary-Right, and afferted her Sham-Title to England in printed Pamphlets, tho' in opposition to the known and unquestion d Right of the King of Scots, infomuch that he feem'd to be, at least in Conceit and Imagination, the Grand Monarch of all Europe. The King taking but little notice of these Remonstrances, the Queen could not forbear mistrusting all his Pleas of Honour and good Faith, especially when she was certainly inform'd from the College of Cardinals, that he receiv'd the Benefit and Bleffing of the Romish Communion, on no other Terms, than these which follow, viz. 'That he should abjure all Heresies, and Terms of profess the Catholick Faith after the same man- the Fr. of the Maids of Honour, (whom he marry'd afterwards) and being on that account out of Fayour, and confined for feveral Months, was at length enlarged, but banish'd the Court; whereupon he refolv'd to follow the Biass of his Fancy, which led him to make new Discoveries both of Things and Places, and so undertook a Voyage to Guiana; a Country which the Spaniards us'd to fay, was very full of Gold. This Voyage, he hoped, would turn to the Honour and Advantage of his Country, as being a probable Road to vast Treasures, and affording a likelier means of annoying the Spaniard, in the inner Countries of America; where he conceiv'd they lay abundantly more exposed, than on the Sea-Coasts; for these Towns are never wealthy, but when the Golden-Tide flows in there, to be

drain'd out again into Spain. On the 6th of February therefore he fail'd from Plymouth, and on the 22d of March arrived at the Isle of Trinidado, eight degrees on this side the Line; where he took the small City of S. Joseph's without much Trouble; together with the Governor Antonio Beree; but not fo much as one piece of Silver in the Place. Having ask'd Beree feveral Queftions, who had, it feems, made a very ftrick Search for Gold-Mines, in Guiana, he left his Ship at Trinidado, and entring the River Orenaque, which is extremely large, and fed by feveral Streams, with a few Pinnaces, and 100 Men, he look'd out for Guiana for 400 Miles together; and ventur'd among feveral Shallows and Windings and parting Streams, expoled all the while to the Heat of the Sun just over his Head, and incommoded by violent Storms of Rain, and a great many Difficulties besides: till the Air blowing something cooler in April, forc'd the Rains down every where in fuch vast Quantities, that he was forc'd to return for his own Security. He that would know more of this Expedition, may confult an ingenious Book of his relating to it; wherein he gives a most accurate Description of the Countries, as if he had been born and bred there; and concludes that Guiana must needs be a wealthy Country; not only from the beautiful Mareafits found there, but from the Writings of the Spaniards, and upon the Credit and Report of the Barbarians, of whom yet he could but have little Knowledge; but indeed chiefly from the fanguine Complexion of his own Hopes and Delires. He likewife relates fome things which appear fabulous enough, viz. of the Amazons, and a certain Nation of People, whose Shoulders are so high, that their Face is placed in their Breaft: A Secret which Poets and Travellers had never before difcover'd. In his way homeward he fet Fire on Cumana, because the Inhabitants would not ranfom it at his Price, and he did the same by feveral small Cottages at S. Mary's and Rio de la Hach. Nor was he discourag'd from one or two Effays more of this kind, shough at a vail Expence to himfelf, and altho the Spaniards had planted a Colony at Trinidado to oppose his Attempts.

At the fame time, Amias Preston, and Sommers pillaged the Island of Porto-Santo near Mudera, of Cobe near Margarita, the small Town of Coros, and S. Jago de Leon, a small City; but Cumana they ransom'd. A few Months before, the three Ships belonging to the Earl of Gumberland did attack a large Carack, call'd the five Wounds of Christ; fhe by Chance took Fire in the Engagement, and was burnt with all her Cargo; the Ann. 38. Fire flaming out in that violent degree, that the English had much ado to escape, and the Portu- inset the guefes were forc'd to cast themselves into the Sea. Western These Exploits, and some more, were executed Ocean. at the Charge of private Men.

But the Queen being inform'd that a vast Treasure was brought to Porto Rico in the Isle of Boriquena, or S. John's, for the Use of the King of Spain; in order to cut off his main Support, by intercepting the same, and keep his Men employ'd in those Parts; she sent thither Sir Francis Drake and Sir John Hawkins, who were to share the Command at Sea, and with them Sir Thomas Baskerville, as General of the Land-Forces, with 6 of the Queen's Ships, and 20 other Men of They fail'd from Plymouth on the last of August, and arrived at Grand Canary the 27th of the next Month. Drake and Backerville had a great Inclination to attempt taking this Island, not only to do themselves Credit, but their Country Service in gaining a Convenience for victualling the Fleet. Hawkins was of another Mind as prefuming the Fleet very well provided; and that they ought to lose no time, till they had dispatch'd the main Design. But being overborn at last by Baskerville's Importunity, who undertook to gain it in 4 days; and likewife by the Seamens Complaints for Want of Provision; he gave his Confent. But Baskerville, upon his Attempt to land, foon found the Difficulty, and gave over the Attempt: for the Townsmen had Canary in put themselves on their Guard, and the Seamen vain at-made a stout Opposition from the Shoar. When tempted, therefore they had got from thence, after about a Months Sail, they arriv'd at the Isle of S. Domingo; and much about the same time; Spanish Ships, which were fent out to observe the English, and convoy the Plate from Porto Rico, feiz'd an English Pinnace which had lost the Fleet; and having by Tortures forced the Master and Mariners to confess that the English had a Design upon Porto Rico; they made thither with all the fail they could, to give Intelligence that the English were coming. The Gold and Silver they immediately bury d, and dispatch'd small Vessels to all the Islands and Sea-coasts, to give the Spaniards timely Notice; who took the Alarm, and arm'd themselves. The English staying to build some Pinnaces in the Isle of Dominica, lost time, and came too late to Porto Rico: Where as soon as they came to anchor, the Enemy ply'd them with their great Guns from the Ports, and Sir Nicolas Clifford Knight, and Brute Brown, were mortally wounded, whilst they were at supper, with a Shot which dispatch'd them in a day or two. The Iame day Hawkim died of Grief, occasion'd by some Contest which had arose between him and the other Commanders; and his Death was much lamented by the Seamen. The Spaniards funk a great Ship, to block up the Mouth of the Haven, and had placed large Mafts on both fides from thence to the very Forts that guard the Avenues: Within were the 5 Spanish Ships, prepared to oppose the English, all ballatted with Sand, and well stock'd with Musketeers, and great Guns and Ammunition. Nevertheless Baskerville mann'd out his Boats and Pinnaces, and made an Attempt to enter the Town, firing one or two of the Spanish Ships: But being repuls'd with the Loss of a great many Men, taken off by a Shower of small Shot, he had no Stomach at all to renew the Affault. He fail'd therefore from thence to the Continent, and burnt Rio de la Hach, a fmall Town, which the

Thence March to they march d with 750 Men well arm'd, towards wards Pa- Panama: But after a day or two's very troublesom March through very narrow and difficult Passages, they found themselves assaulted from the Woods with Showers of fmall Shot; and obferving likewife that there was a Fort to oppose at the Entrance of that Isthmus; and hearing that there were two more within to obstruct their Passage, they were forc'd to return to their Ships wretchedly haras'd and half-starv'd, the Men being much weaken'd and dispirited: And now 'twas refolv'd to make towards the lile of Escudo, and from thence to Porto Bello. Mean while Sir Francis Drake was, on the 28th of January, carry'd off by the Bloody-flux, the Vexation of his Disappointment affisting his Distemper. He had no other Funeral, than what is common at Sea, viz. to be cast overboard with a Volley of Shot; and he happen'd to find his Grave, very near the Place from whence he had borrow'd so large a Reputation, by his fortunate Successes. He that would know more of this Gentleman's History, may have Recourse to what is faid of him under the Year 1580. which had waited for their Coming: However, which had waited for their Coming: However, Baskerville and Troughton, the one in the Vice-Admiral, and the other in the Admiral, gave the Spaniards such a warm Entertainment, upon the first Brush; that, if we may take their Words, the Fleet got clear of them with less Damage from the Enemy, than was receiv'd on their side by the English. At last they return'd to England, after they had been out eight Months, with very little Booty; having fired only fome fmall Towns, and a good Number of Ships: For tis to be confidered, that the Spaniards in America, who had formerly lived very secure, by reason of the Distance of the Place, having lately sufficient that the state of the Place, having lately sufficient that the state of the Place, having lately sufficient that the state of the Place, having lately sufficient that the state of the Place, having lately sufficient that the state of the Place is the state of the Place is the state of the sta fer'd great Damages both from the French and English, who ventur'd into those Parts, had by this time strengthen'd themselves with good Forts;

and were very well provided to make their Defence upon any Affault. Whilft the English were thus employ'd in the Western Parts, a former Misunderstanding between the Queen and the States-General, which as it ow'd its Rife to a very inconfiderable Occasion, so it by degrees grew enslamed, and soon after by the same degrees vanish'd; as will appear by what follows. The Lord-Treasurer Burleigh had laid before the Queen, the vast Sums of Money, which had been expended upon the Country-War, fince the Year 1785, the great Quantity of Gold and Silver, which had been exported to Holland, and there coin'd, to the great Advantage of the States, but never a Peny of it brought back into England. How many brave Englishmen had been lost upon their account. What a mighty Expence she must needs be at, before the could quell the Commotions in Ireland and divert the Attempts of the Spaniards. He remonstrated likewise, how the States ow'd their Security to her Majesty's Affistance, and had by the fame means annoy'd their Enemies, establish'd their Government, which before stood on a tottering Foundation; and besides, the Increase of their Wealth by Trade, and their Power by the Accession of new Colonies, had made them-felves capable of succouring their Neighbours.

The Queen, being tired out with the Inconveniences of a tedious War, the Expence effecial- 1595, ly, fignify'd all these things to the States, by Ann. 38. her Residentiary Sir Thomas Bodley; particularly, Mony de-that England was doubly impoverish'd, both as to manded of Men and Money, by maintaining fo long a War the Dutes, against Spain; which she had made her Enemy, meerly for having lent them her Affiltance, in the Extremity of their Affairs. She demanded therefore, 'That they would ease her of the Ex- Queen's 'pence of maintaining her Recruits: That they Propolals. would pay back fome part of the Charge, and appoint Commissioners to find out Ways and Means for reimbursing the entire Sum, which was rais'd on their account, and payable to Sir 'Horatio Pellarvicini, to whom she had pay'd a large Interest for a long while. The States own'd, with many Thanks, the Queen's great ownd, with many many, the Queen's great and fignal Favours; and acknowledg'd them-felves obliged to her Majefty, next under God, for all their good Successes: But they alledg'd, That they had laid out fuch large Sums in the States Are year 1588, against the Spanish Armada; so much swer, the year following in the Portugal Expedition; and after that, so much more in the Voyage to Brest; and had suffer d of late so very much by an extraordinary Flood; that they were not at prefent furnish'd with Money enough to difcharge their Debts, unless by laying too heavy Burdens on the Necks of their People, and fo murdering their Caufe all at once: That they were fo far from finding their Charges leffen'd by their new Acquifitions, that they were rather augmented, through the Necellity of for-tifying those Places, and flocking them with fresh Garrisons. Then for their Trade, it was at that time, and had been exposed to infinite Losses, by Seizures of Goods in Spain, and through the Piracies of the English and Dunkirkers. They could not deny but they had fupply'd the French King; but 'twas not from the great Banks they were Mafters of, or that they affected to be thought richer than they were; nor out of any Delign to crave his Protection, in Neglect of England: But purely to divert the Enemy, and keep that King from making a Peace with Spain; to which either his own Wants, or the civil Diffentions of his Subjects, or the corrupt Counfels of his Minifters, might otherwise oblige him. However, Part of the Money they engaged to reimburfe.

But the Queen demanded more than was offer'd; whereas they strongly infifted, that by the Agreement in the year 1585, the Money was not to be repay'd, till the War was at an end; and that the Queen ought not to go back from her Contract, if she had any Regard for her Honour. She however was of another Opinion, founded upon these Maxims of Law and Policy. That all Compacts between Prince and Prince Q replies.

are to be interpreted by the Measures of Truth and Sincerity; and that no Prince is bound by any Agreement, which afterwards appears to have a real Tendency to the common Prejudice and Detriment: That 'tis no Breach of Peace, for a Prince to recede from his Contract, upon the Intervention of some new and unforeseen

Accident, which alters the Cafe, and puts a new Face on the State of things; and which had accordingly been provided for, could the Exigence have been foreseen or apprehended: That Leagues and Agreements between Prin-

Upon this therefore follow'd many, and very curious Disputes; as likewise whether the States were obliged to pay any thing to the Queen's Successors, should it please God to take her away; fince, according to the Letter of the Contract, the one was not bound to aid, nor the other to pay. Again, Whether the Debt demanded in Pallavicini's Name, were not rather chargeable on those of Brabant, Flanders, and Artois; forafmuch as the Contract was fign'd during their Confederacy, and before the prefent one, in which the united Provinces were engag'd. However Bodley brought the States at last to those Terms, that rather than incur the Disfavour of fo great a Princess, they made the Their new following Propolitions: That they would immedi-Proposals ately free the Queen from the entire Expence relating to the Maintenance of the English Auxiliaries: (computed at 20000 l. per ann.) That they would pay 20000 l. These Proposals they humbly defeated to the standard of fir'd her Majetty's Acceptance of, for the Rea-fons before alledg'd. They reprefented more-over the unflable Condition of their Government at this Juncture, the People being under a general Confternation at the great Power of the Enemy, who was able to maintain fo many Armies on foot; the Provinces not being well agreed about the Method of raifing their feveral Contributions; and the principal Lords at Variance among themselves: Besides that, great Numbers withdrew from the Resorm'd Religion, and the Emperor us'd all possible Methods by his Ambaffadors, to incline the People to accept of a Peace: So that should this large Debt of Ten Years flanding be at that time punctually demanded; it was to be fear'd, the Confequence would prove very fatal to the United Provin-

The Queen could not be induced to admit their Excuses upon the Plea of Poverty; but her Accepted Piry supply'd the Room of all Arguments: for by the Q. the was unwilling to lofe the Benefit of their Alliance, to force them to Defpair, or to give the Enemy any Opportunity of infulting. She demanded however, that they should bring into her Fleet 30 Ships, stor'd with all manner of Provisions, to serve on the present occasion against Spain; and allow some Months Pay to the English Recruits. And thus was this Dispute laid afleep, till the Year 1598.

In the mean time, the Hans-Towns in Germany made Complaints to the Emperor and States of the Empire, of the Infringement of their Privileges, in relation to Customs, which had been formerly granted them by the Kings of England: That their Goods had been arrested in the Portugal-Expedition; and that the English Merchants had engrofs'd the Trade in Germany.

To these Particulars, Dr. Christopher Parkins anfwerd, in the Queen's Name, That thole Privileges were revok'd in the Reign of Edmard Ama, 38.
VI. by an Act of Parliament, (fince unrepeal'd) upon the account of fome Mifmanagements, and for other warrantable Caufes; as being indeed no way convenient at that Juncture, and having been granted when Trade and Navigation were at a low Ebb in England: But now the Cafe was alter'd, and therefore in Queen Mary's Reign the Exercise thereof was totally prohibited: That the Queen, for her part, never was for divesting them of their Privilege (which yet she had an Act of Parliament to warrant her in) but had in the first Year of her Reign made some remporary Grants to them, fuch as the Times would then bear; till they themselves had, without the least Warning, thrust the English out of Hamburgh, contrary to the good Agreement which was then between them: Nevertheless she design'd still to place them on the fame Level of Privilege, with the English, in respect of Trade; but they rejected the Offer, and infifted on a greater: Whereas 'twas contrary to general Cuftom and common Reafon, to prefer Foreiners before ones natural Subjects, in the Bufiness of trading for Commodities, peculiar to every Country; which yet they feem'd, by those Privileges, to infift upon. Befides, 'twas impossible the Go-vernment should subsist, should the Hans-Towns be obliged to pay no higher Cuftoms at this time of day, than were imposed above 300 Years ago; if Liberties granted to the Prejudice of the Government should be allowed of, and those which have been formerly revoked fhould be in Force again, at the Request of any private Person: yet had she very lately of-fer'd them, upon the Emperor's account, almost the same Privileges with the English, viz. that for Customs on the account of Cloaths exported hence, and for Commodities usually imported hither from the Hans-Towns, they should pay no more than the Queen's natural Subjects: But if they had a Mind to import forein Wares into England, fuch as come from Spain and the Low-Countries; they might lawfully do fo, paying a Peny in the Pound less than other Foreiners: But as for Cloth, it fhould not be lawful for those of the Hans-Towns to transport it any whither, but to the Hans-Towns beyond the River Ems, and the City of Emden towards the East, and the Baltick Sea: That she likewise allowed them the Liberty of having their Houses in London and elfewhere in England, and to govern their Company in a regular way, by a Prefident; on condition nothing were done to the Queen's Prejudice, or against the Laws of the Land; though their own Privileges contain nothing of any Liberty to make Choice of their Governor, or to frame Statutes and Orders, or maintain any Jurisdiction in a forein Country, δε. That the Goods which they complain of being arrefted, were warlike Ammunicion, which they were carrying into Spain, to be employ'd against England; which their Privileges did not in the leaft warrant, and contrary to the Notice given in all their Cities, that they should not do it, unless they would be consider'd as Enemies: That their Ships were again discharged, and nothing seiz'd or kepr, but the faid Ammunition; which were law-fully detain'd, both by the Law of Arms, and the Constitution of the Kingdom. As for the Monopoly they complain'd of, the Germans themselves had certify'd in their Writings, that the English us'd a Way of Trade, far enough from the Oppression of engretting. She was therefore in hopes, that the Decree of augrburg Enn. 38. for prohibiting the English Trade, procued by the Hans-Towns, would be laid afide; especi-' ally confidering the States of the Empire have no Authority to take Cognizance of Privileges or any thing whatever, relating to the Rights and Laws of the Kingdom of England; which being an absolute and independent Kingdom, owns no Superior, but its own proper Sovereign.

> Nevertheless vast Quantities of Grain were in the mean time brought into England, from the Hans-Towns, after the Queen had granted a general Permission to import it without paying Cufrom. And this mightily abated the Price of Grain; which was advanced to fuch a Rate, by reason of the great Rains which fell in the Summer, and some private Methods which were us'd to transport it, that some of the poorer Sort in Both these Gentlemen were accompanied by Sir Thomas Heneige, who had been a Servant to the Queen from his Youth, and made by her first Treasurer of her Chamber, and then Vice-Chamberlain and Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancafter; a Gentleman he was of fo spruce and polite Address, that he feem'd purely calculated for a Court. He left but one Daughter behind him, by whom the Family of the Finches was happily augmented with a fair Estate and a numerous Iffue.

caker.

The last Month of this Year did William Whitaker lay down this mortal Life; an excellent and well-accomplished Divine, that had been fifteen Years the Queen's Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge, and Master of St. John's College. He had impair'd his Constitution by too intense Studies, when that Query was bandied among the Clergy there, Whether true justi-fring Fitth can be lest? His Memory was much valued, and his Lofs equally lamented by that University, which had receiv'd considerable Advantages from his Sermons, Example and Wri-

Sir Ruger

Williams.

The very same Month died Sir Roger Williams Knight, a Wellb Gentleman of the Family of Penrafe in Monmouthshire. He first tried his Fortune in the Army under the Duke of Alva; and aftewards having obtain'd a full and compleat Experience of the Arts and Discipline of War, he was perhaps no way inferior to the best Soldiers of that Age, could be have put bounds to his Courage, which ran quite away with his Conduct and Diference Twas undoubtedly by a duct and Differention. tingular Excellence in him, that he was capable, upon the bare stock of Experience, without the least Improvements of Learning or Education, of writing a most exquisite and judicious History of the Low-Country-Wars, in which he was an Actor, and of maintaining, as he did, in an admirable Book on that Subject, the Art of Fighting as it is now practis'd, against that which was in former Ages, to the great Mortification of the antiquated Admirers of Bows and Arrows. The 1595-Earl of Effect attended at his Funeral, which was Ann. 28 folemniz'd at St. Panl's, besides as many Officers of the Army as were then in Town.

The next Day after he was buried, Sir Thomas Sir Tho. Morgan, who was with Sir Roger, his Kinfman, Morgatt, when he breath'd his last, departed this Life. He was also a Welfliman, and an old Knight, of the Honourable Family of the Morgans of Pencarn in the fame County; a Gentleman that was justly valued for a well-temper'd Courage, and receiv'd yet higher Commendations on the account of his unmovable Loyalty to his Prince; for he put into the Queen's hands an Assignment of a yearly Sum of Money made to him under the King of Spain's Hand, to gain him over to his Interest and contented himfelf with the Allowance of a fmall Salary from her.

Ruffel, Lord-Deputy of Ireland, forefeeing by the Circumstances mention'd by me towards the end of the last Year's Transactions, that a War was likely to break out, made preffing Applications by his Friends in England, that fome experienc'd Officer might be tent over to him, to af-fift him with the best Advices in this dangerous Juncture. He had a mind for Baskervil before any other, tho' he did not go fo far as to mention him. But, clean contrary to his Expectation, Sir John Norris was the Person pitcht upon, a thorow Soldier, a good Officer, and every way refolute and brave.

As foon as Tir-Oen heard that he was ready to arrive with 1300 Veterane Soldiers who had ferv'd in Bretaign and the Low-Countries, and with other Supplies likewise out of England, and that the English had a design on the Castles of Baleshanon and Belyck, at the entrance of Lough-Earn, he was driven by his Fears to make an unexpected Affault upon the Fort at Black-water, which opens the Pailage to the Country of Tir-Oin, and forc'd the the it to furrender, through the absence and neglect for a of the Governor, Edward Corrucilis; which as Black foon as he had done, being hurried and roffed maters. between various Resolutions, he wrote Letters to the Earl of Kildare, with Offers of his Service against the Injuries done him by the Lord-Deputy's Officers; and at the fame time promis'd the Earl of Ormond, and Sir Henry Wallop Treafurer of the Army, to continue a good Loyalift, and intreated the Lord-Deputy and Sir John Norru, by Letters fent on purpofe, to use him favourably, and not force him to turn Rebel againft his Inclinations, and purely for his own Security. But these Letters were intercepted by the Marshal Bagnal, and suppress'd, to the Earl's great Detriment, as he afterwards complain'd.

darengh, (which tignifies the Blacksmith) and the base Son of Con-Oneal. The first part of the Proclamation took notice of his Ingratitude to the Queen, who had given him a yearly Pension as a Relief under his Extremities, advanced him to the Dignity of an Earl, given him an Estate in Ireland above others of his Family, and pardon'd him not only for the Outrages committed on his Neighbours, but for the barbarous Murder of Shan-O-Neal's Son, whom he had ftrangi'd without allowing him a bare Hearing. Then was mention'd his base usage of Shan's other Sons, by keeping them in Irons; and his treacherous tampering with the Lords of Ulfer to join in Rebellion with him: And last of all, it contain'd the promife of a Pardon to all that would defert him. and a general Caution to every one not to aid or

The Rebels were at this present able to muster about 1000 Horse, and 6280 Foot in Ulfter, Reb.'s and 2300 in Connaught, every Man of them at Tir. Oen's Command. And among these there Tir Oen's Command. were feveral experienc'd Soldiers, that had been train'd in the Exercise of War ever since the Lord-Deputy Perrot had appointed every Lord of Ulfer to have fuch a number of Men well-difciplin'd, and always in a readiness to serve against the Island-Scots: Others of them had been bred up in the Low-Country-Wars, being fent for over by the Deputy upon an unhappy Errand, as in the conclusion it prov'd: Others were induced, by the Perfuations of the Lord-Deputy Fitz-Williams, to ferve in the English Wars, and by that means grew experienced boldiers.

Plorris advances apainft In-Oen.

Nor were the Forces under Sir John Norris any whit inferior, who had Orders to march against the Rebels, to prevent the Succours they expected out of Spain; for the Queen had given him the principal Command, (to prevent any Reflection that might fall on the Lord-Deputy) stiling him The General of the Army in Ulfter in the absence of the Lord-Deputy; and granted him an absolute Power to pardon whit Malecontents he should think fit. With what delign this was done, I cannot divine; but most certainly 'twas the subject of general Wonder, in regard that the very Essence of Government seems to consist in its being lodg'd in the hands of one, and nothing being either more monstrous or mischievous tran a mixt or divided Authority. However the Lord-Leouty acted in conjunction with him, and they And the advanced as far as zirmagh, purting the Rebels L.Depaty, into such a Consternation, that Tir-Oin abandon'd the Fort at Black-water, fet fire on the adjacent Villages and the Town of Dunganon, demolish'd a great part of his own House there, and looking on his Affairs as quite desperate, began to look out for fome Retreat or fit place to abfcond in; but the Loyalists made an Halt for want of Provision, (which is a Neglect that has disappointed many Expeditions in Ireland) and after having proclaim'd Tir-Oen a Traitor in his They re-They re-turn again Metropolitan-Church of Armagh, they return'd back again. Tir-Oen observ'd them narrowly in their return, and fometimes shew'd himself at a great diffance They afterwards fortified the Garifon of Monaghan, and when they had got pretty near to Dundalk, the Lo d-Deputy, according to the Instructions he had receiv'd, gave up the entire Charge of the Army to North, and after feveral Compliments and Expressions of Civility between them, return'd to Dublin, and kept a strict eye upon the Assairs of Leimster, Connaught and Innfter.

Norrs remain'd with a ftrong Army in Ulfter, and did nothing answerable to the great Hopes conceiv'd of him: Perhaps out of an Emulation against the Lord-Deputy, (which the Courtiers endeavour'd to foment by all the fly Arts they were Mafters of) the one being as little able to brook an Equal, as the other to endure a Supewith Soldiers, who love to fpin out a War, as being very femilie that their Value rifes according as there is occasion for their Service; or it may be, out of some affectionate Regards for Tir. O(n, who was as g. cat a Favourite with with him, as, on the contrary, he was unacceptable to the Lord-Deputy; for he gave, it feems, to much credit to the fine Harangues of Tir-O.m, and his Party, that he b'am'd the Lord-Deputy in his Thoughts, as having dealt too rigidly with Tir-Oca, when he refus'd to accept of any Terms of an Accommodation at his Hands. The Truth of the matter is, that the Lord-Deputy was real- 1595. Pretences of Delay, till the Succours, which were expected, arriv'd from Spain. Wherefore he refused all Terms or Overtures of a Treaty, as so many Tricks and Artifices on his fide, and as inconfistent with the Queen's Honour and his own Reputation, fince they were the Propofals of a proclaim'd Rebel. Norris, on the other fide, being more credulous, conceiv'd fuch Hopes of bringing him to handfom Terms, as to admit of a Conference with him. But these Expectations were rais'd and cherish'd by the Subtilty of Tir-Oin, who presented Norris with a pretended Submithion, fubscrib'd by his own Hand, and begg'd Pardon on his Knees before Norris and Secretary Facton; protesting withal, 'That he did not fithmite withdraw his Allegiance from his Prince out of Submits to Malice or any ill Delign, but that his Friends deeply refenting fome Wrongs that were done him, particularly a Defign that was form'd to take away his Life, he was in a manner forc'd into a Rebellion: That this was his first Crime against the Queen, which he promis'd to make a full amends for, by a future good and loyal Behaviour; and that he would likewise re-nounce the Title of O-Neal, which he had made use of for no other Reason, than to prevent its being usurp'd by others, in bar to his Right and Title: That from thenceforward he A Truce would quite abandon the spanish Interest, (into agreed one of which he had not entred before angust) and therefore humb's implor'd the Queen's Mercy, and a general Act of Oblivion, for himfeld and Friends, in relation to what was paft. O-Donel did at the fame time fubmit himfelf, and thereupon two Hostages were given, and a Truce agreed so till the first of January. And twas not long after that Feagh-Mac-Hugh caft himfeif at the Lord-Deputy's Feet, and claving Par-don with humble Looks and in a lamentable Tone, was receiv'd into Protection, and lived for fome time without giving the Government any Difturbance.

Persons of better Heads have made an Obser- Truces vation, that not only the prefent, but former prejudical Conferences and Treaties of this kind, have had a fcurvy Afpect upon the Queen's Affairs; for in the mean while the Malecontents gain time enough to form and ripen their Projects, to corroborate themselves by new Alliances from abroad, and provide fresh Recruits at home. And thus it was in the prefent case, for base and ill-natur'd People flock'd in every day to them, the English Forces lying in the mean time unemploy'd, and at a great Expence, and eating the Queen's faithful Subjects out of house and hone, because twas provided by the Treaty, that they fhould not quarter in the Enemy's Country.

He humbly requested a free Pardon for himself and his Friends, and that they might be restord again to their Estates, and enjoy the free Exercise of their Religion, (a very pleafant Conceit, when Religion was a thing that had not hitherto fallen under any confideration in that Kingdom, and the Malecontents themselves had to little troubl'd their Heads about it, that this was the very fift time they made use of it as a Medium to itrengthen their Party). In a word, they all join'd in the fame Demand, before-mention'd, as to the free exercife of Religion: But thee two last requir'd moreover an abiolute and full possession of all the Revenues, as well Ecclesiastical, as what belong'd to them, within their respective Counties, upon paying a yearly Acknowlegdment in Money. These Proposals being, some of them, thought sit to be granted by the Commissioners, whilst some were to be qualified by certain Restrictions, and others referr'd to the Queen, a Proposal was made to the Rebels on the other side, under the following Terms: That they should be down their Arms, Articles disjusts their Forces, ask Pardin for their Rebellion, propourability into their Counties, regard the Forts they ded to the

But so insolent was the Faction now grown, rejected as to judge these Conditions highly unreasonable; so that they broke up the Conference, having first agreed on a Ceilation of Arms till the first of April, upon these Conditions: "That no Act of Hostility should be committed on either side: That the English-Soldiers in Garison, should have free liberty to pass and repass with their Provision and Arms: That they should Forage, carry Wood, and fetch Materials to fortify their Garisons at three Miles distance from them, where-ever they happen to lie. That they should not by any means endeavour to draw the Queen's Subjects into Rebellion, with other matters to the like purpose: That for the due performance of these Conditions, Hostages should be deliver'd by Tin-Oan, either to be detain'd during the whore time mention id in the Trace, or to be relived by others in their rurns.

As for what Wrongs they had fuffer'd, she would make em Satisfaction, if they could make out the Particulars wherein they were injur'd: And the Rudeness and Insolence of the Gari-' ion Soldiers she very much condemn'd. And the fent leveral Letters to Norris and Fenton to the fame purpose; whose Credulity Tr-Oen had made a noit advantageous use of. The Queen found at length that Wallop and Gardiner, her Commissioners, managed things with less Prudence thin was expected; fo that they received from her a brisk Reprimand for having treated Tr-Oen and his Party, who were proclaim'd Rebels, with too much Diffinction and Complain fance.

Mean while Tir-Oen importun'd the King of The Rebels folicit Spain, by private Letters and Agents, to come to the K of his Affiftance; till at length one or two Meffengers were dispatched to the Malecontents with tittance. private Instructions, with whom they struck up this Agreement, viz. 'That if the King of Spain would, within a certain time prefix d, furnish them with an Army powerful enough to fubdue the English, they would join their Forces with them; and in the interim, if he would ' fapply them with Arms and Ammunition, they would not accept of any Terms of Peace what-" foever.

These Contracts were subscribed by O-Rork, Mic-Williams and others; but Tir-Oen was too politick to fign them, tho no doubt he gave an implicit Confent The Letters which the King of Spain fent him, full of mighty Promiles, he dispatched away to the Lord-Deputy, as an Argument of his sincere Loyalty to his Prince: But fully depending on some Assistance from Spain, from the h of spain he at the same time revok'd his submiffive Re-and im cantation, and fell back from his Promise made

This the General took very ill, and to Norris. roundly charg'd him for having gull'd him with fair and specious Pretences. But Tir-Oen being a Person that knew very well how to shift the Scene, when the Truce was just ready to expire. came to a new Capitulation with Norris and Fenton, which was confirm'd on both fides, and Hoflages given. They, between them, procur'd a Pardon for Tir-Ocn and his Accomplices in the County of Tir-Ocn; which being put off for some time, by reason the Lawyers could not agree upon a Form, he made his use of the Delay, and protracted it for two Months, as being doubtful whether he should accept the Pardon or not, unless the Rebels in Connaught were likewise com-prehended in the fame. He did however accept it at last, and feem'd very well pleas'd therewith, his Pardon often protefting, that it was more acceptable to him than the Letters-Patents which convey'd to him the Title of Earl: But for all this he refus'd to fwear Allegiance, or to renounce upon Oath any forein Affiftance.

Whilft General Norris was making thefe Terms L Deputy with Tir-Ocn, the Lord-Deputy was on the pur-0-Maden, fair of O-Maden, who had rais'd a new Commotion, and laid Siege to his Caftle of Clobonand Norce the Rebe a O. But within a few days they florm I the Caffle, and put every Man to

Hereupon he fent his Ruffians abroad and began to was e and pillage the Country all about. But not long after, being vexed at what he had done, Tir Oen and hearing there was a probability of Peace be- prevaritween England and Spain, he was likewise for cates, making a Virtue of Necessity, and as peaceably inclin'd as any one could wish. I am quite tir'd with pursuing him through all his Shifts and Devices: In short, upon the appearance of the least Danger from England, nothing was so cringing and submissive; so that by a mock shew of Repentance he always chous'd the English, till he he had got into Shelter, and the Forces rais'd a-gainst him were dismiss'd. Nor is it to be wonder'd that he was fo often believ'd and pardon'd, when 'tis confider'd what flothful and mercenary Commanders did then abound in Ireland, besides if pottible, without Bloodshed. But how false

Soon after, he incited Feagh Mac-Hugh to revive a Rebellion in Leimster, which had been totally suppress'd, after he had petition'd for his Pardon, and was now just ready to receive it. He immediately feiz'd on the Fort near Ballencore, and razed it to the Ground: After which he committed feveral Outrages in the County of Leimster, tho' the Lord-Deputy went in pursuit of him. He likewise supported Peter and James Butler, Nephews to the Earl of Ormond, who were then up in Arms: But this was carried on with all the Privacy imaginable.

Winter now coming on, he could no longer He rebels conceal those treacherous Principles which he again. had thus long mask'd under a profound Diffimulation; for, in opposition to the Articles of the late Treaty, he publickly forbad the conveyance of Provisions to the Garison in Jerngels, and from an Ambush, prepared for that purpole, slew igveral Soldiers that were employ d in carrying Victuals, or fetching Wood; and he himself made fuch a furious Attack upon the Garifon, that thirty of them were flain. Henry Oge, Man-Shan's Son-in-law, he fent out to fet the Villages on Ann.39 fire, and plunder the Country about the River Boyne, and attempted to take the Caitle of Carlingford by Stratagem.

These Disorders the Lord-Deputy and Council fairly expostulated; and desired him withal, that if he had any regard for the Sasety of his Hostages, or was willing to prevent the being proclaimed a Traitor once more, he would make no more Affaults upon the Garifon, nor hinder the conveyance of Provisions to it. His Answer was, That he, for his part, had kept the Agree-ment; but that Feagh Mac-Hugh was ill treated by the Lord-Deputy, contrary to his Promife, at least, if not to Articles in Form; and that Oen Mac-Collo had been bafely flain by the Garifon at Kellas. These Proceedings had made him the more jealous what might be the Fate of himself and his Friends. He desired therefore, that in order to a full and final Composition, a new Conference might be appointed with General North or the Lord-Deputy. Which Request whilf they held in Debate, he permitted Armogh to be relieved. But O-Donel in the mean while was wholy intent upon Spoil and Plunder in the Province of Connaught; and at length the Conference, with the Hopes of which Norris had pleafed himfelf, was quite shifted off and laid afide.

In the mean while the Lord-Deputy spared no Feagle Pains to apprehend Mac-Hugh, till at laft the Rebels being routed and put to flight with a confiflain. derable Slaughter, Colonel Milburn took him as he was endeavouring to fecure his Retreat; and after giving him feveral Wounds, cut off his Head, and fent it to Dublin, to the great Joy of that City, fome little time before the Lord-Deputy relign'd his Parent. About the same time was George Butler's Head fent to the Lord-Deputy by Thomas Lea, and his Brother Peter was taken by his Uncle the Earl of Ormond, and hang'd, tho' he was the immediate Heir of that Family.

In the midst of these Commotions in Ireland, Albert, Cardinal and Archduke of Austria, who was made Governor of the Netherlands by the King of Spain, did on a fudden afford matter to divert the Queen's Thoughts from the Affairs of Feland; for he was no fooner invelted in this new Charge, than he got together the Spanish Forces, as if with a design to raise the Siege of La-Fre, a Town of Picardy, whereas he moit unexpectedly marched to the Siege of Calais, where the very first day he took the Castle of Newenham, and made himfelf Mafter of the Port.

As foon as the Queen was inform'd of this Siege by fome Meffengers from France, whose Fears interpreted their Errand, she order'd fome Forces to be rais'd the very fame day, being Sunday, during Divine Service, in order to affift the French King and fecure her own Kingdoms, for the thought there was reason to suspect, that when her Neighbour's House was on Fire, her own might possibly feel the force of the Flame. This Army, which was rais'd at fo fhort a warning, Effer had the Command of; but before they took Shipping, there was certain Intelligence brought, that both the Town and Castle were in the Spa-niards Hands: for the Archduke having batter'd the Walls, and much impair'd them by the conftant playing of his great Guns, (which were heard as aar as Greenwich) the Townsmen retir'd into the Castle, which was easily taken in a few days, and a great number of the French cut off; whereupon the English Army was immediately disbanded, and the French King furnish'd with fome Moneys on Security given by the Duke of Bauillen and Sancy.

'Twas not long before a larger and better Army was rais'd in England, wherein feveral Noblemen and Gentlemen offer'd themselves to ferve Ann. 39 as Voluntiers; for the Report (pread and gathered more and more, that the King of Spain was making his utmost Efforts against England and Ireland, being, without doubt, encouraged by his Success on Calair, which was but a very floor cut from England; besides that Drake and Howkin's Voiage had foully mifcarried, and the Irifh folicited hard for Succours out of Spain; the Queen thought it the best course, in order to divert or scatter this growing Tempest, to attack the Enemy in his own Ports: And to that pur- A Fleet pose, a Fleet was equipp'd, consisting of 150 prepared Ships, 17 whereof were capital Ships, and 22 against more were fent to act in conjunction from the Spain. States of the Low-Countries; the rest were Tenders and small Vessels. In this Fleet were rec-kon'd 6360 Soldiers in Pay, 1000 Voluntiers, and 6772 Seamen, besides Dutchmen. Robert Earl of Effer, and Charles Howard Lord-Admiral of England, who had expended vaft Sums from their own private Purfe, upon this Expedition, were appointed Commanders in Chief, and to share the Power between them, with the Character of Generals; the Lord-Admiral however being to have the principal Authority at Sea, and the Lord Effex at Land. And they had likewife join'd with them these following Persons to affift at a Council of War, viz, The Lord Thomas Howard, Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir Francis Vere, Sir George Carew, and Sir Coniers Clifford. The whole Fleet was divided into four Squadrons; the Lord-Admiral commanded the first, the second Command the Lord Effex, the Lord Thomas Howard the chird, ders at Sea and the fourth Sir Walter Releigh. The Chices and the fourth Sir Walter Releigh. The Chices of the Army were thefe, wiz. Sir Francis Vere Lieutenant-General, Sir John Wingfield Quarter-Mafter-General, Sir George Chrew Mafter of the Ordnance, Sir Coniers Clifford Serjeant-Major: The Colonels were Robert Earl of Suffex, Sir Chri-At Land, ftopher Blunt, Sir Thomas Gerard, Sir Richard Wingfield, Sir Edward Wingfield Captain of the Volun-tiers, and Anthony Afhley Secretary of the Council of War, whose Business was to keep a Register of their Councils, and the Arguments used, and to record the feveral Actions and Attempts that should be form'd. The Queen gave the Generals the following Instructions:

' To make a strict Enquiry into the Quantity of Provisions that were laid up in the Spanific Ships or Warehouses, to be made use of against England and Ireland, or fent to Calais; and to do what they could to intercept or destroy it, as also the Enemies Ships, so far as might be done without running too great a Rifque on their own fide: For, as she often used to say, she had much rather her Men should be reserved for the Defence of their own Country, than push'd upon the common Hazards of War, where little was to be got either of Honour or Advantage. That what Towns foever they took, they should spare the Women, and those that were very Young, or elfe Decrepit, and put none to the Sword, but fuch as made Opposition. That the Spoil and Plunder should be kept fafe to make good the Expences of the War, and to reward those that acted bravely That the Gentlemen of the Council, should faithfully deliver their Advices and Opinions, without dividing into Sides and Parties; and that the Plurality of Votes should always determine it. That when they deflroy'd what Ships or Provisions they could belonging to the Ene-my, they should fend our some Men of War to intercept the Indian Carachs, if they receiv'd

There were some that objected against this Expedition; that 'twas not fit to hazard fo many Ships or Men therein, left the Spaniards, who let flip no Opportunity, should take advantage of their Absence, and restecting upon the bad Success of Drake and Hawkins, be encouraged either to make a Descent on England, or should prove too hard for the English Fleet, and so put the Nation in Danger that way. However, the Fleet fail'd from Plymouth, in the beginning of June, and was put back again the first day with contrary Winds: But the next the Wind coming fair, they bore away to day, the Wind coming fair, they bore away to the West; and order'd things so well, as to pass the Coasts of Portugal undiscover'd: For, had they been observed, or made any Attempts in the hithermost Parts of Spain or Portugal, the Alarm must needs have been taken, and the Project, in a great measure, defeated. Their Design was (tho' very few were privy to it) upon Cales, fo famed by the Poets, for being the Sun's Bed-chamber; and efteem'd, by the ancient Geographers, the utmost Boundary of the Earth. at this time a famous Mart, eafily defended, and having great Advantages to annoy the Enemy : And this was the Place of Rendevous, appointed by the feal'd Inftructions deliver'd to every particular Captain, and which they were not to open till they were past Cape S. Vincent, (unless they happen'd to be parted from the Fleet, by bad Weather) and which they were to throw overboard, in case of Danger from the Enemy. ver-against Cape S. Vincent they met an Irish Vesfel, the Master of which inform'd them that they came from Cales, and that they were under no Apprehensions there, nor had heard any Account of a Fleet from England: That there were no Forces in the Island, besides a small Garrison; and that there were feveral Galleons, Games and Men of War in the Harbour; besides a great many Merchant-men, that had taken in their Loading for the Indies. On Sunday the 20th of June, they came to an

Effex, full of Fire and Ambition, thought it proper to land the Forces out of hand; but Rahigh, and particularly the Lord-Admiral were of another Mind; as indeed he was ever an Enemy to ther Mind; as indeed he was ever an enemy operation of the Month of th and Violence against the Shoar. proposed by Essex, that they should forthwith attack the Men of War, the Galleons, and Merchant-men, that lay in the Bay very close to one another; but this Advice would not go down with the rest, because the Ships lay under the Cannon of the Forts, from whence they might expect a very warm Reception, as well as from the Ships and the 15 Gallies; should they make that Attempt.

Anchor betimes in the Morning, near S. Seb fti-

The next day, upon the coming in of the Tide, the Spanish Men of War sheer'd off to the Puntal, and the Merchant-ships got in towards Port-Real: The English weigh'd Anchor, and took their Station, where they were furiously batter'd on the one tide from the great Guns of the Fort S. Philip, and from the Gallies on the orher. And now a Resolution was form'd to attack the Spanish Ships; at which Essex was so pleas'd, that he threw up his Har for Joy: This Charge was committed to the Lord Thomas Howard, Sir Wal-1596. ter Raleigh, Sir Thomas Southwell, Sir Francis Vere, Ann. 39. Sir George Caren, Sir Robert Cross, and some other Commanders of the smaller Vessels; for the Wa- Ships atter being at low ebb, 'twas not thought proper tack'd. to hazard the taller Ships upon the Shelves and Sands, in a Channel that was both narrow and very shallow besides. Sir Walter Raleigh, according to the Meafures refolv'd on, did therefore place himself in the midit of the Channel, and directed the Seem of the Walf-Jpight, the Ship in which he was, against the Spanish Men of War; which thereupon sell back. The Lord-Marshat Vere fired on the Gallies briskly from the Rainbuy; but they being under the Protection of the Town, return'd him a very rough Compliment from their Fore-deck, till Effex came in to his Relief; for then they made away as fait as they could, and kept along the Shoar, till they got to Bridge Susco, which joins the Island to the main Land; and there they were hoisted up with an Engine, and so got away to Sea; except only one or two, which were prevented by Sir John Wingfeld in the Vanguard. In the mean time, the Spanish Men of War lay at Anchor at the Puntal, and bestow'd several Broad-sides upon the English, which could not hitherto get near them, by reafon of the low Water; but now, upon the coming of the Flood, bore down briskly upon them. Elfex immediately ventur'd into the midft of the Fight; as did also the Admiral and his Son. In the Miranora they fought foutly, from break of day till noon; and then the Spaniards perceiving their Galleons were miferably shatter'd, and a great many Men kill'd, refolv'd to fire their Ships, or run them on ground. A great many Seamen for fear threw themfelves overboard; fome of which were taken, others drown'd, and fome got affror; and feveral the Admiral pity'd and spared, as they cry'd Quarter, and swam for their Lives. The Spanish Admiral, call'd the S. Philip, Burnt and a Ship of 1500 Tons, was burnt, thro' a Moor's taken, fetting the Gun-powder on fire; and one or two more, which were near her, took Fire and shar'd the same Fare. The S. Matthew, thro'the Care of the Lord-Admiral, was saved and taken; as also was the S. Andrew, by the Assistance of Sir Thomas Gerard. As foon as this Engagement was over, Effex landed 800 Men at Puntal, about a League from Men land.

the City; and immediately after Sir Coniers Clif-Ford, Sir Christopher Blunt, and Sir Thomas Gerard, were fent to break down the Bridge and the Engine, which had fecured the Escape of the Galies, to prevent any Access from the Island to the Continent: This was carefully and throughly perform'd, whilft Effex himfelf plac'd his Men in good Order, and march'd away with all speed to the City; together with the Earl of Suffex, Ledowick of Nasfau, William Herbert Son to the E. of Worcester, Bourke an Irishman, Sir Edward Wingfield, Sir Christopher St. Laurence, Sir Robert Drury, Sir Thomas Germin, Christopher Heyden, Alexander Ratelist, and some others of the highest Quality. At first the Spanish Horse shew'd themselves about half a Mile from the Town, and then retreated: Anon there appear'd a greater Number; where-upon Effex order'd his Men to retreat in good Order, and to return and charge the Enemy, when they had drawn them a little farther from the Town; which they did fo effectually, that they put them to flight, and purfu'd 'em fo close, that they had much ado to get into the Town, and fecure the Gate. The Earl got upon a new Work which had been lately rais d near the Gate, from whence he discover d an Entrance into the Town; but so steep, that a Man must leap down a Pikes Length. However, Evans, the Earl of 1596. Suffex's Lieutenant, began the Experiment, and Ann. 39 was follow'd by Arbin Savage, Captain of the Earl's Company, who carry'd the red Flag; Samuel Bagnal, and feveral others. In the mean They take while, Sir Francis Vere, the Field-Marfhal, forced the Town

the Town, open the Gate, and brake in, with the Earl of Fflex himfelf: And now began a brisk Skirmiff in the Streets; which having maintain'd for half an hour, the English forc'd their Way to the Market-place, where they were pelted with Showers of Stones from the Tops of the Houses, which are flat-roof'd in that Place. Here was Sir John Wingfield shot in the Head, and afterwards died of his Wound; who in the first Engagement had kill'd a Spanish Commander, and was wounded himself, tho' not so bad, but that he appear'd at the Head of his Men, till the Fight was renew'd in this place. Several others were wounded, and among them Samuel Bagnal, who had receiv'd eight Wounds; and Arthur Savage, who was all over Blood, receiv'd the Honour of Knighthood. At the very fame Instant, the Lord-Admiral, with the Lord Tho. Howard, Sir William Paget, Raleigh, Sir Rob. Southwell, Rich. Levison, Phil. Woodhouse, Robert Mansfield, and the Seamen came up briskly and enter'd the Town, Sir Edward Hobby carrying the Colours before them. The Spaniards now gave over the Fight, and retir'd into the Caftle and Town-house. The latter was imme-diately surrender'd; and the other the next day & Caftle.

after, upon the following Terms: That the Citizens should have the Liberty to depart with their wear-ing Cloaths; and all the rest to go as Booty to the Sol-diers: That 52000 Ducats should be laid down for their Ranfom, and 40 of their principal Citizens sens to England as Hostages till the same was pay'd. Shortly after, 'twas order'd by Proclamation, that no Violence should be offer'd to the Spaniards; and the Women, Churchmen and Citizens were convey'd to Porto-Santa-Maria. In the mean while, Raleigh was order'd, with those Ships, which were small enough to pass the Channel, to fet Fire on the Merchant-men that were withdrawn to Port-Real; but an Offer was made of two Millions of Ducats to redeem them: But this the Lord-Admiral would by no means close with; for he faid, he was fent to The Mer- destroy the Shipping, not to ransom them for chant men Money. Whilst this Matter was under Debate, the Duke of Medina-Sidonia order'd the Ships to be fet on Fire, after the Goods were unladen, with which they were freighted; which was done to the great Damage of the Merchants. They found a vast Quantity of Ammunition in the Town, and not a fmall Sum of Money, con-fidering that every Man feiz'd what he could lay Hands on. It has been made appear by Persons of Judgment, that the Spaniard's Loss on this oc-casion, in Shipping, Money, and Provisions, a-mounted to above 20 Millions of Ducats. There was not lost one Englishman of Note except Sir John Wingfield, who was honourably inter'd, in a military way, in the great Church of the Town. There were about 60 Gentlemen, who ferv'd in this Expedition, knighted for their Valour, viz. Robert Earl of Esfex, Count Lodowick of Nassau, Don Christophoro, a Portuguese, King Antonio's Son, Sir William Herbert, Bourk an Irishman, William Howard, Son to the Lord-Admiral, Robert Dulley, George Devereux, Henry Nevill, Edwin Rich, Rich-George Devereux, Henry Neonit, Earlin Rico, Rico-ard Levilin, Anthony Affley, Henry Lennard, Honce Vere, Anthur Throckmorton, Miles Corbet, Edward Conway, Oliver Lambert, Anthony Cook, John Town-Jend, Chriftopher Heyden, Francis Popham, Philip Woodboule, Alexandr Clifford, Maurice Brikley, Charles Blunt, George Gifford, Robert Crofs, James Scudamore, Urian Leigh, John Lea, Richard Weston,

After this an Agreement was made, for a mutual Exchange of Prifoners; and a Confultation was held, whether 'twas best to hold Cales or quit Effex was of opinion, that the best way was to keep it; because it might prove a Thorn, as it were, in the Spaniards fides; and he undertook to defend it with 400 Men, and three Months Provision. The rest were of another mind; for having pretty well furnish'd their Pockets, their Thoughts and Inclinations began to travel homewards; fo that they would not allow him fo much as a fingle Ship, nor Provisions for one or two Months: whereupon he was forced to quit Cales, whether he would or not. However they first plunder'd the Island, demolish'd the Forts, and burnt down feveral Houses in the City. On the 5th of July, they got their Plunder together, Theyleare and the whole Fleet fail'd from thence, not with Cales. out this Compliment from the Spaniards; That tho' the English were Hereticks as to Religion, yet in other respects, they were good Soldiers, and generously brave. From thence they made for Faro in Al-They take garbe; from whence the Inhabitants were all fled Faro. with their Goods. There was a well-stock'd Library left behind, which was of right the Lord Essex's Prize. Here the Enemy's Gallies, which before attended at fome diftance, began to come up; but the Lord-Admiral commanding them to be gone, they were glad to obey, and as they row'd off, gave the English an hearty Farewel. At Cape S. Vincent, the Fleet was drove a great way to Sea, by a very boilterous Gale, which came up at North; and then a Council was held to confider, Whether they should not steer away for the Azores, and there wait for the Indian Caracks. The Earl of Ffex made a Propofal, that the Land-forces, and those Vessels which were but slenderly provided, or had a great Number of sick Persons in them, &c. might be sent home to England; and that himself, with two of her Majesty's Ships, and ten other Ships, might sail for the Azores; but this did not square with the Opinions of the reft, who made heavy Complaints of the Sickness of their Men, and the Scarcity of Victuals; so that he found scarce any to comply with his Motion, except the Lord Howard and the Low-Countrymen. When he found no good was to be done here, he prevail'd upon them, that every Man should deliver his Opinion in Writing; that so no particular Person might bear the Blame: and at length he got them into the mind to go to the Grayne. But as it hapned, there was not a fingle Vellel to be feen there, or in the neighbouring Road at Faroll. When he press'd hard, that the Men should be landed, and an Attack made upon the Groyne, and would have had them cruize along the Shoar of Gallicia, and fet upon the Ships in the Ports of S. carrying off fo rich a Booty, withour fo much as 1596. the Lots of a fingle Ship on their own fide. Ann 19 any thing was mismanaged, it seem'd to be this; That the chief Conduct of the whole Defign was not lodg'd in the hands of a fingle Person. However the Lord-Admiral was conveniently enough join'd with Esex, were it but to qualifie the Fervours of his Youth and Ambition, and curb in the Excess of his Courage, by uniting Council to Action, and managing to advantage the Circumftances of Time and Place, which are nice Parts in the Art and Discipline of War.

Though it may fufficiently appear, by what has been already faid, how greatly advantageous this Expedition prov'd to the Queen and the Nation, and how much the Spaniards were Sufferers by it; yet I cannot think it altogether impertinent to mention what follows, from a brief Narrative of the Earl of Effex himfelf.

As to the Honour refulting from this Expedition. The English did not wait the Issue of the King of Spain's Threats and desperate Designs upon England, as powerful a Prince as he was; but they did as good as make him a Challenge in his own Dominions, and beat and drove before them a Fleet of his, most compleatly equippd, not excepting his best and biggest Ships. Two of his Galleons they took and brought home with them; Fifteen Gallies they totally routed, with a very unequal Number of Ships, and fet many of their Countrymen free, who were condemn'd to the Gallies; besides that they releas'd feveral Spaniards, whom they had taken Prisoners, and receiv'd their hearty Thanks and Commendations for that Act of Clemency. Then again, they took the best fortified City in all Spain, with little or no Trouble, and flayd in the Enemy's Country for thirteen days together. Then in respect of the Advances of the the Advantage arising from it; besides those two Galleons, already mention'd, which were an Addition of Force to the English Fleet, they brought home about 100 Brais Guns, and a rich and valuable Booty besides. The Seamen and Soldiers return'd home likewife with Spoil and Plunder enough to flush and animate them for another Expedition. And if we confider the Damage done to the Spanard; he loft thir-teen of his most ferviceable Ships, forty Indian Merchant-men, and four others: There was likewise taken from him a vast Quantity of Ammunition, and his Stores of Provisions both for 'Sea and Land-Service; infomuch that 'tis next to an Impossibility he should in some time appear again at Sea, with a Fleet fit to engage. Add to this, the cutting off all Opportunities of Traffick, for this year, at leaft, between Old and New-Spain. And we may think it also worth our Notice, that by this means the English have acquainted themselves with the Weakness of the Spanish Sea-ports; and in consequence, with how little Difficulty they may be taken.

Sir Fran. The Queen gave them a very courteous Re-Governor Thanks on those of better Quality; especially of Briel. on Effex and the Lord-Admiral, in whose Commendations she was very liberal. And having oceasion to pitch on some Person, qualify'd for the Government of Briel, a Port-town of great Confequence, and deliver'd as a cautionary Security for Moneys the had lent; upon the Lord Shoffield's voluntary Refignation of that Post: she bettow'd it upon Sir Francis Vere, an English Colonel in the Service of the States; as a Person every way accomplish'd for fo important a Trust. And altho' fome of the first Nobility would have got themselves recommended to that Honour; and Effex himfelf opposed Vere; and others like-1596. wife were of opinion, that fo honorable a Piace would better fuit one of higher Quality: yet the Ann.39. Queen was no Stranger to his Worth and Family, (he being Nephew to John Vere, the lifteenth Earl of Oxford) and having had Experience of his Loyalry and Courage, as well in the Instance of the Spaniards Defeat at Rhinberke, as his taking the Castles of Littenboven and Burick, and recovering the Fort of Zutphen; after mature Deliberation and Advice, she not only made choice of this Gentleman, but permitted him to hold his Command under the States; a Preferment which others were now looking out for: though fhe was ready enough to acknowlege at the same time, that a Person who took the States Pay, was upon that account less fit to be entrusted with a Town, which the States had mortgaged to the Queen. This was a Proceeding which highly difobliged the Earl of Effex, who had re- Effex difcommended others to the Place: But it rais'd in pleas'd. him a greater and more apparent Difcontent, that Sir Robert Cecil was chosen Secretary in his Absence; whereas he had some time before recommended Sir Thomas Bodley, on the fcore of his great Wisdom and Experience in the America of the Low-Countries, and had run very high in his Commendations; but with fo much Bitterness, and so little Reason, ditparaged Cecil, that the Queen (who had by this time a mean Opinion of Effer's Recommendations) was the more inclinable to refuse to make Podley Sometary; neither would she let the Lord-T easurer join him in Commiffion with his Son: book which Honours were defign'd him, till Effex, by too profuse and lavish Praises, had render'd him suspected as a Creature of his own.

In the mean time, the King of Spain, to re- KofSpain pain the Credit he loft at Cales, and recover his prepares Damages in some measure, cau'd his Fleet to be repair'd at Lithon, and call'd in Ships from all gainft parts: He likewise furnish'd out all the forein England. Vessels which were then in the Spanish Ports, and fent fome new-rais'd Forces, and a great Number of Irish Fugitives, to Farol; from whence they were order'd for Irishand and England: But a Storm arising (as the Report went) in the midst of the Voyage, feveral of the Ships were fplit A great upon the Rocks, fome funk downright, and o- part caft thers were cast away; so that the very Llements away, feem'd to be on the Queen's side, who had the News of her Enemies Fare, before she receiv'd any Account of their Delign. However, that the might be the better provided against any Aceidents, the order'd that the Cattles of Sandsfort, Portland, Hurst, Southsea, Calshot, S. Andrews, and S. Maudites, should be new fortify d, and furnish'd with all Provisions necessary for their Defence. And to tie the Knot fafter between England and France, a mutual League offentive and defensive, A Treaty was fign'd by her Majesty and the French King, against Spain; through the Negotiation of the France.

Not long after, another Treaty was enter'd into, wherein 'twas concluded, 'That for this Year, no more than 2000 English should be sent over, which should serve only at Bologne and Monstreast; unless the King himself should come to Pieardy in person, &c. The Queen took an to Picardy in person, &c. The Queen took an Oath in her Chappel at Greenwich, to observe these Articles, which was done on the 20th of August, before Henry de la Tour, Duke of Bouillon, Viscount Turenne, and Marshal of France: The Bishop of Chichester gave the Oath, and a great many Noblemen affifted at the Ceremony. September, Gilbert Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury, was or number, vincer Laubet, Earl Of Soreusuary, Was fent Ambassador into France, to be a Witness of the King's Oath there; as also to present Sir Anthony Mildmay, for her Majesty's Ambassador in Ordinary, in the Room of Sir Heny Union, who died in Evera and liberities in the Majesty of the Ma who died in France; and likewise to invest his Majesty in the Order of S. George: Which being a Distinction principally intended for military Men, the Queen was willing to honour the Order, in the Choice of a Prince, who had made himfelf fo eminent for martial Bravery. And foon after, Sir Thomas Baskerville went over into Picardy with 2000 English Foot, according to the Articles of the last Agreement. Whilst these military Preparations were making, there were a parcel of loofe Fellows, who went about the Kingdom, under the counterfeit Authority of the Queen's Pursuivants; with fham Warrants and pretended Papers, under the Hands of the Queen's Council and Ecclefiastical Commissioners; and fearch'd the Houses of Widows and Papifts, taking away by Force their Plate, Jewels, and whatever they could find, that bore the Image of Chrift; as unlawful Fur-niture. The travelling Expences allow'd to Men of that Character, they firictly demanded; and were taken, and made to return their stoln Goods; and to reward their Project, forfeited fed Partheir Ears to the Pillory, and were branded in furants the Forehead for Rogues and Impostors. If the Person lummon'd had any Reason to suspect the Pursuivant, he might have him brought before the next Justice of the Peace, in order to be examin'd, who and what he was. That the Perfons fummon'd should not, upon pain of Imprisonment, bribe off their Appearance; and that the Pursuivants should not take any Money on those Conditions, upon the Penalty of forfeiting their Plants ces, going to Prison, and suffering such other Punishments as the Law might inflict

This Year did Thomas Arundel of Wardour re- Thomas turn into England; who being recommended by draudel the Queen's Letters as her Kinsman, and having Count of done signal Service in the War of Hungary against the European Service in the War of Hungary against the European Service in the War of Hungary against the European Service in the War of Hungary against the European Service in the Service in t the Turks at Gran, was created by the Emperor's pire. Letters-Patents, Count of the Holy Empire, and all and every his Heirs and Descendants lawfully born of and every bis Hers and Defendants lawfully born of either Sex, or that fiscald bereafter be born in a prope-tual Succession, Counts and Countesses of the Holy Em-pire: Which Title whoever enjoys, has (they say) these Privileges annex'd: "That they have a Place and Voice in the Imperial Diets, may purchace Lands in the Empire, raife Voluntiers to ferve in the Army, and cannot be Summon'd to take their Trials in any Court but the Impe-' rial Chamber.

After his return, when this new Distinction had made him Famous among the common People, there was a Query started, Whether Such a Title, confer'd by a forein Prince upon the Queen's Sub-ject, without her Cognizance, were to be allow'd of or not? Some were of opinion, that the Rewards and Encouragements conferr'd upon any Perfons in regard to their Merit, were to be admitted, let them come from what Prince they will:
For Virtue must needs starve where Merit and Pope. Moreover, Henry VIII. complimented Robert Curson, (who was made a Baron of the Empire by Maximilian I. on account of his Courage and Military Conduct) with the Enrolment of his Title among the English Barons, and the allowance of a Salary to support it. There were likewise several Scotch Gentlemen, whom the King of France had highly preferr'd Wigton was made Duke of Tours, and John Stuare Earl of D'Evereux. And the Kings of Scotland had always look'd upon this as an Honour to their Nation.

But however the Barons of England, imagining that this would prove a prejudicial kind of En-croachment upon their Dignity, for them and their Heirs to fubriic to a mere Upftart-Title, which might continue in the Earl's Family for infinite Ages, took upon them to oppose it upon Vol. II. Ffff 2

For 'tis a diminution to the Prince's Prerogative, and a difcouragement to the Subject's Obedience, when they are allowed to receive Honours from forein Potentates, inafmuch as the Person who receives the Title, seems to have ' made a tacit Contract with him that grants it:
' That fuch Advancements are a kind of Lures to ' draw away Subjects from their natural Fealty: That there lies an Action of Theft against any Man who shall put his Mark upon another ' Man's Sheep; and 'tis constru'd an Act of Fraud in him that shall strew Provender in the way to allure another Man's Lamb into his own Fold: That aitho' Sovereign Princes are not tied up by these Laws, yet are they obliged by a general Equity, and the common Voice of Nature: That in the Commonwealth of Rome, no Man could for that reason be a Denizen of that, and Free of another City at the same time; whereupon Pomponius Atticus declin'd the being made a "Citizen of Athens, left he should thereby forfeit 'his Privilege as a Roman: So in the States of Venice and Genoa, whoever receives any spiritual Promotion from the Pope, or temporal Dignity from a Sovereign Prince, is excluded from Publick Offices, as a Person Interested, and therefore Suspected. That however H.mry III. ' might be inclin'd through a natural Softness, or forc'd by the Iniquity of the Times, to allow Mobun's Title of Earl, when impos'd upon him by the Pope, in regard that his Father, when the King and Kingdom lay under a common Censure of Excommunication, was persecuted with fevere Affronts and Indignities, and compell'd to acknowledge himfelf a Vaffal to the See of Rome, as he himself likewise, thro' meer Fear, fuffer'd the Horse-Leeches of Rome to suck and "drain the Wealth of England; yet nevertheless it appears from the publick Records, that Mo-" bun was never acknowledg'd for an Earl: That Henry VIII. own'd Curfon as a Baron of Engl. nd purely to fwallow up in that Title the froshy and infignificant one of Baron of the Holy Empire; but all this while he enjoy'd no Vote in Parliament; then 'twas no wonder if the Scots receiv'd Honour from the French, fince the Lil-ly-Treffure in their Prince's Coat, speaks them to be under the Protection of the French Flowerde-luce.

Others were of opinion, that an Earl of the Sacred Empire was but of equal Efteem with the Publick Notaries and the common Counts Appftolic Counts & and Viscounts of the Lateran, the Pope's Crea-Viscounts tures; or that they held much the fame Rank with the Doctors of Physick, Lawyers, Grammarians and Rhetoricians of the Royal Palace, who having been Profesiors of the Sciences in that place for twenty Years, stile themselves, in compliment to their Vanity, Counts-Palatine, Countswhereas that is at present a first-rate Character, Palatine. and fignifies one who has a kind of Royal Jurifdiction in his own Courts, and an uncontrolable Prerogative in the point of Fiefs, Inheritances

The Queen being ask'd her Opinion in this Case, answer'd, That there was a close Tie of Affection between the Prince and Subject; and that as chaste Wives should have no Glances but for their own Spouses, so should faithful Subjects keep their Eyes at home, and not gaze upon firein Crowns: That she, of for her part, did not care her Sheep should wear a Stranger's Mark, nor dance after the Whiftle of every Fo- Ann. 39.

Within the compass of this Year, several Perfons of Note and Distinction were summon'd to their great Change; and among the rest these The death Gentlemen of worthy Memory, viz. John Puc- of Packer-kering, Keeper of the Great Seal of England, who vg, Loidwas himfelf a Perfon of exact Probity, tho' he Kreperhad the ill Luck to lie under the Cenfures of the Clergy, by reason his Servants dealt so much in Simony, and the infamous Trade of selling Simony, and the infamous Trade of felling Church-Preferments. His Place was supplied by Thomas Egerton, the Attorney-General, of whole fair and equal Deportment every one had conceiv'd mighty Hopes and Expectations.

The next Person worthy to be take notice of, was Richard Fletcher, Bishop of London, a consum- Fletcher, mate Courtier, who endeavouring to fmoother the Cares of an unlucky Match in the Imoak of Tobacco, which he took to excess; and falling under the Queen's Displeasure, (who thought it enough for Bishops to be Fathers of the Church) between the Experiment and the Misfortune, loft his Life.

Next follows Henry Cary, Lord Hunfdon, who Hunfdon, was Lord-Chamberlain of the Queen's Houshold, Governor of Berwick, and Knight of the Garter. He was a Man of Spirit enough, but intemperately Cholerick. His Advancements he ow'd to the Relation he bore of Coufin-German to the Queen. He had a competent Estate, and never lock'd after a great one. His Title descended to his Son George, and the Office of Lord-Chamber-lain to the Lord Cobham, who furvived him but a few Months.

After him we must not forget Sir Francis Knolles, Knolles. who married the Lord Hunsdom's Sifter, and liv'd for fome time an Exile in Germany for the fake of the Gospel and a good Conscience. He was Vice-Chamberlain to the Queen, then Captain of the Guard, and afterwards Treasurer of the Queen's Houshold, and made Knight of the Garter; after whose decease the Treasurer's Place was conferr'd upon Roger Lord North, and the Comptroller's was given to Sir Francis Knolles his Son.

Towards the end of the Year the Nation lost likewife Henry Hastings Earl of Huntington, the Hastings. third Earl of the Family, and President of the Council in the North. He was a Person of a fweet and candid Temper, but wanted not a Warmth and Zeal for the reform'd Religion, and spent a great part of his Estate in the Support of those Ministers who were the forwardest Sticklers for the simple and primitive Purity of the Gospel. He was interr'd at Ashby de la Zouch in the County of Leicester; and upon his de-cease Francis Lord Hastings, his Nephew by his Brother George's fide, was advanced to his Honour and Title. Afterwards the Dignity of President of the Council for the North was conferr'd on Matthew Hutton Archbishop of York, with all manner of Privileges thereto belonging, except only the Title of Prelident.

Amidit these Gentlemen, I must take the Liberty to mention one of the other Sex, viz.

Margaret Clifford Countes of Derby, the only count-se Daughter of Homy Clifford Earl of Cumberland, by of Derby
Eleanor Brandon, Niece to King Hemy VIII.

Tis remarkable of this Lady, that through an idle mixture of Curiofity and Ambition, supported by fanguine Hopes and a credulous Fancy, fle much used the Conversations of Necromancers and Figure-Flingers; upon which account the loft a great thare in the Queen's Inclinations a little before her death.

A new Fleet pre-

against

Spain.

The Fourtieth Year of her Reign.

Being engag'd in the purfuit of fomething more important, I must leave it to the Pens of those who manage the History of the Low-Countries, to do right to the Courage and Bravery of Sir Robert Sidney and Sir Francis Vere, and to let the World know how bravely they behav'd themfelves with their Auxiliary Forces the beginning The Batof this Year, in the Battel of Turnhoult in Brabant, Taraboule which was carried on under the happy Conduct of that great Perfon Maurice of Nassau, and in which were flain 2000 Neapolitans and Germans, with their General, the Count Varaxi, &c.

proceed then: The Queen having Intelligence early in the Spring, that the Spaniard was preparing to make a new Descent upon Ireland with the remainder of their shatter'd Fleet and a few Vessels they had in Gallicia: In order to prevent or divert the Defign, the got ready a finall Fleet, confifting of 10 of her own Men of War, and as many Hollanders. But this number being thought too fmall, it was afterwards augmented, and 5000 Men rais'd, besides 1000 old Soldiers whom Vere had brought out of the Netherlands; so that the Fleet was judg'd to confift of 120 Ships, whereof 17 were the Queen's, 43 were smaller Men of War, and the rest Tenders and Victuallers. They were divided into three Squadrons; the first commanded by the Earl of Effex, who was entrusted with the Management of the whole Expedition; the fecond by the Lord Thomas Howard, and the third was committed to Sir Walter Raleigh; Chirles Blust Lord Monijoy commanded the Land-Forces under Fifex; Sir Francis Vere was appointed Marfhal D Camp, Sir George Carew Lieutenant of the Ordnance, and Sir Christopher Blust first Colonel.

The Earls of Rutland and Southampton, the Lords Grey, Cromwel and Rich, with several Knights and Persons of Quality, listed themselves Voluntiers in this Expedition; and they fet fail from Plimouth on the 9th of July, making a fine Show with their Plumes of Feathers and rich Accourtements, (a Vanity which few Nations imirate the English Soldiers in). Two days after, every Ship receiv'd their feal'd Instructions relating to the Course they were to steer, which was indeed to Farol and the Groine, to furprize the Spanish Fleet in their Harbours, and to intercept the Indian Fleet at the Azores.

This was, upon mature Advice, judg'd to be the best Course for the Security of the Nation, as well as the furprizing the East and West-India Fleet, which had but flender Convoys, as likewife for taking the Azores, a Port at which those rich Fleets do generally touch in their return from the Indies to take in fresh Water : Besides, that by this means the Queen would have the entire Command of the Seas, and the Spanish King, upon the loss of his Fleet, be brought to more reasonable Terms of Peace, or else be oblig'd to make new Provisions for War, to his very great great Detriment and Inconvenience. Effex was resolv'd (as he often declar'd himself) Either to defeat this new Armada, which had threaten'd England for a Tear together, or else to perish in the Attempt, for his Country's sake.

They had not got above 40 Leagues from Pli-mouth, when they were caught in a violent Storm, the Wind blowing hard at North-West, and rending their Sails and Rigging to pieces: It occafion'd likewise so unusual a Darkness, as hinder'd their Profpect on all fides, and that was feconded with terrible peals of Thunder, fo that the Air and Water were in a most troubled state, and so continued for four Days together, infomuch that the Seamen were under a great furprize, and fo Ann. 40. were the Soldiers, for the Fleet was diffipated to that degree, that the feveral Ships had much ado to recover Plimouth and other Ports thereabouts. The Admiral was fo damag'd and batter'd, as to be render'd almost unsit for Service; and some of the Passengers who were of nicer Constitutions, were fo miferably diforder'd by their Sea-Phylic, and fo afraid of the force of the Elements, that they quitted the Service, and did not care to venture a fecond Experiment.

When the Fleet had in some measure recruited itself after its double Loss both as to Number and Strength, they attempted to fail again feveral times, but the Winds continued so unfavourable, that they could not get out in a Month's time, fo that it look'd almost as if the Heavens frown'd upon their Undertaking. By this time their Provisions were pretty well exhausted, and there was no Supply to be had from the Eastern Parts of England under a confiderable time; 'twas therefore thought adviseable to discharge all the Land-Soldiers, except only the 1000 old Soldiers mention'd before, and to difmifs feveral of the leffer Veitels, fince there was no farther Defign upon the Groine or Farel. A Confultation was then held, whether 'twere best to fail away to the Azores? And all subscrib'd to the Assurance tive, except Vere, who faid, 'It would neither be for her Majesty's Honour nor Advantage: ' That 'twas highly improbable that fo few Ships and fuch flender Forces should produce any Effects answerable to these Men's Expectation; and that 'twould be much easier for the Spaniards to invade England, at a time when the Queen's principal Commanders and part of her 'Navy were out of the way. Hereupon Effex and Raleigh rode Post to confult the Queen upon the Matter: Esfex, for his part, proposid great Things, answerable to the Complexion of his Spirit and Courage, if fo be he might be allow'd one half of the Fleet and Army to be at the beck of his Inclinations. But the Queen not thinking fit to grant that, he undertook to defeat the Spanish Fleet in their Port of Farol, would her Majesty permit him to venture the thousand old Soldiers and those two Ships, the St. Andrew and St. Matthew, taken from the Spaniard, in pursuit of the Dengn. He proposed to leave the rest of the Fleet without the Harbour, and to try the Hazard of the Engagement with fome few Ships which he should single from them. But neither would the Queen fubmit to this, unlefs with certain Limits and Restriction; so that at last the whole matter was refign'd to their entire Conduct, with this Provifo, That they should take care, if possible, to set Fire on the Ships in Farol-Harbour, and to intercept the Indian Fleet; and that, upon the whole, they should manage themfelves according to the Nature and Circumstances of every new Turn or Emergency.

Being return'd again to Plimouth, they made parted of this to get clear of the Port on the 17th of Au- another guft, tho with a scanty Wind; but before they storm-got sight of the Spanish Coasts, they were scatter'd by another severe Tempest, in which the large Ship call'd the St. Matthew, having spent her Main-Mast and Yards, split upon a Rock, and the St. Andrew was parted from the rest of the Fleet. The remainder of the Fleet being in a little time got together again, failed in fight of Afturia and Gallicia, but very unadvifedly in the Judgment of fuch as know best; forafmuch as those pompous kind of Discoveries had been of ill Consequence to Drake in his two last Voiages 1197: tagal-Expedition: For an Enemy lotewarth, is Annualo, the better prepared for Defence.

Not far from the Land's-End, the Crofs-yard Raleigh of Raleigh's Ship was broken down by firefs of Sethebind Weather, which as he flaid to mend, the Fleet left him behind; and he happening afterwards the control of the Court of the Cour to receive a falle Intelligence, that the Spanish Fleet were fail'd from Farol towards the Azores, dispatch'd a Pinnace to Essex upon a fruitless Errand, as it prov'd. Whilst they were expecting Raleigh, a general Resolution was taken to quit the Project of Firing the Enemy's Ships in the Harbour as a thing impracticable, because they had been already discover'd from the Shoar. Wherefore they agreed to fail directly for Azores, They steer every Squadron being allotted its proper Station. Effex was to Anchor at Fyal, Howard and Vere at Gratiofa, and Raleigh at Rio, who was by this time shaping his Course for the Azores, and after a long compass fetch'd, recover'd the Fleet at the Ille of Flores, whillt some were apt to charge him with straggling from it on purpose (perhaps with design to inslame Essex the more, who had already but indifferent Thoughts for him). However Essex seem'd to give him a very cheerful Welcome, and excus'd his having fent Letters to England, wherein he had represented him to his Disadvantage, Raleigh being fhort of Water, ventur'd to go afhoar and take fome in without leave; but scarce had he began to fill his Casks, but he receiv'd Orders to follow Effex to Fyal. Thither he fail'd, and not finding Essex there, he narrowly observed the Harbour, and found the Inhabitants were securing their Goods, and the Garifon ready to intrench themselves. He advifed hereupon with the other Commanders, and they jointly agreed to attack the Place; and the Seamen were hot upon the Attempt, as being loth to quit a Booty which feem'd just in their Teeth.

But Sir Gilley Merrick, a Creature of Fsfex's, mightily urg'd them to attempt nothing in the ablence of Effex. They waited therefore his coming for four Days together, when Raleigh, wanting fresh Water, and being befriended by a fair Opportunity, was prompted on both fides to land about four Miles from the Haven, in a very fteep place, and at a time when the Sea run high. He was however accompanied with thefe ingo. In was nowever accompanied with thele Volunties, William Brake, William Harvey, Arthur Goorge, John Scot, Thomas Ridgeway, Sidney, Henry Thims, Charles Morgan, Walter Chute, Bret, Berry, and other Officers. The Spaniards came don upon him, and made what Refiftance they could, but were foon put to flight. Rakigh being thus on Shoar, and having water'd his Ships, march'd forward to the Town through Ways very difficult and dangerous; and finding the Birds were fled, the Town he feiz'd upon the Nest. The next Day Effex, who had been roaming about in quest of the Spanish Fleet, came to Fyal. Sir Gilley Merrick inform'd him what Raleigh had done; and infinuated withal, that he had made this Attempt on purpose to rob him of the Glory of the Action. Which fair Tale, Essex was too ready to liften to; his natural Ambition, join'd with his Jealoufy and Ill-will to Raleigh, having prejudic'd his Thoughts to receive the worst Impreffions against him. Others perfuaded Effex to call Raleigh before a Council of War, and diffmiss him from the Service; and there wanted not fome who were for having him executed, for daring to land his Men without the Admiral's leave, perfuading Effex at the fame time, that he could not not have a fairer Occasion of dispatching his Adverfary out of the way, and which, if he miss'd, he might live to repent it. Hereupon

Effex reproved him sharply for having slighted his Authority, ran counter to the Discipline of the Navy, and so far disobey d those Orders which were enjoin'd upon pain of Death, as to land his Men without the General's command

He answer'd in his own Defence, 'That the Captains, Pilots, and others under Command, were bound by that Law, but not the three Generals, whereof himfelf was one: That he had expected his coming a great while, and would have done fo longer, had not the Inhabitants of the Place denied him Water, which he wanted in that Extremity, that he was oblig'd ro win it by the Sword. The Lord The, Horsard interpofed in favour of Raleigh, that he might notbe feverely Treated, and per funded him with al to acknowledge his Fault; which he prefently did, and so himself and the cashier'd Officers were receiv'd again into Favour. For Estix being of a temper patient and merciful enough as to the point of Injuries, was willing to bury these private Feuds and Discontents in the Publick Safety. But they were rather occasionally laid aside, than totally forgot or suppress'd, as afterwards appear d.

Whilft thefe things were in agitation, the Spanish Garison quitted the Fort near the Town, in which were sound two Englishmen with their Throats cut. Some were fent away to fearch the Island, which they pillag'd here and there, and fo return'd, without performing any great Feats; and a few days after the Town was burnt down to the Ground, after they had carried off the Ordnance found there.

From thence they fail'd away to the Isle of Gratiofa, the Inhabitants whereof threw themfelves on Essex's Mercy, as Flores had done, and Gratiosa for receiv'd Quarter. Here he resolv'd to land, yield to to take a view of that delightful Island, and to Effex. wait for the India-Fleet. But being unfortunately diffuaded from it by one Grave a Pilot, under the pretence of its being no commodious Harbour for Ships, he fail'd from thence with his whole Fleet for St. Michael's Isle, and commanded Vere and Sir Nicolas Parker to be upon the scout betwixt the Island of St. George and Gratissa, the Earl of Southampton and Sir William Mounson to post themselves on the West of Gratiofa, and fome others to wait at other Places. ftrangely it happen'd, that the English had scarce been from Gratiosa above two Hours, before the American-Fleet, confifting of 40 Sail, (7 whereof had Plate on board) arriv'd there, and having Intelligence that the English were not far off, made away directly for Tercera. At Midnight they fell in with Mounson's Squadron, who gave the Fleet a Signal by firing fome great Guns: They were heard a great way, and the Seamen were overjoy'd, and prepar'd themselves very chearfully for an Engagement. Mounson, Southampton and Vere, who were nearest, gave them chase, but at some distance, because they waited for more Ships to come up. In the mean while the Enemy's Fleet got to Tercera in good order, three Ship only being taken, which straggled from the reft : Southampton and Vere attempted to crowd into the Haven with great Boats at Midnight, and to cut the Cables of the nearest Ships, that they might be forc'd to Sea by the Guits which blew from the Shoar. But the Spaniards keeping a very strict Watch, that Project unhappily milicarried. A Pinnace was therefore prefently fent away to Effex at St. Michaels, to inform him what had pass'd, and that they would undertake to hinder the Enemy from getting out that the Spaniards defign was to feize upon fome 1597. to Sea.

Ann.40.

Effex having in a day or two's time got his Fleet together, came and confulted with the other Commanders what Measures were to be taken. Some of the first Officers were for attacking the Town and Fleet, and thought it a very feafible Attempt; and Effex join'd in the fame Opinion. The Seamen thought otherwise, but however very readily offer'd their Service both by Sea and Land. But Effer himfelf and Montjoy, with fome others, having afterwards taken a view of the Place, and finding that the Ships were drawn up closer under the Protection of the Forts, and that the Haven was fecur'd by good fign on the Fortifications and a convenient Situation, with a ftrong Garison, and several Guns mounted, and that the Wind was fo contrary that their Granadoes and Bombs could do them no fervice, they who were most forward in the Proposal, were the most backward in the Adventure. E//ex therefore return'd to St. Michaels, and came to Anchor before Cividada, after having first conferr'd the Honour of Knigthood upon the Earls of Rutland and Southampton, William Evers, William Brodon, and Henry Docwray. The Soldiers being pleas'd with the Place, (as being the chief City of the Island) they had a Month's mind to plunder it; and the General himself, forgetting his Character, took a Boat and sought for a convenient Place to land; but the Sea was too boifterous, and the Shoars too well lin'd with Soldiers to encourage his Attempt. Raleigh was commanded to lie there with his Ships, and amuse the Enemy with the Apprehensions of his Landing, whilst Essen made a Descent in some other Place. He went at last to Villa-Franca, a-bout fix Miles off, a pretty neat Town, well flock'd with Merchandize, particularly Wine and Wood, and the Place he took without any confiderable Opposition. He made here a stay of fix Days, and the Soldiers found a tolerable Booty: But Raleigh expected his return to St. Michaels with some impatience.

Much about this time they discover'd under fail an Indian Carack not far from St. Michael's. which she perceiving by a Signal given from a Low-Country-Veffel, and finding herfelf hard befet by the Enemies Ships, ran herfelf a-ground under the Town, and got out her Cargo as fast as she could, after which she was fet on Fire, and kept burning for two Days together. Thus were the English fo miserably defeated in their Hopes during all this War, that Fortune seem'd to owe them a Spight. And tho' nothing is more common than odd Changes and turns of Fortune at Sea, yet the Disappointments of the English feem'd to have been of their own creating, and their ill Success chiefly owing to a peevish Spirit among them, which studied to prevent or eclipse the Honour of any glorious Attempt. Effex now gave Orders, that all the Ships should, upon a Signal given, make ready to weigh Anchor and fail for England against the 9th of October, which is observed to be a Month of very foul and tempestuous Weather. But three Days after there happen'd a violent Storm, the Wind at North, and difpers'd the Ships to a great diffance; and it had the fame effect upon the Spanish Fleet, which had in the mean time quitted Farol, and had fteer'd another Courfe, with great Defigns and Preparations against England; so that both the English and Spanish Fleets quite lost fight of one another. The English lost not a single Ship, but, 'tis said, the Spaniards lost several of theirs, and had one driven by the extremity of the Weather into Darrmouth-Road, the Seamen and Soldiers being almost famish'd. The Grew confes'd

Port in Cornwal, as lying most convenient, by reason of its situation upon the Mouth of the zinn. + ?. British Channel, both to receive Succours out of Spain, and to keep the English to clote'y employ deflert d in defending themselves at home, that they should here see not be at leifure to make any further Attempts Comadiupon Spain and the West-Indies. Thus did the Almighty, who determines the Events of War, keep thefe two Nations afunder, and baffle their Projects at a time when they were fully and defperately bent upon each other's Ruin. Effer return'd to England about the end of October with no contemptible Booty; but his Ships were miferably batter'd and leaky through badness of Wea-

There were not a few Cenfures, and those piques bevery different ones, pass'd upon this Expedition, tween according as People were inclin'd in regard to Essex and Esex, or from an Aversion to Raleigh. For the Raleigh Queen's Favour, in which they had each a liberal share, happen'd to produce Effects strangely opposite; for it excited in the People a kind of Odium against R.deigh, which was fomented by a jealousy they had of his Unsaithfulness to his Country; and it procur'd on the other fide a mighty Veneration for Essen, which he took care to cherish by all the Artifices of Address, and they to improve through the high Opinion they had conceiv'd of his great Qualifications Most certain it is, that neither of these Gentlemen came short in any instance of Courage, Sagacity or Conduct; But true Happiness is the gift of G.d, and no Man can carve out his own Portion. The Quarrels between these Gentlemen began now to appear more publick and fierce, each taying the blame of the late Milmanagement upon the Effex was likewise very much offended, that Sir Robert Cecil, whom the Queen had the laft Year made her Secretary, tho in fpite of his Endeavours to the contrary, should in his abience be created * Chancellor of the Dutchy of This is Lancaster: For he had always stood in the way of mistaken Marcament, as a Person who was an equal Fitther Match to himself in all points of Policy and good Master to himself in all points of Policy and good Master Freed of Residents in Professional Control of Residents in Professional Control of Profess Management, and a great Friend of Raleigh's into the bargain.

He took it likewise very heinously, that Charles Howard, the Lord-Admiral, was advanced, during his absence, to be Earl of Nottingham, with this Character inferted in his Patent : That by the Victory obtain'd Ann. 1558, be had secur'd the King-dom of England from the Invasion of Spain, and odom of England from the brustlon of spain, and we ther impendent Dangers; and did also, in conjunction with our dear Cousin Robert End of Ellex, size by force the Isle and strongly fortisted City of Cales in the farthest part of Spain; and did likewise entirely rout and defeat another Fleet of the King of Spain, prepared in that Port against thus Kingdom. All this Essential conceiv'd as a diminution of that Honour which he thought to be the right of his own peculiar Defert. And he look'd on it moreover, as a Prejudice to himfelf, that the Lord-Admiral, who being then no more than a Baron, was therefore his Inferior, should now take Place of him under the Privilege of his new Title of Earl. For it was enacted in the Reign of Henry VIII. That the L. Great-Chamberlain of England, the Earl-Marshal, the Admiral, the Steward of the Queen's Houshold, should claim Precedency of all Persons of the same Degree. But the Queen, who always look'd on Effect's Merit through a who always look a on Eigens Ment through a magnifying Glafs, that the night at once eafe his Thoughts, and fortify his Reputation, by giving him the Precedency of the Admiral, tho now advanc'd to an Earldom, was pleas'd to honour him with the Title of Earl-Marthal of Eigenst Mathalot Eigenst Cogland;

This Year arrived in England Paul Dzialin Ambaffador from the King of Poland, a Person of a Posfle Possible Findalia right Polish Affurance, and who express d in his don. Deportment the Genius of his Country. Having had his Audience of the Queen, who exto receive his Master's Thanks for the pected good Offices she had done him, in procuring a Peace for Poland from Amurath the Turkish Emperor, instead of that, he withdrew from her Majety, as the fat in her Chair of State attended with feveral Lords, a great many Paces back-wards, with his Face ftill towards the Queen, till he had got to the lower end of the Room; (a Compliment which I suppose the English Courtiers were furpriz'd at) here he complain'd in a Latin Speech, deliver'd with fome vehemence

That the ancient Privileges of the Prussians and Ha Speech 'Polonians who traded into England, were not coly infringed, but that her Majetty had, contrary to the Law of Nations, prohibited their Commerce with the Spaniards, under which Pretence the Polanders Goods had been feiz'd and foid: That the King of Poland could by no means brook this Treatment, as well, by reason of the Inconveniences which his Subjects fuffer'd thereby, as of the near Alliance there was between himfelf and the King of Spain, and the House of Augeria. They demanded therefore fatisfaction for the Goods which had been arrefted, and an allowance of a free Trade into Sp. in from that time forward. If not, he declard that his Master, the King of Poland, would take a courfe to affert himfelf and vindicate his Subjects, as well as make them repent who had been the Abettors of this In-

juftice. The Queen made him a prompt and pertinent Answer, as a check to his Confidence, much to this effect: 'I confess I am under a Disappointmment, for 1 find an Herald here in the Character of an Ambassador. The Speech you have made, is certainly an Original; for 'tis the first I have heard of the kind; and the Pertness of the Address I cannot help admiring at. But if your Commission extends thus far, (which I much doubt) I prefume 'tis, because the King, o your Mafter, is a young M in as well as a young Prince, elected and not born to the Crown of Peland; fo that he does not rightly understand the quality of these Negotiations, nor what has formerly pass'd betwirt us and his Predeceffor. You, Sir, do indeed, for your part, appear to be better vers'd in Books than Politicks; for whereas you make fo great a buftle in your Speech with the Law of Nations, you must know, that whillt Princes are engaged in a flate of War, 'tis lawful for one Party to intercept the Forces and Succours fent to the other, and to prevent, as well as he can, any mischievous Consequence to himself. This I affirm to be agreeable both to the Law of Nature and Nations, and has been frequently pra-· &is'd, not by us alone, but also by the Kings of Poland and Sweden, in their Wars with Mufcocy. And whereas you lay fuch a mighry threfs upon your Matter's new Alliance with the House of Austria, you may remember that fome of that House would have flopt the King's Prilage to the Throne, and have rested the Scope of Poland out of his Hands. As for other things, I shall leave it to our Conneil to agairy our Will and Pleasure. After this Antwer, her Majesty withdrew into her Privy-€5 militar.

The Queen commanded her Privy-Counfellers, Burleigh Lord-Treasurer, the Lord-Admiral, Sir Robert Cecil, and Sir John Fortescue, to acquaint Dzialin with the following Particulars,

'That the Privileges of the Cities of Pruffia, Privi'as well as the reft of the Hans-Towns, were Council's as well as the reft of the Hans-Towns, were Council's as well as the Reign of answer. justly alienated from them in the Reign of answer. Henry VI. yet the Queen had granted them a Liberty of Trade in common with the English, and any greater Privilege she was not capable of allowing them, unless the should so far act the unnatural Mother, as to cherish other Peoples Children and neglect her own: That to intercept Succours fent to the Enemy, was far from being against the Law of Nations, be-cause the Law of Nature had instructed all Men to defend themselves; and that is a Law not wrote in Characters, but congenial to our very Beings. That those Towns were forbidden to relieve the Enemies of England with any Provisions, by these express Words contain'd in their Articles of Privilege: It shall be lawful for the Merchants aforesaid, to carry, and cause to be carried, their Goods whithersoever they please, as well within our Kingdom and Dominions as without, except to the Lands of our open and pro-feß'd Enemies. Moreover, That 'twas yet fresh in memory, how the Kings of Poland and Swe-den had feiz'd and fold the Ships and Wares of the English, upon a bare suspicion only, that they affifted the Muscovite with Provisions.

Being demanded what he could answer hereunto? he reply'd, That he had it not in his Orders to make any formal Answer, but to deliver the Substance of what was given him in Charge, and then to bring back an Answer. After this he was courteously difmifs'd.

But those of the Hans-Towns interposed so Merchanteffectually with the Emperor, that the English Advantage effectually with the Emperor, that the English Advantage Merchants of the Company, term'd with us Advantage and the Emperor wenturers, were prohibited all Traffick in Ger-Trade in Trade in Company many, because they practifed their Trade and Germany, fold their Wares there by the Laws of Ergland and not those of the Empire. When the Queen had applied to the Emperor by Sir John Wroth, and to the Princes of the Empire by Stephen Lefure, to have this Edict suspended, and Matters brought to a Composition, but without effect, and those the iffued out a Proclamation in London, That of the the same Day the English were commanded to Ham-leave Germany, those of the Hans-Towns should Towns in be prohibited to trade or tarry in London, or any England. other place within the Kingdom of England; and the Lord-Mayor of London was order'd to difpossess all those of the Hans-Towns, of their abode in the City, call'd the Stillyard.

Hereupon they call'd an Assembly of the Hans-Towns at Lubeck, to form an Affociation for preventing, by all possible means, the Trade of the English in Germany and Poland. To hinder which Project, George Carew, a Matter in Chan-Carem cery, was fent into Pruffia, to inform the King feat mo and the Eftates of Poland, and the Cities of Pruf-Poland. Privileges in England, on Condition they would ask them as Favours conferr'd by the Bounty of the Kings of England, and not challenge them as legal Rights or formal Contracts. For Privileges conferr'd by the Courtefy of Princes upon their own Subjects, may be revok'd, and much more those bestow'd on meer Strangers, according as the state of the Times, the good of the Community, and other Reasons and Exigencies may advise and require. That the Hans-Towns had experimentally found this to be true in Denmark and Sweden, and in England too in the Reigns of Edward VI. and K. Philip and Q. Mary: That the Case of Kingdoms and private Cities is vastly different; and that Princes are oblig'd to support and affert their Royal Dignity, and not encourage the Avarice of Merchants, left they fhould grow to be an overmatch to crown'd Heads. This Answer he receiv'd by Letters open and un-feal'd, and some others which the Vice-Chancellor would have deliver'd to him feal'd and made up, he refus'd to receive, because the Queen's Title in the Superscription was not full and entire, being very loth to allow the least Inflance of Difregard to the Dignity of his Prince, which an Ambaffador ought to affert above all things, and even to the niceft Punctilio. From thence he came back to Elbing, which owes a great part of its Beauty and Splendor, and the watt Confluence of People thither, purely to the Trade and Intercourse of the English. Here he had the good luck to compromize Matters in fome measure between the Citizens of that Place and the English Factory. But these Things Place and the English Factory. King of Denmark, and he was attended by Christian Bernick, who brought back hither the Order of the Garter which had been presented by the Queen to Frederick the King's Father, and desir'd likewise, that the ancient Leagues be-tween England and Denmark might be reviv'd, and that the Danes Goods might not be leiz'd at Sea. He complain'd, that the English, contrary to the Treaties, made use of the Fishery of Norway and Ireland, and offer'd his Mafter's Mediation towards fettling a Peace between England and Spain. She gave the Ambassadors a very honourable Reception, promifed a Renewal of the former Treaties, and the Restoration of whatever Goods had been feiz'd, and engag'd likewife, on certain Terms, that no Seizure should be made for the future, and that the Fishing Trade should be regulated according to the Terms and Articles formerly agreed upon: But she thought it no way suitable to the Royal Dignity to make use of a Proxy in procureing Peace from the Spaniard, when the K. of Spain himfelf was the first Aggreffor, and when the was moreover fo fufficiently

This Year was Arnold Whitfield, Chancellor of

fecured in the Courage and Loyalty of her Subever, much less would she condescend to ask it Ann. 40. at a time, when he was engagid in a bloody and barbarous War againft her Ally and Confederate, miens the K. of France. For the Spaniards had now us-took ken Amiens, the largeft and itrongest City of Picardy, by the contrivance of overfetting a Cart in the Gate, which was the Stratagem of Ferdinando Teglio, a Person of a small Stature, but a-dorn'd with a wise Head and a stout Heart; and this had oblig'd the King to ask a fecond Supply of 4000 Men. The Queen was ready to grant it, provided they should be under his Pay; for the Fleer, which was gone to the Leward shads, and her Army in Ireland, had pretty well drain'd her Exchequer. But he protefted he was not able to pay them; and the better and sooner to gain his Point, advertis'd her Majesty by Reaux, That the Pope's Nuncio had made him some advantageous Overtures of Peace, and a full and absolute Reflitution of all Places in France, except only Calice and Ardres, if he would totally abandon the Queen's Interest: And moreover, that his Subjects in general were inclin'd to embrace these Motions.

The Queen replied, 'That she could never believe that fo great a Prince, and one who was fo firmly engaged to her Interest, and so many ways oblig d by her, as himfelf had al-ways acknowledged, and who had likewife gi-ven her the Security of a new Oath, would faffer himfelf, under any Pretence or Colour whatever, to dispense with Oaths so facredly made, and fo folemnly repeated, purely be-cause her own domestick Troubles and Disorders made her uncapable of paying him at pre-fent the Service he expected. This was warmly expostulated with the King by Sir Ambony Mild-may, her Majesty's Residentiary. He was indeed a Gentleman of a true honest English Principle, and would now and then take the freedom to charge the French King's Council with Tricking and Legerdemain; and used to say, That they made a Property of the English, by shifting them off with trifling, loose and ambiguous An-

But forasmuch as several were of opinion, that the King of Spain's grand Delign was to diffolve the Union and good Agreement between England and France, and by that means to gain the Advantage of an easier Descent upon England from Calais; the Queen thought it the most provident Course to send the French King a Supply under her own Pay, on condition he would lay the Scene of War either in Picardy or Bretaign, in order to remove the Enemy farther off; and that he would likewise add a greater number of his own Men, and affign the English a Place of Retreat; for otherwise she would by no means con-fent that the English should be sent abroad merely to be knock'd on the Head, and furnish out a Slaughter-house for the Convenience of the French. However she fent him a great Sum of Money Money; as Security for which, and his other fent to the Debts, he frankly offer'd the Town of Calass, French K. provided the Queen would recover it out of the Enemies Hand, within fuch a time, at her own Expence, and with her own proper Forces: And the better to enable her for the regaining of it, he propounded Bologne as a Retreat, and a Magazine for her Forces, taking it for granted, that Amiens would comply upon easier Terms if the Enemies Forces were divided. But whilft thefe Matters were in agitation, Amiens was, after a long and difficult Siege, most happily reduced; a He reco-Letters dated in September, was greatly owing to Vol. II. Ggggg

the good Management of Baskervil, (who died 1597, during the Siege) and the Bravery of Sir Arthur Ann.40. Savage, another excellent Commander; toge-ther with the Valour of the English: And to make the French King's Happiness yet more com-pleat, the King of Spain being now oppress'd with the double Weight of Age and Business, grew the more inclinable to embrace a Peace: For, when he began to reflect, that the Foundation of his Government was supported rather upon the Pillars of a Popular Reputation than a real Strength; that he had not Money enough to oppose the Designs of the English, to carry on the Low-Country-War, and at the same time to defend his late Conquests in France, and that he was now under a Declension of Years and Strength, his Son but young and unexperienc'd, and the French King a Prince fam'd for Military Skill and Courage, he judg'd it a more prudent Method to treat with the French King about a Peace, (who, through the Pope's Mediation, appear'd at that time not uninclinable thereto) than to leave his Son in the Government of a State miferably embroil'd, and expos'd to fo many powerful Énemies at once: And a Peace was afterwards confummated between them, to their mutual Satsfaction, as shall be made appear in its due place.

As foon as the Queen began to have Thoughts that this Treaty of Peace was on foot, she apprehending it might turn to the Disadvantage of England, resolv'd to provide against the worst Effects, by furnishing her Exchequer with Moneys, and fecuring the Love and Affections of her People.

Having therefore fummon'd the Parliament mental to meet at Westminster, she made several good and acceptable Laws; for restoring and making good any Damages committed upon Country-Farms, and punishing the Transgressors; for prohibiting the converting Arable Land into Pafture; against imbezelling any Goods or Lands bequeathed to the use of the Poor, (a Practice which was become the Scandal and Reproach of the prefent Age) concerning the erecting of Hospitals and Workhouses for the Poor, the Endowments of which not to exceed two hundred Pounds per ann. for preventing the Frauds of the Queen's Receivers, Collectors, &c. for the Relief of Soldiers and Seamen, for building Houses of Correction in every County for Rogues and Vagabonds, for punishing Extortion and Rapes, concerning the Deprivation of Popish Bishops in the first Years of the Queen's Reign, namely,
That the said Deprivation was and should still be accounted legal and valid, and that the Bi-' shops substituted in their room, should be adindged as lawfully created. For paling thefe Laws, and reftoring Religion to a better State, as well as for her Majetty's wife Administration, the Security of the Kingdom from the common Enemy, and the Defence of Ireland, the Relief of France and the Netherlands, the Parliament return'd the Queen a Joint-Compliment of Congratulation.

Sublidies granted.

And, that there might be always a sufficient Fund at hand to answer the Exigencies, and provide for the Defence of the Nation, the Clergy made a voluntary Offer of three Subfidies; and the Laity humbly requested the Queen to accept of three whole Subfidies and fix Fifteenths and Tenths; and intreated her withal, (as they had done in the Year 1593.) not to advance this special Instance of their Bounty into a Precedent, unless upon some pressing Necestity of the like nature.

Ltaware Thomas Lord La-Ware was, arter the reflord, his Father, call'd to attend at this Parliament; and he presented a Perition to the Queen, desiring that he might be reflor'd to the ancient Privileges of his Family and Predecessors the Lords Ann. 40. La-Ware. For his Father, having attempted to poison his Uncle the Lord La-Ware, in Expectation of his Estate, was, by Order of Parliament, in the Reign of Edward VI. excluded from any Estate or Honor, that might accrue to him from his Uncle's Death. The faid William was, in Q. Mary's Reign, condemn'd of Treafon; and afterwards his Attainder taken off, as if he had never been arraign'd: But whereas, by reason of the former Sentence, he could not by Law en-joy the Honour of his Ancestors, he was, by the Queen's special Favour, created Lord La-Ware, by a new Patent; and as long as he liv'd, claim'd Precedency according to the Date of his Creation: The Queen refer'd the whole Matter to the Lords in Parliament; who finding that the former Sentence concern'd only the Person of William, and that his Children were no way involv'd in the fame; and that the Attainder in Queen Mary's Reign was no manner of Bar, because 'twas impossible for him to lose a Title which he never had; besides that he was after-wards fully and entirely restor'd, and the ancient Dignity no way extinct by the new Creation, but only laid aide in his Life-time, because he was not in Possession of it, when he receiv'd his new Patent: For all thefe Reasons, he was adjudg'd to hold the same Rank with his Predecesfors, betwixt the Lord Willoughby of Eresby and the Lord Berkly; wherein he was accordingly reinflated, with the ufual Ceremonies.

A Writ was likewife iffu'd out, to fummon And Tho.

Thomas Howard, the second Son of the Duke of Howard. Norfolk, and lately made Knight of the Garter, to pay his Attendance on this Parliament, under the Title of Baron Howard of Walden. And becaufe he was then indifposed, the Lord Scroop was conducted in his stead into the Upper House between two Barons, in his Parliament-Robes; himself carrying the Writ, and the principal King at Arms ushering him into the House: When the Lord-Keeper of the Great Seal had publickly read the Writ, he was placed below all the rest of the Barons, tho' elsewhere the younger Sons of Dukes take place of Viscounts. For it appear'd by the Records of Parliament, that in the fixth Year of Henry VIII. when Thomas Howard Earl of Surrey, being call'd to the Parliament, claim'd the Precedency of Earls, whether in fitting or walking; because he was the elded Son of a Duke: It was then adjudg'd that he should sit in Parliament, according to the Order of his Creation; and in other Places enjoy the Dignity and Prerogative due to a Duke's elin his Room; but the had Courage as well 159 as good senfe, yet was he to feek in point of Ann. 120 military Conduct. This Promotion of his was befide the general Expectation, especially Norris's, who, by reason of his Deserts and Abilities, had almost promis'd himself this Dignity: But when he faw, that through the Interest of the Court-Party, who were none of his Friends, and the Unitleadiness of those whom he thought fuch, his Corrival was now mounted above him, tho' he had no Reafon to think himfelf much inferiour as to Quality, and knew that he was more than his Equal in respect to the Experience of warlike Affairs: And finding moreover, (to his greater Mortification) that he was continu'd still President of Munster; and being also much diffurb'd, that Tir-Oen had so often imposed upon him by his hypocritical Condescentions; he referred things to deeply, that after all his Conquetts, he was overcome by the most effeminate of his Passions, which turn'd to Distemper, and carry'd him off in a little time. He was beyond all Dispute a Person of incomparable Worth, and as brave a Commander as any this Nation afforded at that time. He was fecond son to Henry Lord Norris, by the Daughter and one of the Heirs of the Lord Williams of Tame; and laid the Groundwork of his After-Experience, in the Civil-Wars of France, under the Admiral Coligny When he was but young, he had the Command of a Regiment in Leland, under the Earl of Effect. He was Colonel of the English Troops in the Service of the States in the Low-Countries, Marshal of their Army under grave Holl ck, Prefident of Munfter twelve Years, tho he was much abfent; and General of the English Forces in Bretagne. All which Places having discharg'd as it became his Character, he deseryd the utmost that Fame could fay, or his Country could do for him.

Tir-Oen finding that Norris had almost quitted his Hopes; as low as his own were funk upon this occasion, yet had he Crast enough to mind his main Chance, and court the new Lord-Deputy, by feveral Letters, to make a Truce with him, or (in the Irifh Phrate) a Cessation of Arms And in truth it appear'd convenient enough to grant one for a Month; the' the Lord-Deputy was always of opinion, that fuch kind of Truces and Protections were pernicious to the Govern-The Month being now expired, the Lord-Deputy got his Forces together and marcht against the Rebels, which seemed to be a Circumstance of Credit and Advantage to him upon his entrance to his new Government; and after a doubtful Skirmish with them in the narrow and difficult Paffes, he forc'd his Way through, and courageously seiz'd upon the Fort L. Deputy at Bl. ckwater, newly fortified by the Rebels, and which was their last and securest Retreat, (the Bogs and Marshes only excepted) betides that it was an Avenue to the Country of Tir-Oen. And this Action was a plain demonstration how easily the Rebels might have been defeated, had there been any to venture upon a vigorous Onfet or Pursuit. The very same day, whilst the Lord-Deputy and his Army were returning God Thanks for their good Succefs, they were alarm'd of a fudden by the appearance of the Enemies Forces from an Hill hard by. Himy Earl of Kildure march'd immediately after them with a Troop of Horse, and some Gentlemen who serv'd as Voluntiers, and prefently put them to Flight. However there were flain on the fide of the Engifh, Francis Vaughan, Brother to the Lord-Deputy's Lady; R. Turner, a flout Man, and Serjeant-Major; and two Foster-Brothers of the Larl of Kildare, for whose death he was so deeply

concern'd, that he follow'd them in a few Days after (it being remarkable, that the Affection of ~ ~ Foster-Brothers in Ireland, is of an extraordinary kind); there were besides a great many wounded, and among the reft Sir Thomas Waller, an emi- E of Kdnent Soldier.

As foon as the Lord-Deputy had repair'd the Fort, supported it with new Breast-Works, and brought his Army home; the Rebels being divided between Hope, Fear, and Shame, thought it the belt way to lay close Siege to it; for it was a Place of great Confequence, for anneying them; and Tr-Oin lock d on himself as absolutely ruind, if it were not recoverd. He therefore closely begint it on all fides, and the Lord-Deputy advanced once more to its Relief; being fully refolv'd to pierce father into Ulifer.

But in the midft of his glorious Advances and Andrew L. Defigns, it pleas'd God to call him off the Stree, Deputy. His Death was much lamented by all good Men, but provid an Advantage to the Malecontent; for, had he liv'd, he had, in the opinion of all wife Men, quite defeated the Hopes of the Fa-ction, and fecur'd Ireland from those Hezards it fell into afterwards. The Rebeis grew very outragious upon the News of the Lord-Deputy's Death, and affaulted the Fort feveral times with great and violent Shouts; but were always repuls'd with Lois, those that scal'd the Walls being thrown down backwards and trodden under foot in the feveral Sallies of the belieged: Infomuch that they began now to despair of taking it by force, and took up another Refolution, to flarve it out by degrees; perfuading themfelves, that there was but a few days Provision left in the Garrison, and that it would be obliged therediffres'd a Condition were they in. The Army

Peace

The One and Fourtieth Vear of ber Reign. 1598. Ann. 11.

In the midst of these Combustions in Ireland, French K. there fprang up new Troubles from the French Quarters: for tho' the King of France had recover'd Amiens, yet being fatigu'd out with the Wars, the daily Importunities of his Subjects, with Spain and the Solicitations of the Pope, he gave the Queen to understand, by Muly, about the end of the last Year, That he had held some Conferences with the Spanish Ministers in relation to a Peace, but was refolv'd however not to make any farther Steps without her Confent and that of the Confederate-States, because he had made with them a League Offensive and Defensive under those Restrictions. He therefore desir'd that fome fit Persons might be dispatch'd from England and Holland to dispatch that Matter, and hear what Propofals were likely to be of-

Commiftioners fent to France.

The Queen, to fatisfy his Christian Majesty, fent away into France her principal Secretary, Sir Robert Cecil, John Herbert Master of Requests, and Thomas Wilks, who died there presently after his landing. The States sent Justin Nassaw and John Oldenbarnevelt, and at the same time some others into England, to dissuade the Queen from any Thoughts of a Peace. The English Envoys had these Instructions given them among others, To enquire out the Ground of these Proposals relating to a Peace, and what Progress was made therein; whether there were really and actually any fuch Overtures made, because the Spaniards had prevaricated in the Treaty of Borburgh: As also what Security the Confederates were like to have if they confented to the Treaty: And to propose withal, (fince the French King had intimated, that this Treaty fhould proceed after the manner of that of Cambray, to restore every one their own) that Ca-6 law should be restor d to the English for the Mo-' ney owing by the French King, which was far more than fo fmall a Town could fairly be va-" lued at. There was also a Clause inserted, 4 That they should come to no Resolutions without the confent of the States. The King was just now fetting out for Bre-

taign, in order to reduce that Country; for the D. of Mercaur and the Spaniards held no good Corre-fpondence, by reason he refus d to deliver Nants into their Hands. Cecil travell'd fast enough to overtake him at Angiers; and after the King had paid his Acknowledgments for the Queen's many Civilities, he spoke to this effect to her Ambas-fador: 'Tho' the Queen has enter'd on a War French K. with Spain, which was begun upon honourable Grounds, and has been carried on with an anf werable Success, yet unless she profecutes it in a way different from the Measures hitherto taken, the longer Purfe must of necessity carry it at the long run. For my own part, though I have a particular Inclination for the Field, as best fuiting the nature of my Education, yet I confider too, that I am a King, and have a People under my Care and Protection, and therefore cannot but make a Conscience of expoling my Subjects to the Hazards and Difficulties of War; and I should think it a great Crime, for any private Ends of Ambition, to reject a Peace when offer'd, to the great Prejudice of my own Affairs, and the general Detriment of the Confederates, especially when otherwise it must cost a great expence of Blood. and bring upon me the Odium of neglecting my Subject's Safety.

Cecil reply'd, 'That the Queen was no way uninclin'd to a Pcace, fince fhe had now made made herfelf a furficient Reparation, as to Spain, and had no other Concern upon her at prefent, 1598. than to fecure her own and her Subjects Tran- Am. 41.

After this, he defir'd to learn upon what Terms the Proposals of Peace with Spain were offer'd, and what Methods must be taken, should the Confederate-States of the Netherlands refule to comply with 'em?

'The King own'd that the Queen had fuffi. K': answ ciently incommoded the Spaniard; but that himself had been a Sufferer: That however the King of Spain was very cordial and fincere in his Motions of a Peace: That he would reitore all the Places he had taken in France, not excepting Calais itself; and that he would in a little time fo order the matter, that the King of Spain should accept a Peace upon reasonable Conditions, both with England and the Confederate States. He farther declar'd publickly, That if he did not close with these Offers of a Peace, his Kingdom must of necessity be embroil'd with fresh Trouble; for he could differn already, that his Subjects were ripe for Mutiny, were ted the Matter with him. But he urged in his own Defence, the Delays used by the Queen, the great Necessity he was under, and the fair

Queen having fome Intelligence of, expoltula-

they but thus provok'd.

During these Transactions, the French King He makes minds his own Business, and claps up an underhand Peace with Spain, and the Articles were privately lodg'd in the Hands of the Archduke Albert, till a Commission came from Spain to make a perfect end of the Business. Which the Opportunity which then prefented itfelf; and feeming to have fomething elfe in his Thoughts, he referr'd the matter to his Council: To whom Oldenbarnevelt made the first Declaration, to this Barnevelt purpose: 'That the Condition of the States was, by God's Mercy and the Queen's Affiltance, fo Council happily fettled, that they had been able his of France. thereo not only to defend themselves, but to lend France some Affistance in her Troubles: That the French King had appear'd very preffing to enter into a League Offensive and Defensive with them; and that they had very readily embraced it upon her Majesty's account, out of a firm hope that a general Peace would enfue from thence; and not dreaming in the leaft that so considerable a Prince would ever have entertaind a Thought of receding from the Treaty: That the States were not flighted and used at that contemptuous Rate, when the Kings of England and France had before now form'd the most facred Alliances with them. He then made out at large, how unweildy the Power of Spain must need grow, and on confequence, how dangerous twould prove to the French, as well as their Neighbours, should the Confederate Provinces, which were so considerable for Wealth and Power, be reduc'd once more under their Government. He appeal'd to the Conscience of the King of France, whether he could in Honour discard their Interest, when he had efpous'd it with fo many repeated Oaths, and they had given him no manner of provocation to break with them? Then, for a Conclufion, he told them, (after many Reasons offer'd for their Non-acceptance of a Peace with Spain) That fome Kings indeed there had been, had fo high an efteem for Grandeur and Prerogative, as to bear none at all to the most solemn Leagues and Obligations; but that the Confequence of fuch Proceedings had generally been fatal; for, where Princes have parted with their Faith and Honour, tis next to impoffible they fhould support themselves by meer Power.

Cecil's

He propos'd however these following Articles | 1598. in the States behalf.

That if the K. would lay afide the Thoughts of a Peace, and undertake the Siege of Calais, they would at the same time attack some other Place at their own Expence, and fo keep the Enemies Forces divided: That they would moreover advance Pay for 7000 Men towards carrying on the Siege of Calais, and furnish out 25 Men of War with all necessary Provision, on condition he would at the fame time fupply 3000 Horse, 6000 Foot, and 6 Pieces of Ordnance.

These things the Chancellor of France own'd to be Propositions of Weight and Consequence and promis'd to make the King acquainted with them, and that all due Civilities should be paid to the Confederates who had deferv'd fo well at the French King's hands; but he replied withal, That France, which had been fo long harrafs'd with the Inconveniences of War, was in no Condition to reject the Offer of a Peace, but ought rather to court it with the utmost Application.

The States absolutely refusing all Proposals of Peace, Sir Robert Cecil, who was empowerd to negociate a general Treaty, could proceed no farther. But he went fo far, as to make it appear to the Council, 'That the Queen had used no Delays, but dispatch'd them as foon as not. no Delays, but dispatch'd them as foon as posfible into France to transact about a Peace; nor did she refuse to assist the King, provided he could carry on the War against the common Enemy, in fuch a way, as might redound to the general Advantage of the Confederates.
That the Necessity, which they took so much pains to amplify, was not fo extremely urgent, fince all France, except a Province or two, were reduc'd to their just Obedience and Subjection. Then, in reference to the Opportunity they were fo loth to lofe, he declar'd, 'That he did not much care to dispute with Perfons who fuffer'd their Word and Honefty to buckle to the Times and Occasions, and make Convenience the measure of a Prince's Honour, as if Profit and Advantage were the only Standard they were to go by. He left it to their own Judgments, whether their Prince had made the Queen a fuitable Requital for her Kindness, when she had referr'd herself to him as an Umpire in the matter, and had of-fer'd him a Supply of 6000 Men, if he appear'd more inclinable to carry on the War, than accept a Peace? Upon the whole, he defir'd another Day to confider and canvass Matters; but that being refus'd, he intreared them to remind his Majesty of the folemn Vows and Obligations he had used in the Earl of Shremsbury's Presence, after the Treaty was concluded, and before, by feveral Letters subscribed by his own Hand. And he ventur'd to affirm, " That the Queen had not receded one Inch from the Articles of the Treaty, but had rather exceeded her own Obligations; whereas the King of France had fluck to nothing. And hereupon he produced a Copy of the Treaty. He likewife recommended to their Confideration, the finding out fome way to repay those vast Sums which had been borrowed of the Queen: for since she was thus abandon'd on a fudden, the was warned tho' by an after-Prudence, to take care of the future, and not lavish her Favours on those who appear'd fo unworthy of them. At length, both he and the rest were dismiss'd with smooth and mollifying Answers; and the King acknowledged the Queen's extraordinary Civilities, and promis'd not to be wanting in any returns of Gratiende the could expect.

The Queen however was much diffariated by thefe Meafures, and would now and then put his Majesty in mind, both by Letters, and her Secretary for the French Tongue, Sir Tho Edmunds, how much he was concern'd, in regard to God, his Honour and Conscience, to make good his Compact, and not suffer himself to be cajol'd by the Artifices of pernicious Counfellors; and among fome graver Reflections, the thought it not amifs to intermix thefe flinging Expressions: 'That if there was fuch a Sin as that against the Holy ' Ghoft, it must needs be Ingratirude: That if ' he obtain'd from Spain any honourable Conditions of Peace, he might thank England for them: That he should not forfake an old Friend for fear the new one should not match him : That folemn Oaths and mutual Compacts were never delign'd for Snares, unless by the worst of Men: That, as a bundle of Twigs, the readiest way to ruin two Friends acting in Conjunction, was to dissolve the Union. These Observations were too true to be any way acceptable to the French King, and he could find no way to answer them, but the pretence of an abfolute Necessity, which made him closely pur-fue the Peace till he brought it to a conclusion, fortunate enough for France; tho' in England the common People used the French King's Name as a Proverb to reproach Ingratitude.

But, to give him his due, he was very industrious to procure the same Terms for England, as a Salvo to his Reputation, and managed the mat-ter with the Archduke charles to get a Truce agreed on for fome Months. He endeavour'd likewife to perfuade the Queen, That whereas he had hitherto been a Burden to her, he would be fure to be her Friend and Security now the Peace was establish d, and would never abandon the Interest of a Sister to whom he had such high Obligations. And to fay truth, he expresd an extraordinary Value and Regard for her, when Fresty of the Peace was treated of at Vervin in France. For Vervin the French were particularly concern'd for her Honour, after the Difpute which happen d the Dispute which happend there between the Commissioners, about Prece-

I have a few Words to offer relating to this Controverty, and hope the Digression may be pardon'd, when 'tis for the Interest of Posterity to have fome light into the matter, which I have borrow'd from the Original fent under the Commissioners Hands to the Archduke. The French Agents peremptorily demanded the first Place, according to a Decree of Pius IV. The Spanish Commissioners would not abide by the Determination, as having been formerly rejected by their Prince; and as conceiving the right of Precedency belong'd to them by the Laws of good Breeding, forafmuch as they were come into a Town within the French Dominions, which they would not have done, bur in pure Respect to the Pope and the Legate his Reprefentative. It was at length concluded by the Interpolition of the Pope's Legate, that he himfelf should fit at the upper end of the Table, and the Pope's Nuncio next him on the right Hand; and then the French had their Choice, whether they would fit on the right Hand next the Nuncio, or elfe next the Legate on the left. They chofe the left Hand, next the Legate: The Agents for Spain were very ready to accept the right Hand, as being the more honourable Place, and the Nuncio was not of their Number, and besides, they thought the King's Honour was by this means preferred to a Nicety: For if Calgariton, General of the Francifeans (a confiderable Party in this Affair) had taken Place of them, and fat above them, next the Legate on the left Hand, whereas, like a modelý modeft Franciscan as he was, he placed himself at 15.58. the lower end of the Board, over-against the Le-Anna-11 gate, they had resolv'd to declare in the open Attembly, that they knew the Place which was due to his Catholick Majetty, and would have preferred it, had they been his Delegares. But from they were appropriate and committened by feeing they were appointed and commissioned by the Archduke, who would not prefume to place himfelf on the level with his Christian Majesty, and were expresly stil'd the Archduke's Delegates in the Letters of Protection they received from the Christian King, they would willingly resign the Place to the French; for the King of Spain, to preferve his own Character, was so prudent to empower the Archduke to depute others in his Reom, left be a ould be driven upon an invidious Conteil of Precedency, immediately with the French King himfelf.

Is foon as the Buline's was compounded, and their Commissions open'd on both Sides, the dike's there was not the least mention made of the Cucen of England, whereas the Duke or Sa-That the was defign'd to be comprehended with But this not fatisfying the the Confederates. French, they faid the Renfon was, Because the had always acted as an Enemy to Spain, and was at this very time annoying them with her Fleet. But neither did this content the French, till they had folemnly engagd their Word, that the King of Spain should appoint some to treat with her Majetty, if there appeared on her fide any inclination towards a Peace.

But the Peace being now concluded between Class 'er France and Spain, the French King, who had hiddlen thereo maintain'd the Reputation of a very Martin tial Prince, being now altogether intent upon Peace, did fo highly advance the Honour and Glory of his Kingdom (which had hitherto been shock'd with the Storms and Convulsions of Civil War) by the defence and support of Religion, both the Catholick and Reform'd, as well as by the encouragement of Learning, the revival of good Laws, the restoration of Traffick, and the adorning the Kingdom with fine and funiptuous Buildings, that he far exceeded the Character of his Predecessors, and obtain'd the Name of Henry the Great.

The Queen being now oblig'd to have a more Erc//b watchful Eye upon her Affairs at home, fent d b.te a Sir Frances l'ere over to the States, to learn whoboutfrace whispan ther they would concur with her in the forming a Treaty of Peace; or if not, what they would contribute towards supporting the War? She likewise began now to be in earnest with them about their paying back what Charges she had been at upon their account.

In the mean while, a very close Consultation First in England, whither it would turn to the kingdom's Account, or not, to admit a Peace with the Sp. mlard? They which were for the Peace, produc'd thefe Arguments to Support their Opinion: 'That belides the Pleafure and Convenience of Peace, 'twould moreover clear the English of a foul Aspersion which lay upon 'em, That they were the general Incondiaries and Diffurbers of Christendom, as if they placed their security and Happiness in the Dangers and Misfortunes of other Men. That the Queen would be more fecure from treationable Plots and Attempts: That it would put an end to an expensive War with Spain and the Arch-That it would be a means to extinguish the high Rebellion, when the Malecontents vere quite shipt of the hopes of Succours from That there would be a free and open ' I rade, for which the Queen and the Kingdom would fare much better: That the Trade dom would have much better? That the Fraction of Spain, which had formerly brought in fuch handform Advantages to the English Merchants, would aggin be open'd to them, and their would again be open'd to them, and their Grain fetch them good current Money: the Emperor would revoke his Mandate against the English Merchants in Germany: It would be the best way to prevent all Broils and Commotions at home, occasion'd commonly by frequent and excellive Taxes and Prefling of Sol-diers: The League of Burgundy would proba-bly be renewed, and fo there would be no ground of Apprehensions from the French Quarter: England would enjoy a little Respite to provide and fortify herself against any suture lmergence. It would likewife make for her Majesty's Honour, who upon the States offering to put themselves under her Royal Protection, anno 1585, declar'd publickly, and in Print, That the aim'd at nothing in the Relief of the Natherlands, but their Freedom, and the Security of England. If it appear'd at that time a wife and reafonable Refolution to Succour the Netherlands, and an act of Justice to wave the Honour of being their Stadt-holder, when 'twas offer'd purely to carry on the Charges of the War; it must now appear an instance of the groffest Weakness to profecute the War, upon a fair offer of Peace from Spain, and not the least shadow of a Proposal from those who find it their Interest to lengthen out the War-Befides, 'twere worth while to weigh these Points: Whether England be really able to maintain a War againtt Spain, in Ireland, in the Low-Countries, and in other Places at the fame time? And, Whether there were any Hopes, by continuing the War, to draw the Spaniard to any more convenient Terms of Peace than what were now offer'd? And this likewife was to be thought on more than once, fince it is without all question, more convenient for the English to make an Offensive War, (it being a wretched Case to be put on the Desence of one's Country at home) What Parts it were best to begin the War in : If on the Coasts of Spain or Portugal, 'twere indeed an easie matter to plunder the Sea-Ports in either Kingdom, but the Expense of keeping them, would eat up the Profit: If the liles of the Express were made the Seat of War; they might, 'tistrue, be very probably reduc'd, and the Spanish King be greatly incommoded by that means, but were not to be preferv'd without too big an Expence : If America, they have Ships now in all those Ports, every way well furnish'd, and the Sea-Coalts are provided with more and ftronger Garifons than before, and there is not a Grain of Gold, Silver or Pearl, but what must be got thro' the Fire: If in the Low-Countries, 'twould be an Undertaking hardly practicable, confidering that Country is fo well flor'd with fortified Towns, and every one of them able to endure a long Siege. Nor was it possible that the States, the the English acted in conjunction with them, could do any more than defend themselves, till the Spanialds were quite drawn off to attend the War with France. And then, twas no true Politick Axiom, in the last place, That they who ere able to stand cut a War, may obtain Peace on their own Terms; whereas they that cannot, must be contented to bear the brunt. It was faither urg d, what Trouble the Athenians and others brought upon themfelves, meerly for refuling the offers of Peace. There were feme likewife who alledg'd, (but it was rather from a perfonal Pique against the Mon, than any real diflike of their Caule) 'That the States, whatever ' pother they make about Religion and Property, do in effect extirpate all Piety, by a general Toleration of all Perfusions, but Popery: Toleration of all Perfuations, but Poperty: Then for Liberty, 'twas but a Cloak for Advantage and Interest, which they most heartily promoted, by laying burdensom Imposts on Provisions, imbasing of Coin, and raising the Value when they pleased, and other Practices of the fame fort: By these Tricks they make a shift to maintain the War on Foot, and enrich themselves by that which all but themselves are great losers by. Besides this, they have erected so many Monopolies, that all Trade and Commerce is in their own Hands; and, like all true Sticklers for Democracy, they hate Monarchy at the bottom of their Hearts, and have extruded all their Nobility, except one or two Persons they make use of in their Wars. And 'tis clear as day-light, they mean nothing more nor less (a dangerous Precedent against crown'd Heads!) than to form themselves into Parties, in opposition to the House of Austria, as the Helvetians did formerly against the House of Habspurgh, to which the other is allied; and this they would willingly do at the Expence, not only of their own Lives, but those of the English, French and Scots, who for the fake of a little publick Fame, are too ready to spend their Blood in other Men's Quarrels.

Those who appear'd against the Peace, proceeded upon these Considerations: 'That the Spaniard would hereby heap fuch a Mass of Treasure, that should he once have a mind to quarrel again, he would prove an over-match for all his Neighbours. That a firm and lasting Peace was by no means to be expected from him, without a Dispensation from the Pope, when he fo grofly trick'd us at Bourburg, ann. 1578, and is of this Opinion to boot, That Faith is not to be kept with Hereticks. That 'tis impossible he should put up the Damages he has receiv'd, without attempting at one time or other to make Reprifals. If a Peace be concluded, the Queen must abandon the States of Holland and Zeland, and fo lose all the Money expended upon that War, or elfe deliver the Cautionary-Towns into the Enemies Hands: The first of which would be to her Damage; and the latter to her Discredit. The States, when she has once quitted their Interest, must of course come under the Subjection of Spain, which would gain thereby a vast accession of Naval and Land-Forces to diffurb England; besides that those Countries would be a very convenient Seat for carrying on a War against their Neighbours, and so confirming and fertling a Spanish Monarchy; admitting the Diffi-culty of maintaining an Offensive War in the Low-Countries, the Uncertainty and Hazard of fupporting it in the Azores, and the little Advantage of carrying it on in Spain or Portugal, and the very great Expence and Charge, be it in any of these Places; yet to have the Seat of War in America, must need sturn to a very gainful Account; for that vaft Country is so thinly flockt with Inhabitants, and they live at fuch Diftances, that they would find it very difficult to relieve one another: Were care taken therefore to land an English Army of 10000 Men in those Parts, there to continue and follow planting, no doubt in the least of reducing Carthagena in Golden Castile, Panama, and the River Chiagre which is navigable up thither, together with Porto Bello; and upon confequence, the Treasure which is transmitted through those Places into Spain from Peru and Golden Castile, must needs be intercepted, or else detained in America. This would be a means to hinder the Spaniards Trade, and leffen the King's Cuftoms, there be any fear of the Natives, for they are great Cowards, and live in an effeminate Cli-Ann. 41 mate; and for the Spaniards who might poffibly be fent thither, they would find themselves too much fat gu'd by their Voyage, and every way in too ill a cafe to disposses old Soldiers of their Garifons and places of Defence. then there could be no fear of wanting Victuals, fince that might be fupplied as eatily from England as 'tis convey'd from Spain. For as foon as it came to be known that they had fettled themselves in those Parts, there would be e-nough from all Nations to furnish them with all Necessaries, for the Europeans defire nothing more than a free and open Commerce with America. Objections against the Hollanders concerning Religion and Monopolies are meer Slanders, and the Inventions of fuch as bear no good-will to the Reformation; for the States do heartily espouse the true Religion, and asfert it, together with their ancient Liberty, and differ in no Fundamental Point from the rest of the reform'd Churches, but agree in all Doctrines relating to Salvation. In things indifferent, and not fo material, they do indeed grant a general Toleration, in compliance with the Condition of the Times, just as the primitive Church did; for it must be expected that some Cockles will grow amongst the Corn. As for other matters, the Mifcarriages of particular Men ought not to affect the whole Body, and the Community ought in all fair Construction to stand exempted from the Faults of any Individual. There were some Corruptions found among the very Apostles, and the Angels themselves were not without Blemish: We ought not therefore to bespatter a wellmanag'd Government, nor discourage and cry down the good Husbandry of a free People if they have stolen the Receipt from the rest of the World, how to thrive and grow rich upon War and publick Disorder.

to his unspeakable Inconvenience.

The Advocates for a Peace, endeavour'd to invalidate these Arguments by others here set down: That the Queen and the Confederates A Reply for Peace. had as fair an Opportunity of laying up Mony, while the Peace held, by which they might make as good a Provision for their own Defence, as the King of Spain could to annoy them: That there was good Reason to expect a firm and lasting Peace with Spain, fince that Kingdom has fuffer'd enough to reflect what ill Steps have been taken in the tyrannical Government of the Low-Countries, and by so do-ing, to correct that Error, by submitting to a Peace. There have been several Treaties of this nature formerly agreed to by the Dukes of Burgundy and the Kings of Cafile, the King of Spain's Predecessors, which had always been duly observed to the real Advantage of the Enduly opierva to the real ravantage of the English Nation. Suppose the King of Spain, to serve a Point of Interest, playd a little saft and loofe in the Business of Bourburgh; 'tis in our Power likewise to treat of a Peace with our Swords in our Hands. There are numerous the Charles of the Peace with the Charles of the C rous Examples of Faith duly kept between Popifh Princes and Hereticks, without the Pope's being made a Party in the Case; witness Charles V. and his Successors, who preserved inviolably their Faith with the excommunicated Protestants of Germany, whom they esteemed Hereticks: As likewise Francis I. K. of France, who folemniz'd the Funeral of Henry VIII, at Paris, tho' the Pope had excommunicated him. And we may instance in Henry the present King of France, who after his Reconciliation to the Church of Rome, and his being adopted for her eldest and dearest Son, made a League Offenfive and Defensive with the Queen of England. Beildes this, the Appetite of Revenge flags apace, the power of Action decays. The Queen may very lawfully and fairly abandon the Caufe of the States, fince she oblig'd herself to protect them no longer than they could procure from the Spaniard convenient Terms of Freedom and Security, which if they would now refuse, she is disengag'd from lending em any farther Assistance. Twas neither a just any farther Affistance. Twas neither a just nor reasonable Demand on their side, That the Cautionary Towns should be deliver'd into their Hands. Twould be easy to recover the Money lent out of the Queen's Purfe, upon account of the War, were but a Peace concluded. Twill require a confiderable time to reduce the Low-Countries under Subjection, and Time may produce a thousand things which at pre-fent are little dreamt of. But if they are reduc'd by a pacifick Treaty, they can never fecure themselves, but by securing their Profit and Interest: But whatever became of 'em, France and England, whilst they acted in Conjunction, would easily ballance Spain, and check any Exorbitance on that side. Publick Conve-' nience would prove the firmest Ligament to keep the Treaty together. In fum, the Reafons for a Peace are deducible from the Law of Nature, which has made Self-prefervation one of her first and most forcible Dictates; and may be fetch'd also from the Law of Na-' rions, which makes the Peoples Safety the highest * Law: And the Christian Law, which is the best and purest Reason, pleads hard against the effusion of human Blood, and for the Union of Christendom, against Pagans and Infidels; whereas the Arguments for living in a ftate of War, (which one would think were effectually confuted by Drake's ill Success, whatever gol-' den Dreams may posses those whose Thoughts are rambling to America) these are meerly bottom'd upon human Wildom, and a politick ' kind of Providence and Forefight as to some future Dangers: But sure 'twere better to com-mit these Issues to the Conduct of a divine Wifdom and Care, and in the mean time direct our Aims and Councils to the publick Good, and discharge an honest Conscience at home, rather than be so intent upon Points which carry a bare appearance of Convenience or Ne-These were the Reasonings and Deceffity. bates on both fides.

Burleigh, the Lord-Treasurer, upon the force of these Arguments, and in respect of certain great and necessary Advantages to ensue from Burleigh declares for Peace. thence, declar'd himfelf for Peace, as well knowing that the Issues of War were precarious, and the Expences great; besides, that the Treasure of England was much wasted, and the People apt enough to grow Mutinous, if they found themfelves loaded with too heavy Impositions; that the common Sort had a natural Aversion to the Nobility, and that there was but little Hopes of any Affiftance from the States; not to mention the Treachery of our own People at home, the little Dependance that was to be fix'd on our Neighbours, and the flowing and opulent state of Spain. So that, as he said, England was like to reap no real Advantage by this War, but only a fort of negative one, which amounts to little more than the shadow of a Good.

Effex

Effer labour'd hard against any Motions for against it, Peace; and having been bred to the Sword, and gain'd fome Reputation by it, he would by no means confent to an Accommodation, but ftifly urg'd the Impossibility of making any honourable Treaty with Spain, or indeed any Terms, but of extending their Empire; that they bore a most inveterate Aversion to England, and profels'd a Religion quite contrary to it; that the Pope's Dispensing Power was unlimited, and that Axiom generally espous'd, that Faith is not to be kept with Hereticks.

Thefe Arguments, and the Apprehension of future Dangers and Inconveniencies, he much infifted on; infomuch that the Lord-Treasurer was provok'd to say, that be seem'd intent upon nothing but Blood and Slaughter. And after a very warm Debate upon this Point, he took out a Prayer-Book, and without using any Words, pointed to this Passage; Men of Blood shall not live

Some however there were who approv'd Effex's Measures, as conceiving he was principally concern'd for the Honour and Welfare of his Coun-Others condemn'd him as a defigning and ambitious Perfon, who was for advancing himfelf and his Creatures at any rate. To silence these Men, he wrote a formal kind of Defence; in which he exhibited what has been already mention'd, and discover'd withal, that Anthony Rolfton, an English Runagado, was fome time be-fore fent into England by the Spanish Ministers, and Creswel the Jesuit, under colour of concerting a Peace, but really and in sact, (as Rolfton afterwards confess'd) to discover the Queen's Military Strength, to embolden the Papists, and by Promifes and Bribes to debauch fome Perfons, especially Esfex, from their Duty and Allegiance.

There follow'd after this a pretty warm Difpute, between the Queen and Effex, about the matter of a Peace, and the choice of some fit and able Persons to Superintend the Affairs of Ireland, at which none were prefent but the Lord-Admiral, Sir Robert Cecil Secretary, and Windebank Clerk of the Seal: For whereas the Queen lookt upon Sir William Knolles, Uncle to Effex, as the most proper Person for that Charge, and Effex contending on the other fide, that Sir Geo. Carery would much better become that Poft; (perhaps on purpose to get rid of him) and when the Queen could by no means be persuaded to approve his Choice; he quite forgot himself and Hi Infohis Duty, and turn'd his Back upon his Prince in lence to a kind of Contempt. The Queen was not able to bear his Infolence, and fo bestow'd on him a Box on the Ear, and bad him go and be bang d. He immediately clapt his Hand on his Sword, and the Lord-Admiral stepping in between, he fwore a great Oath, that he neither could nor would put up an Affront of that nature, nor would he have took it at the hands of Henry VIII. himfelf; and in a great Passion he immediately withdrew from Court. The Lord-Keeper of the Privy-Seal advis'd him in a ferious and confiderate Letter, to apply himself to the Queen for Pardon, alledging, that 'twas the best way to stoop to her Anger for the present, remembring that Passage of Seneca; If the Law punishes a Guilty Person, he must submit to Justice; if one Innocent, he must yield to Fortune. If he had given the Queen a just Offence, 'twas not in his power to make her Amends; whereas if the had done him an Injury, he was oblig'd in Prudence, Duty and Religion, to bear with his Sovereign, to whom he had fo many Obligations, for that there was a vaft dif-ference between a Prince and a Subject. He fent the Lord-Keeper his Answer in a long and passionate Letter, which his Friends did afterwards unadvifedly divulge; wherein he appeal'd from the Queen to God Almighty, in Expressions something to this purpose, 'That there is no Tem-1798. pett fo boilterous as the Referements of an an-2000-LI gry Prince: That the Queen was of a flinty Temper: That he well enough knew what was due from him as a Subject, an Earl, and Grand-Marshal of England, but did not understand the Office of a Drudge or Porter: That to own himself a Criminal, was to injure Truth, and the Author of it, God Almighty: That his Body suffer'd in every Part of it, by that one Blow given him by his Prince: That twould be a Crime in him to ferve a Queen who had given him so great an Affront. What! was it impossible for crown'd Heads to wrong, and fo to fland accountable to their Subjects Was any Power below of an unlimited Nature? And did not Solomon say, that he is a Fool who laughs when he is stricken? They only that are Gainers by the Miscarriages of Princes, were oblig'd to take the Indignities they offer'd; and those who suspected the Omnipotence of the Deity, might, if they pleas'd, place it in earthly Princes; for my part, I have fuffer'd fo many and great Injuries, that I cannot but re-fent them from my very Heart.

However, in a little time he became more Pliant, receiv'd his Pardon, and was readmitted again into the Queen's Favour, who always thought it Favour. a less Crime to offend a Person, than to prosecute him with a perfect Hatred. However, his Friends were apt to date his Ruin from this unlucky Circumstance; having made this Remark, That Fortune feldom Careffes a cast-off Favourite a fecond time; and Princes once dif-oblig'd, are feldom heartily reconcil'd.

The death of Lord-Treasurer

His Cha-

rafter.

Birth.

Esfex receiv'd

In the midst of these Discontents died William Cecil, Lord Burleigh, Lord-High-Treasurer of England, having exhausted himself with Study and the necessary Fatigue of his Employment; fo that growing old, and being troubl'd with the Gout, he requested the Queen's leave to lay down his Place. Upon the receit of his Letter, fhe was pleas'd to pay him fome Visits, and to support him with the most kind and encouraging Expressions. However he resign'd his Soul to God in a very few days after he had liv'd long enough to answer the Demands of Nature, and Reputation, and every thing but the Expecta-tions of his Country. He left the World fo fairtions of his Country. He left the World fo fairly, that the greatest Enemy he had freely declar'd that he envied him nothing, but that his Sun went down with fo much Luttre; whereas generally publick Ministers are not blefs'd with fuch calm and fortunate Periods. He was, without doubt, an extraordinary Person, so liberally furnish'd by Nature, (to say nothing of his Pre-fence and Aspect, which had a commanding Sweetness in them) and so handsomly improved by Learning and Education, that he had few or Probity and Prudence, Industry, Temperance and Justice. He had besides these Accomplishments, an eafy and flowing Eloquence, which confifted not in a Pomp and Oftentation of Words, but in a Masculine Plainness and Significancy of Sence. He was Mafter of a Prudence form'd upon Experience, and regulated by Temper and Moderation; then for his Loyalty, 'twas true and would endure the Touch, and was only exceeded by his Piety, which indeed was eminently great. To fum up his Character in little; the Queen was bless'd in so worthy a Minister, and the Kingdom indebted to his Memory for the happy Influence of his Ministry. Perhaps future Ages may be curious to know the Place of his Nativity, which was at Bourn in Lincolnflire, ann. 1521. His Father was Riebard Cecil of the Family of Alternmi, which belong'd to King

Henry VIII.'s Wardrobe. His Mother's Name ? was Jane; she was an Heiress of the honourable Family of Ekinton, and of the Walcots.

In his younger days, he was a Student at St. John's College in Cambridge, where at twenty Years of Age he married Mary the Silter of Sir John Cheek, a Gentleman of known Learning, and buried her in a Year or two; after which having studied the Law for a Year or two at Grays Inn in London, he married Mildred, the Daughter of Sir Anthony Cook, who was Preceptor to Edward VI. She was a Woman very well vers'd in the Latin and Greek Tongues. Being admitted into the Duke of Somerfet's Family, was Protector of England, he was made his Ma- Preferfter of Requests, being the first, as himself told mente, me, who wore that Title in England: Shortly after, he was Secretary to King Edward VI. and receiv'd from him the Honour of Knighthood. Upon his opposing the pretended Conveyance of the Crown from the Ladies Mary and Elizabeth, he got into Favour of the Former, tho' he was in the Number of those that subscrib'd it; and his dexterous Management preferr'd him to a perfect Intimacy with Cardinal Pool, Tonstal, and Sir William Peter. But whereas he had a real and hearty Veneration for the Protestant Religion, (however he might humour the prefent Occa-fions) and finding the Road to Preferment lay quite another way, he made his Court to the Lady Elizabeth, who made use of him as a necessary ry Instrument whilst she was a private Person, and when she came to the Throne, advanc'd him to be her Secretary and a Privy-Counsellor, and after the death of Sir Thomas Parry made him Mafter of the Wards in the third Year of her Reign; which Office he discharg'd, as he did all others, like a good Husband for the Queen and the Wards, very modestly in respect to his private Advantages, and not unprofitably for his Followers and Dependants, tho' without the least Blemish upon his Integrity; so that the Queen did so far rely upon the Prudence of his Conduct, as in a manner to lay the whole weight of the Government on his Shoulders. His great Interest with the Queen, and a plentiful Estate besides, drew upon him the Envy of some of the Nobility, which, he used to say, was sooner overcome by giving way, than making opposition against it. The Q having had a thirteen Years Experience of his Prudence and Loyalty, was pleased to ho-nour him with the Title of Baron Burleigh, and then to make him Lord-High-Treaturer of England : In which Post he confiderably augmented the publick Purse and his own private Estate, tho' he abhorr'd the base and corrupt Methods of scraping up Money; for indeed he seldom or never suffer'd any thing to be expended, but for her Majesty's Honour, the Security of the Nation, or the Support of forme Neighbouring Al-

He had a strict Eye upon the Farmers of the Customs, but without Harshness or Pedantry. He used to say, That he never car'd to see the Trea-sury swell like a disorder'd Spleen, when the other Parts of the Commonwealth were in a Consumption. he used all possible means (and with good Success) to enrich the Queen and the Kingdom by his Administration, it being a common Expression with him, That nothing could be for the Advantage of a Prince, which makes any way against his Re-putation. Wherefore he would never suffer the Rents of Lands to be rais'd, nor the old Tenants to be put out. The fame Method he observ'd as to his own private Estate, which he manag d with that Discretion and Probity, that he never sued any Man, nor was sued himself. He had by his first Wife, Mary Cheek, Thomas His Iffice now Earl of Exeter, a Person remarkably bless'd in a numerous Isfue. By his last Wife, Mildred Coke, he had Robert Earl of Salubury, who fucceeded him in his most honourable Employments, (an Happiness which is very rare and unusual) belides two Daughters, both of which he outlived, viz. Ann Counters of Oxford, who had three Daughters, Elizabeth Wife to William Earl of Derby, Bridget married to the Lord Norms, and Sulan Wife to Philip Earl of Mongemery, as likewife Elizabath married to William Wentworth, who had no Children. He made his Executors Gabriel Goodman Dean of Winchester, a very Reverend and Worthy Perfon; and Thomas Bellot, his Domeftick Steward, to whom he left a large Sum to be diffributed in charitable Ufes, which was very faithfully perform'd.

The Lord Burleigh's strenuous Endeavours for a Peace, tho' they produc'd not the defir'd Effect, yet did they tend to pare off a great part of the Charge of the War: For when he lay Sick, and almost past recovery, the States sent over John Duvenwoord Admiral of Holland, John Oldenbarnevel: Keeper of the Seals, John Verke, John Heeting, and Andrew Heffel; and joined in the fame Commission Sir Newel Carron their Agent in England, who being mightily for promoting the War, did in the Month of August hold a Conference with Sir Thomas Egerton Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal the Earl of Esfex the Admiral, George Lord Hunsdon, the Lord Buckburst, Sir William Knolles, Sir Robert Cecit, and Sir John Fortefeue, Contmillioners appointed by the Queen, and fubscrib'd to the following Articles: That the Treaty made An. 1585, should be ratified and confirmed, excepting some Articles relating to the Civil Administration: That the Confederate-States should pay to the Queen 800000 l. of English Money, viz. 30000 yearly during the continuance of the War, to be employ'd against the common Enemy, until 400000 l. were paid: And if a Peace were agreed on between the King of Spain and the Queen, there should be paid of the remaining Sum 2000 yearly till the 800000 were fully discharged: That 1150 English Soldiers who were in the Garifons of Flushing, Briel, and the adjacent Ports, should be paid by the States: That they might have the liberty to levy Men in England under English Officers, who should serve under their Pay: That if the Spaniard should make a Descent on the Isles of Wight, Guernfey, Jerfey or Silly, the States should be oblig'd to assist the Queen with 5000 Foot and 500 Horse: That if two necessary to equip a Fleet in England to ferve against Spain, they should provide an equal number of Ships: That if any English Forces were sent over into Flanders or Brabant, they found provide and family out the same number of Men: is for the Money due to Pallavicini, the Queen speal reimburse bevielf from Brabant and Flanders, and the rest of the Provinces which were not within the

Whilst these Matters were treating of between An Emthe English and the States, the Lord Zouch, and bassy Christopher Parkins Doctor of Law, being sent to Denmark. Denmark to Congratulate the King upon his Marriage with the Elector of Brandenburg's Daughter, obtain'd with much ado the Reimbursment of 30000 Dollars, for fome Goods which the Danes had feiz'd belonging to the English Merchants, to the value of 100000 Dollars, on pretence that the English had not acted justly and honestly in the Business of Customs. For it seems there were about this time several Disputes rais'd as to that Matter, and the Queen, suspecting that the King of Denmark acted more favourably by the Spanish than the English, could not forbear complaining, that the Cultoms were rais'd to an unreasonable Height; and he made complaint on the other hand, rhat his Subjects were miferably Abus d and Rifled by the English Pirates, and that the Council of England had a nearer Regard to the Avarice of fome particular Merchants, than to the publick Welfare and Good of both King-

About this time, Philip the fecond King of Cardinal Spain engag'd Infanta Ifabella, his Daughter, to Albert Cardinal Albert, and gave her for her Portion the married to Low-Country-Provinces and the Country of Bur-ta of Spain gundy. Whereupon the Cardinal, having in a folemn way fent back his Cap to Rome, and re-ceiv'd a confecrated Sword from his Holines, made all the hafte he could to Spain. In the mean time, the King of Spain being above Seventy Years of Age, took leave of this World in the end of September, and died much lamented for the evenness of his Temper under all Events. He was a Prince of so wide and extensive an Authority, that there was no Impertinence in his Motto, Sol mili semper lucet, i. e. The Sun shines al-ways upon me. He was likewise a Prince of singular Conduct, through the Benefit of some of his Father's Maxims, which he had applyd and improv'd by his own Experience; but he was generally unfuccessful in the Field; for being himself but of a weak Constitution, he was but flow in Action, and forc'd at last to depend on the Advice of others. By this means, the three The three Keys of the Spanish Empire, for so his Father call'd Keys of Gulesta in Africa, Flushing in the Low-Countries, the Spanish and Cales in Spain. Over which he was advised to Empire. and Cales in Spain, over which he was advis'd to have a watchful Eye, happen'd to be look'd after not fo carefully as they should; for one of them was taken by the Turks, another by the Confederate-States of the Low-Countries, and the third feiz'd upon by the English, to the irreparable Di-shonour of so great a Prince: So that he had good Reason for advising his Son (as 'tis said he did) to make up the Differences with the English and the Netherlanders.

About this time return'd home into England The E. of George Clifford Earl of Cumberland, who had some Cumbertime before furnish'd out a Fleet of eleven Ships land re-Bodley, being at prefent unengaged from Affairs of State, fet himself a Task which would have fuited the Character of a crown'd Head, I River Tayo for the East-Indies; but they hearing at his own proper Expence, in order to inter-turns

Whereupon he fail'd away first for the Canaries, where he took and plunder'd the Iile and Town of Lancerota: From thence he steer'd for Boriquen, and landing his Men, dispos'd them into Order, and made an Attack on Porto-Rico; and when they had taken one or two of the Forts, he made himself Master of the Town with the loss of not above 30 Men, tho' there were in the Town above 400 Soldiers, befides Inhabitants. This Place being for the Advantage of its Situation accounted by the Spaniards the Key of America, he refolv'd to make the Seat of War, and remov'd all the Inhabitants out of it, tho' they of fer'd a plentiful stock of rich Goods, besides gold and filver Place in ranfom for it: But fhortly after the English were so wretchedly handled by the Bloody-Flux and the Griping of the Guts, that in their forty Days stay there, 700 Men were fwept away by thefe Diftempers; fo that he was fore'd to return home with more Honour than Booty, tho' he carried off above 50 Brass Pieces of Cannon: However he did a considerable Damage to the Spaniard, in hindring the Caracks from making their Voiage to the Indies for this Year, and the return of the Spanish Plate-Fleet from America.

Much about the same time was Edward Squire arraigned for Treason; a Man of no Family, and who had rose from a little Pettifogger to be an under Groom in the Queen's Stable, then entred a Soldier under Drake in his last Expedition, and being taken Prisoner and carried into Spain, commenced an Acquaintance with Walpule the Jefuit. Walpole got him into the Inquilition as an Heretick, where having fuffer'd Hardships enough, he was easily perfuaded to change his Religion, and often tamper'd with to diftinguish his Zeal by doing fomething extraordinary for the fake of it. At length the Jefuit told him, by Walpole after feveral Preambles, (as Squire himself con-fels'd) That it would be a meritorious piece of Service to kill the Earl of Effex, but a much no-bler Act to take off the Queen, which he told him might be done without Noise or Danger, by poisoning the Pummel of the Queen's Saddle upon which she was oblig'd to lay her Hand as she

> When Squire had confented to this villainous Project, the Jesuit bound him up by several Vows, under pain of Damnation, to execute and conceal the Design. Thus having given his Inftrument of Wickedness proper Instructions, and fed him with fine Promises of Saintship and Salvation, and given him his Bleffing as an Earneft, he deliver'd him the Poifon; and to prevent any Suspicion on the account of his being just return'd from Spain, he contriv'd that he and another should be employ'd as Agents to redeem fome Spaniards who were at that time Prisoners in England. Not long after he very artificially rubb'd the Poison upon the Pummel of the Queen's Saddle, pretending to be bufy about fomething elfe, and crying out, God fave the Queen; but through God's Mercy the Poifon took not its Effect. Mean while, to avoid all Sufpicion, he litted himfelf under the Earl of Effex, who intended for the Azores, and went out of England a Soldier in his own Ship; and there he befinear'd the Earl's Chair with the fame Poison, but to as little Effect. After this he return'd into England, and liv'd secure and without the least Apprehension that Walpole, his Confessor, would have turn'd Informer against him : But he being, it feems, very much nettled at the ill Success of his Enterprize, and suspecting that 1598. Squire had chous'd him for all his Vows and Engagements, bent himfelf wholly to Revenge; and 'tis most certain, that a Person was sent to England to impeach Squire for Treaton in general Terms. Whereupon (the thing being of that Weight and Importance) Squire was Examin'd, and at first denied the Fact; but being afterwards more closely tax'd upon certain Circumrances, and faspecting that his Confessor had provid a Judas, he freely confess all that Halper pole had contrivid; that he had given his Confess, and how far he had proceeded, &c. However, both at the Bar and at the Gallows he protested, that the' Walpole and others had persuaded him to the Fact, yet he entred upon it with the greateff Reluctancy. Walpole, or fomebody for him, printed a Pamphlet, wherein he utterly denied the whole Sum and Substance of Squire's However the Matter was, there Confession. were fome English Runnagadoes that took mighty pains to work the Ruin of others, and to brand themselves with a perpetual Insamy: For I am concern'd to say, that some of the Clergy had both espous'd and broach'd this pestilent Doctrin, that to take away the Lives of excommunicate Printes, was no more than weeding the Cockle out of the Lord's Field. There was about this time a Gang of diffolute and ill-principl'd Men, who feem'd very well pleas'd with diffurbing the Peace and Tranquillity of the Nation: In order to which, they difpers'd abroad feveral Reports, (upon what Reports Grounds I know not) that the King of Scots was against the a Favourer of the Catholick Religion, and but Kof Scotts indifferently affected to her Majesty's Person and Interest; and to reconcile the more Credit to 'em, the Queen had prefented her the Copy of a Letter to the Pope, written by the Queen's Secretary, a Person of slender Value and Credit, and subscrib'd by the King's Hand, which he had procur'd from him unawares. But the Queen, being not apt to be overcredulous, flighted thefe Whimfies, as the fanciful Projects of fome illdefigning Men, contrivid on purpose to rob him of the Hearts of the Protestants, and present him with those of the Papists in their room. Nay, when one Valentine Thomas, a great De-bauchée, and arraign'd for a certain Robbery, up-Toomas. on his Request to be permitted to offer something of great Consequence in the Queen's Ear, did in a private Audience acquaint her Majesty with the King of Scot's Difaffection to her Interest, fo far was the from giving the leaft heed to fuch idle Rumours, that she look'd on the Author Not crethereof as a meer Slanderer and Incendiary employ'd to fet the King of Scots and her at Variance, or elfe having invented this Story to fave his own Life. The Business she ordered to be fmother'd up, and would not have Thomais executed for fear of drawing any unhandfom Re-flections upon the King; because Calumnies a-gainst crown'd Heads find too easy Credit with the Vulgar. In the midft of these Reports, the Queen sent the King these Heads of Restection to entertain the King these Heads of Kettechton to entertain himself with, viz. Whether there must any Prince who had it in his power to do him more Prejudice or Service than herfelf? Whether he had received greater inflances of Kindaefs and Generafity from any other? Whether he could think of any that had fewer Tarns to ferve upon him than herfelf, who defined nothing at his hault, more than to monte the Hayan of Religion. hands, more than to promote the Honour of Religion, and regard his own Interest and Concernment? There wetten in were likewise several Books dispers'd to affert the King's his Title to the Succession of the Crown of England, (which had been opposed by one John Col-vil, an ungrateful Scotchman, tho he foon after wrote his Recantation) as also to make out that his admission to the Throne would be more com-modious for both Kingdoms, than the feeting up of any other Title, and that for these Reasons.

Because his Title was founded upon the firmest Right; as he was a King already; because it would enlarge the Kingdom of England by the addition of Scotland, a thing fo much and often defir'd; because it would be a means to put an end to the Wars of Ireland and Spain; because it would open a free Trade and Commerce; as he was moreover a Father of Children, which are the main Props and Supports of a Government; and had a Strength sufficient to defend himself and his Subjects; and lastly, because he had the Love and Respect of all the Princes of Christendom. Others endeavour'd to fhew at the fame time the miferable Ends of Ufurpers, and fuch as adher'd to or afferted their Titles, particularly of Richard Nevil Earl of Warwick, who lifted Edward IV. into the Throne, and of the Duke of Buckingham, who put the Crown on Richard III.'s Head; and to urge the Queen to nominate and declare a Succeffor, fuch Expressions as these were scatter'd here and there in the abovemention'd Papers: 'That 'tis not in the power of Princes to rob their nearest Kinfmen of the Crown: That Kingdoms are lineal Rights, and convey'd by Descent: That the native Rights of Children cannot be vacated by their Parents Act of Difinheriting, nor transferr'd by Parliament to one more remote in Blood. Forafmuch as God Almighty did not fpare the Israelites, but gave them over for a Spoil, because in contempt of the House of David, they made Jeroboam, the Son of Nebat, their King; it appear'd that the alienation of a Crown from the next Succeffor was repug-nant to the Laws of God as well as Man. As those who wait for the Reversion of a Crown, ought to expect with Modesty and Patience the determin'd Period of those who possess it, let it be as long as Providence shall think it; fo are the prefent Successors obliged to give their Successors some kind of Assurances, that their Expectations are not precarious, left between fond and disappointed Hopes on the one hand, and repeated Demands and Solicitations on the other, both Parties happen to be tir'd out, and fearce to know which are to complain firft.

But thefe Books were nothing to one put out under the Title of Basilicon Doron, and wrote by Doron, under the Title of Bajucon Doron, and most accu-written by the King to his Son; describing, in a most accu-K James. rate Stile and Method, the Duty of a well-accomplished Prince. Tis fearee credible how much this Piece made him respected and belov'd, and how great Hopes and Expectations were hereupon conceiv'd of him. Queen Elizabeth's opinion of this matter I could never learn; but this I am affur'd of, that the general method she took to allay and qualify the Cares of her Crown, was to write or read fomething every day. She had some time before translated Saluft. de Bello Jugurthino, and now the was taken up in rendring into English the greatest part of Horace de Arte Poetica, and a little Book of Plutarch's de Curiositate, and all under her own Hand; the' at the time time the Rebellion in Ireland was grown to a formidable Height, as I shall make appear, when I have paid what is due to the Memory of 1598. those Gentlemen of most Note who died this Ann.41. Year. They were but three in all, befides the Lord-Treasurer Rurleigh, already mention'd; but they were Persons of that Learning and Worth, which the World has with great Justice reprefented them.

The first was Dr. Thomas Stapleton, born in Suf- The death fex, and brought up in New-College in Oxford, and of Dr. he was likewise Ordinary-Professor of Divinity and Polemicks in the University of Dougy; for in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign he went over to the Netherlands, out of the fingular Zeal he bore to the Catholick Religion, where his publick Lectures and Writings got him a very great Reputation.

The next was Richard Cossis, a Cambridge-man, Dr.Cossis, Doctor of Laws, and Dean of the Arches, who purchas'd himself a considerable Name by the Piece he publish'd in Defence of the Ecclesialtical Jurisdiction.

The last was Edmund Spenfer, born at London, spenfer, and a Student in Cambridge, who had so happy a Genius for Poetry, that he outwent all the Poets before him, not excepting his Fellow-Londoner, Chaucer himself; but through a Fate common to that Fraternity, he was always Poor, tho' he had been Secretary to the Lord Grey, Lord-Deputy of Ireland. For he had fearee fix'd himself in his new Retirement, and had got a little Leisure to pursue his Studies, but the Rebels risled and threw him out of House and Home, so that he return'd into England in a bare Condition, where he died not long after, and was interr'd in Westminster not far from Chaucer, at the Earl of Esfex's Charge. His Hearfe was attended by the Gentlemen of his Faculty, who cast into his Tomb some Funeral-Elegies, and the Pens they were wrote with.

The Rebellion rag'd in Ireland this whole Year: For tho' Tir-Oen had procur'd his Pardon under the Great-Seal of England, having beg'd and obtain'd it at the Earl of Ormand's hands by a welldiffembl'd Submiffion; yet did he surprize and seize on the Fort at Blackwater. The Licute- The Fort nant-General of the Army (there being at prefent at Back, no Lord-Deputy) fingl'd out fome choice Troops mater be and fent them to raife the Siege. They confifted fieged, of thirteen Companies of Foot, under Sir Henry Bagnal, Tir-Oen's profess'd Enemy. On the 14th of August they form'd themselves into three Bodies, and march'd from the Camp near Armagh: The Van was led by the Marshal himself and Percy, the main Body by Cosby and Thomas-Maria Wingfield, and the Reer was brought up by Cuin and Billing: The Horse were under the Conduct of Callisthenes Brook, Charles Montacute and Flem-

They had fearcely march'd a Mile over fome great a distance from one another, with a marshy Plain on one hand and Woods on the other, but Tir-Oen, out of the inveterate Spleen he bore against the Marshal, attack'd his Party very briskly; and having flain him as he fought amongst the thickest of his Enemies, soon surrounded and English vanquish'd that small Body of Men with his un-roused by equal Number, whilft in the mean time they Irr Och. were not observed by their Friends that followed behind, by reason of an Hill which was between them. At the same instant the Gunpow der took fire in the middle Battalion, and blew up and who was maim'd feveral Persons; and Cosby, fent to rally the remaining part of the Vanguard, receiv'd a total Defeat. However, they were brought off by Montacute, tho' with great Diffi-culty and Danger. Wingfield return'd with the

at the fame time: 'Tis most certain, they never receiv'd a more absolute Defeat, tince they first fet Foot in Ireland; For there were slain 13 Stout Captains, and 1500 Common Soldiers, who were shamefully knock'd on the Head, as they were flying or skulking about the Fields: They that escap'd, blam'd the want of Experience in their Commanders, not any Defect of Courage in themselves (a very Modish Excuse, it seems at that Time): Nor, to say the Truth, were the Officers altogether excusable, especially for marching at that Distance from their Ranks, (clean contrary to the Discipline of the Field,) and against an Enemy too, that always fight in Crouds, and Conquer by main Strength, rather than by Art, Conduct or Courage: Soon after, the Fort at Blackwater furrendred; the Garrison, who had held out to the utmost, and were now almost starv'd, despairing of any manner of Succour or Relief.

This Victory was of great Confequence to the Rebels, for it furnish'd them with Arms and Provisions, and got Tir-Oen such a mighty Name, all the Kingdom over, that he was look'd on as the Saviour of the Kingdom, and the Patron of the Common Liberty; And valued himself on that Score as highly as his greatest Flatterers could do. All Munster began now to revolt of a sudden. not fo much, 'tis probable, from any great Hopes they had conceiv'd upon Occasion of the late Victory, as out of a rooted Enmity to the English Planters and Labourers; who had been fettled upon the Forfeited Lands, after the Earl of Defmond's Rebellion, and in Expectation of being Protected at leaft, if the Success did not Answer. For 'twas grown now a most pernicious Fashion in Ireland, for Rebels and Malefactors to be allowed the purchasing of Protections, and Instruments of Indemnity, with the very Money which they had got together by Rapine and Plunder.

To promote and encourage this Defection Tir-Oen sent into Munster Ouny-Mic-Rory, Og-Omore and Tyrell, (the latter an Englishman, but a mortal Enemy to his Country) with a 1000 Men to plunder and ravage the Country; Sir Thomas Norris, President of the Province, advanc'd against him with a pretty good Army, as far as Kilmalock, but perceiving that the Irishmen that ferv'd under him, were projecting a Revolt, and that the new Planters from England could not furnish out above 200 Men, and those without proper Arms, he dispers'd his Forces and retir'd to Cork: Which the Rebels understanding, got together a Pack of Rafcally Fellows, who hock'd in to them from all Parts, and began to waste Munster and pillage the Country, and to fer Fire on the wasted & Castles and Houses of the English Farmers all pluder'd. about, and to flay and Murther all that came in their way; a Thing they could not foeafily have done, had the first Undertakers of those Lands flock'd them with a full Number of Planters, and as well provided as their Contract had oblig'd them. The Rebels taking heart upon these Succeffes, proclaim'd James Fitz-Thomas, a most vi-tious and immoral liver, but a Kiniman of the Earl of Desmond's, Heir of that Title and Dignity, but with this Limitation, that he should still be Vassal to O-Neal, i. e. to the Earl of Tir-Oen; He, it feems, was now so puff'd up with his good Fortune, that he boalted of his Conquetts, in a Letter to the King of Spain, and intreated him withal, that it there went about any Reports of his Transacting a Peace with the English, He would give no Credit to them, for

of that Kind, whatever appearance of Conveni- 1598. eace or Advantage they brought with them, as don't being fully Refolv'd to keep his Word and Faith with the King of Spiin. Nevertheless, he was at the same time, playing his old Game, and Treating by Letters and Meifages full of Trick and diffimulation, about a Surrender to the Lord Lieutenant; But the Conditions he requir'd were most unreasonable.

Sir Richard Bingham was now pitch'd on, as the Sir Richard Bingham was now pitch'd on, as the Sir Richard Person most capable to tame the Insolence of Bingham this Grand Rebel; Forasimuch as his Courage, and good Fortune had been already approved the against the Malecontents in Ireland. He is now therefore fent back thither in the Quality of Marshal of Ireland, and General of Leimster, who had been, but a little while before, turn'd out of his Government of Conaught, (upon some Complaints made of his extream Severity) and fent for into England, and there imprison d on that Account; But he died at Dublin soon after his H s Death, Arrival: He was a Gentleman of an Antient and Noted Family in Derfetshire, but more Eminent for his Experience and Behaviour in the Camp, For he was a Soldier at St. Quintin's, at Conquet in Bretaign, in the Hebrides, at Leith in Scotland, in the Itle of Candie against the Turks, and likewife in France and the Netherlands, befides the good Services which I have already mention'd to have been perform'd by him in Ireland.

The Fourty Second Year of her Reign. 1799

The State of Iroland was at this Time, next to The dedesperate, for the whole Nation almost was up speciate in Arms, some pretended they were abus'd and condition ill-treated by the Garrison-Soldiers; others, the great Fear they were in, from the feveral opposite Factions, which were now grown very prevalent; Some again were ftirr'd up by the good Success of the Rebels, and others were provok'd, because they were left defenceless, and lay exposed to the Robberies and Infults of Thieves and Villains; Some the Priefts cajol'd into Munity, and fome were led into it, through a false Report, spread about by the Head of the Faction, that the Queen was absolutely resolv'd to make a Conquest of Ireland, and to cut off, and destroy them Root and Branch.

'Twas therefore closely debated in England, A Conful-who was the fittest Person to employ, in order tation awho was the attent retroit to employ, in order fation at to fupprefs this Rebellion; The Queen and most boot a of the Council were for Charles Blunt, Lord De-Montjey: But the Earl of Effex dropt an Hint, that all the Experience Montjey had, as to Mar-The End Affilies was considered by the council of River and Affilies. tial Affairs, was owing to his having once had a of Effect Commission in the Low-Countries, and a Second seeks the time in Bretaigne; That he was moreover a Per-Place. fon of a very flender Eitate, and as narrow an Interest, and minded Books too much, to attend the Government; That beland required a Person of the First Quality, and One, who being Con-siderable for Honour, Interest and Estate, might make himself acceptable to the Soldiers, upon which account, an old General would be the most suitable Deputy; which was a broad sign that he thought none to proper as himfelf: Here-But flight upon the Queen refolv'd to make him Lord De- ly refus'd puty of Ireland, and General of the Army. This it he flightly refus'd at first, and defir'd Her Majesty to think on fome Abler Perfon, for a Charge of that Importance; Though at the same Time, he had an Objection ready, against any Person she should have Named: Nay he carried himself at Help to fuch Rate, as made his Advertaries believe he fpe ted of aim'd at nothing so much as the having an Army ambrio at his beck, and engaging the Soldiery to his Interest; fo that fome Persons, observing the eager-1500. nefs and warmth of his Purfaits, were apprehen-Znn. ... five that he had fome dangerous Project in his ~ Head, especially since he treated the Queen with more Intolence than before, as if he had forgot the many Favours the had heap'd upon him; And to increase the suspicion, his Creatures began to make a great Noise about his Descent, as if he was of the Royal Family of the Scots, by the Eldest Daughter of Alan of Galloway, (who at the fame time was not of the Blood-Royal,) and Allied tikewife to that of England, by Cecily Bourchier his Great-Grand-Mother, who was defeended from Thomas of Hoodstock, the Youngest Son of King Edward III. and also from Richard Earl of Cambridge; Upon which account, they pretended that he had a fairer Title to the Crown of England, than any his Corrivals, whose prerentions Doleman had overthrown (except only the Infanta of Spain's Title) in a Book dedicated to the Earl of Effen: Nor was it enough, for them to cry up the Greatness of his Extraction, without running Extravagant Encomiums upon his Courage, his Prudence, his Piety, &c. Thefe particulars were urg'd, to his disadvantage, with all possible Malice and Application, by such as were very willing to get rid of him, fo that they were for lending a Spur to an Ambition, which rather wanted a Bridle, and fill'd his Head with fine Notions of a lafting Fame from Posterity, and the present Love and Veneration of the People; They therefore intreated him to express that Real and Affectionate Regard, he had ever born to his Country, by accepting this Honourable Employment, towards the Discharge of which, they affur'd him of the utmost Services that lay in their Power: But whilft these smooth Tongu'd Adverfaries, were bestowing upon him such high and lofty Commendations, and raifing a mighty Expectation of him in the Minds of Men; They were in the mean time using all Arts to undermine him, as knowing well, that the vehemency of his fpirit would confpire with their endeavours to ruin and undo him, and that there was not any likelier Method to trip up the Heels of an afpiring Man, than to push him upon an Office he was altogether unfit for: To be flort, as quick and penetrating a Person as he was, he either did not, or would not perceive the bottom of their Aims, as long as he thought no Employment too big for his grafp, and his Friends or Flatterers supported him in that Opinion: Hereupon he was to the general fatisfaction, made Lord-Deputy of Ireland, with an unlimited Commission to Carry on, or make End of the War, as he should think fit, and he likewise extorted from the Queen, the farther Liberty of Pardoning Crimes of High Treafon, and if occasion were, to Tir-Oen himfelf: This was an Authority, which in all other Patents Granted to former Lord Deputies, had been limited in these Words, Treasons touching Our Person, Our Heirs and Successors excepted: But it was a prudent Part in him, to fecure this Privilege, because the Lawyers tell us, That all manner

Rebellions touch the Person of the Prince. He had an Army assign d him, as large as he An Army appointed could with, and fuch an one as Ireland had not feen before, confitting of 16000 Foot, and 1300 feen before, confifting of 16000 Foot, and 1300 Horfe, and it was afterwards made up 20000. Indeed he could define nothing but what the officious Treachery of his Enemies was ready to procure for him; And the better to trepan this unfulpecting Gentleman, they took care to fet Spies upon every Action and Expression which puls'd from him, and they were fure to fix feurvy and ill-natur'd Glosses upon whatever they obferv'd; His Inftructions (not to mention fuch as were lefs material, as the Conferring the Honour of Knighthood on none but Worthy Perfons. &c.) were chiefly to purfue the Ring-Leader of the Faction, Tir-Ocn, and to hom him in if possible, by Ann. 42. placing Garrifons at Lough-Foile and Balishannon : This was what himfelf had urg'd, as a very ne-ceffary Point, and he had often charg'd the former Lord-Deputies and Norra with his neglect, also with protracting the War, by allowing such frequent Parleys with the Enemy. A Proclama- AProclaton was diffarched into beland beforehand, De-tion feat claring: 'That the bifb Rebels had fo long a- into behand the Queen's Clemency, that the was 'now confirmed to make use of Her Power, 'to curb and subdue them: But she was fo far from defigning to fubdue them, that she never admitted one Thought to that Purpose, nor had the any Reason for it, because the much greater Part of the Nobility and Gentry, continu'd firm to their Duty and Allegiance; As for those Rebels who submitted themselves, She promis'd them Mercy, but as for those who continu'd obstinate, Death was what they ought to expect: To this Purpose she had made choice of the Earl of Esex, as a proper Instrument to dispense Pardon or Punishment in Her Name; Forasmuch as his Conduct and Courage, his Fidelity and Prudence, had dif-cover'd themselves upon several Occasions. About the End of March, the Earl of Effex set The Earl forward for Ireland, and was accompanied out of of Effex Landon with a Fine Appearance of Nobility and set set. Gentry, and the most chearful Huzza's of the word for Common People; But the Weather happen'd to Ireland. be Rainy, and a Storm of Thunder went before the Shower; The Wind prov'd contrary to him and obstructed his Passage, but at last he arriv'd Safe in Ireland; where having received the Sword, according to Form, he immediately made the Earl of Southampton General of the Horse, clean contrary to his Instructions, and through the Persuasions of some of the Queen's Council there, He leads who lov'd their own Interest to well, he advane'd his Army his whole Army against a contemptible Handful to Munof Mutineers, in the Province of Munster, and ster. quite neglected the Grand Leader of the Rebellion, and all this without the Queen's cognizance. He feiz'd on Cabir-Castle, belonging to Edmund Butler, Baron of Cabir, which being incompass'd by the River Swire, provid a convenient Harbour for the Rebels; And infusid a ftrange Terrour into the Minds of the Inhabitants, by forcing the Rebels into the Woods and Thickets, and driving away vaft Herds of Cattle; how-ever a Party of the English were shamefully defeated, through the Cowardice of some, who of English were under the Command of Henry Harrington, defeated. the Principal of whom, he took care to punish as they deferv'd: He did not return 'till the middle July; by which time, his Men were harafs'd and weakn'd to fome Purpofe, and the Army in a most pitiful Condition. Besides, the Earl himself was much dislatisfied at the Queen's having, in the mean time, bestow'd the advanstageous Place of Mafter of the Wards, upon Sir Robert Cecil, whereas he had a mind to it Effex dif-himfelf. The Queen was as little pleas'd with contented Effects Conduct, through which so many Men had been thrown away; and when she urg'd him to purfue Tir-Oen, who was then in Ulfter; He wrote Her word, that blame ought to lie on the Irish Council, to whose long and thorough Experience in the Affairs of that Country, he could not but readily subscribe; But he promis'd withal, to make the best of his way for Ulfer. Upon the to make the belt of this way for the control wheels of this Express he dispatched another, acquainting the Queen that he was obliged to march out of the way, to Ophalie, a Country near Dublin, to quell the O Coners O-Meils, who were

were up in Arms there; and there he suppress'd 1599 with very little Trouble. Ann. 42.

Upon his Return he found his Army in fo lamentable a Plight, that he was forc'd to press for a new Supply of Men, to attend his Ulster Expedition; and got the Hands of the Irish Council to favour his Demand: He was now fully resolv'd to turn his Forces upon Tir-Oen, and so order'd Sir Coniers Clifford, the Governour of Conaught, to march towards Belick with his Light-Horse, and so put the Rebels Forces into disorder, whilst he fell upon them in another Part; Clifford immediately dispatch'd away with 1500 Men, fatigu'd as they were with a long March, and flenderly provided with Powder, towards the Curlew-Hills, when having pass'd the greatest part of them, the Rebels attaqu'd them unawares, being led on by O-Rork, the Son of him who was hang'd, as was before noted: The English easily repuls'd them at first and continu'd their March; the Rebels follow'd them, and perceiving that their Powder fell short, they charg'd them afresh and put them to flight, for they were too much harass'd by their long March, to make any great opposition: Clifford himself, with Sir Alexander Ratcliff of Ordfal, and several old Soldiers beside, were slain upon the Spot.

In the mean time, the Recruits which the Lord-Deputy requir'd, were rais'd in England, and fent over; but in a very few Days, he fent the Queen Word, that nothing more could be done this Year, beside marching with 1300 Horse and 300 Foot, to the Confines of Ulster.

Affoon as he had got thither, Tir-Oen shewed himself and his Men, at some distance, for a Day or two, upon the Hills, and then sent Hagan to defire a Parley with the Lord-Deputy. He refus'd it, and fent Tir-Oen word, that if he would he might speak with him the next Day, at the Head of his Army: There happen'd then a fmall Skirmish, and after 'twas over, an Horse-man belonging to Tir-Oen's Party, cried out as loud as he could, that the Earl had more a mind to a Parley than to fight, bur did not intend however, that the Conference should be held between the two Armies.

The next Day, as the Lord-Deputy was marching forward in good Order, Hagan met him, and acquainted him that Tir-Oen delir'd a Peace, and threw himself upon the Queen's Mercy, humbly desiring to be heard in the mean time, which if he would pleafe to Grant, he would be fure to attend his Excellency at the Ford of a River, not far off, called Balla Clinch, lying near to Louth, the Principal Town of the County. The Lord-Deputy fent fome Perfons before, to take a View of the Place; they found Tir-Oen there, and he affur'd them, that though there was an high Tide at that Time, yet they might very well hear one another cross the River, whereupon the Lord-Deputy came down alone, after having plac'd a Troop of Horse upon the next Hill: Tir-Oen rode his Horse up to the Belly, and faluted the Lord-Deputy with great respect, who was on the opposite Bank; and they spent near an Hour in Conference, not one Person being admitted to hear them. tweenhim An Hour or two after, Con, the Bafe-Son of Tir-Oen, followed the Lord-Depury, and in his Farher's Name, requested an Interview, and some Men of Quality on both sides to be prefent at it. The Lord-Deputy agreed to it, provided there were not above Six in Number. At the Day appointed, Tir-Oen appeared at the Ford with his Brother Cormack, Mac-Gennys, Mac-Guire, Mac-Cowley, Henry Ovington, and O-Quine; The Lord-Deputy came thicher foon after with the ham St. Leger, Sir Henry Danvers, SIF Edward Wingfield, and Sir William Conftable; All which Perfons Tw-Oen faluted with very great Civing, and dre #2. after the exchange of a very few Words, twas thought convenient that Commissioners thould be appointed to Treat of a Peace the next Days And 'twas agreed between them, that there should be a Ceffation of Arms, from Six Weeks to Six Weeks, and fo on fucceffively, to commence from that Day, and to continue till the First of May: However both Parties were to be at liberty to renew the War, upon giving Fourteen Days Notice, and if any of Tir-Oer's Party, diffented from these Proposals, he left him altogether to the management of the Lord-Deputy.

During these Transactions, the Letter, which

I mention'd a little before, was deliver'd to the Queen by Henry Cuff; by which assoon as Her Majesty understood that the Earl had done just nothing, in so long a Time, with so Brave an Army, and at so vast an Expence, nor was like to perform any thing confiderable that Year, the Queen was much furprized at it, and could not forbeat blaming his Conduct, as rafh and disobled precipitant, Beside the slight and diffespect he by the L. had shewn to Herself: However that was, she Deputy. was heard to fay, (upon what ground of fu-fpicion I cannot determine) That Effex had fomething elfe in his Head, than to do much fervice to his Queen or Country, in that Government: Nevertheless the would not confent to recal him. (as fome perfuaded Her) as concieving it a Piece of Folly indeed, to provoke him at a Time when he had the Sword in his Hand, confidering She had once incens'd him already, and then invested him with a dangerous Authority; But She wrote to him and Her Council in Ireland, to this Effect: ' That She could not fufficiently H-rLetter admire, why the Lord-Deputy had loft to tourn & much Time, and fram'd fo many Excuses and are Counbelays, inftead of doing fome confiderable Ser-cil, vice against the Rebels, for that, when he was in England, he thought it most adviseable to attack Tir-Oen in the first place, and had made feveral Promifes in his Letters, that he would do fo; She therefore demanded the Reafon, why he had, contrary to his most deliberate Opinion, undertook those Expeditions in Munfter and Ophalie, which had prov'd every way to detrimental, without acquainting Her with any part of the Defign beforehand, whereas had she been consulted in the Case, she would have absolutely Countermanded it: If his Army was now fliatter'd and weakn'd, why did he not pursue the Enemy, when it was in a founder Condition? If it was not convenient in the Spring to carry the War into Ulster, certainly the Summer and Autumn were not to be neglected; for one Time or other of the Year could not but answer his Design: The Queen at length forefaw, that the Nation was like to be drain'd and fqueez'd by unreasonable Evpences, and that she should be foully reflected on by Foreiners, for the bad Conduct of this War, and that whoever wrote the History of Her Reign, would transmit this Truth to Afrer-Ages: That She, for her Part, had left nothing uneffected, for the prefervation of Her Kingdom of Ireland; But that Effect on the Con-trary, had done all he could to lofe it, unlets the War were manag'd at another rate hereafter, than hitherto it had been; She therefore roundly charg'd both Him and the Council of that the Government, and not to run into Wild and Prepofterous Measures, upon the Biass of naughty and corrupt Counsels; She likewise Commanded them to give Her an Account of

of the State of the Kingdom from that time, and 1599. 'to provide against such mischievous Consequen-Ann. 42. ces for the future.

The Lord-Deputy was much incensed by these Letters, and could not well digeft fome other Matters with which the Queen had upbraided him to the quick; one of which was, That he had not, according to her Orders, displaced the Earl of Southampton from being General of the Horse: For, it feems, the Queen was offended at Southampton for marrying Elizabeth Vernon, Daughter to the Earl of Effects Aunt, without her Permiflion, which Men of Quality used to ask in such cases. But that which nettl'd him most of all was, the Queen's having made Sir Robert Cecil Mafter of the Wards, as I hinted before. He Forms lade with the Realons to grow cloudy and different Power by forceof Arms; a Design which he per-fuaded himself he should find enough to affist him in, either out of Respect to him, or Fondness for Change and Innovation. But the Earl of Southampton, and Sir Christopher Blunt, who had married his Mother, diffuaded him from this Attempt, as carrying the face of a barbarous, wicked and deteftable Defign.

Whether the Queen had any private Intelligence of this I cannot tell; but this is most certain, that upon a flying Report, which People appear'd willing enough to believe, of a Spanish Fleet's being prepar'd, there were 6000 welldisciplin'd Foot-Soldiers rais'd in London, 3000 of which were to guard the Queen's Person, and the rest to be ready upon any Emergency; and a greater Number was order'd to be levied in the Countries of the briskest and stoutest Fellows that could be found. The Command of the whole Army was given to Charles Howard Earl of Nottingham, Lord-High-Admiral of England, with the Character of Commander in Chief; and his Commission extended as well to forein Énemies,

But in a few days

as Malecontents at home. these Forces were disbanded again.

In a Month's time the Lord-Deputy came o-Effex rever to England in great hafte, and when he was least thought of, being accompanied by some of turns to his best Friends, viz. the Earl of Southampton, who was removed from being General of the Sir Christopher Horse, the Baron of Dunkellin, St. Lawrence, the Baron of Houth's Son, Sir Henry

Danvers, who was not yet recover'd from a desperate Wound he had receiv'd, Sir Henry Docuray, and some other Commanders, besides some other Gentlemen of his Houshold, who disposed of themselves several ways as soon as they arriv'd. The Earl went on to Nonfuch (where the Queen then was) with fix Persons only in his Retinue, on purpose to acquaint her with the State of Ire-The Lord Grey of Wilton, one of his most inveterate Adverfaries, overtook him on the Road, and pass'd by him without any Compliment. And whereas Effex was jealous left he should do him some ill Office at Court, and Sir Thomas Gerard had requested him to the contrary, tho' to no purpose, St Lawrence offer'd his Service to take him off by the way, and to Difpatch the Secretary in the Court; but the Earl abhorr'd fo base an Action, and would not agree to it. But made hafte enough to prefent himself on his Knees before the Queen in her Privy-Chamber, carly in the Morning, and when her Majesty least dreamt on him. She entertain'd him with fome Marks of Grace and Favour, tho' not with that Freedom he used to find. She order'd him to his Apartment, and there to continue; for he had disobliged her before, and had now given ther a fresh Provocation, by leaving Ireland without her permission, and for clapping up a Truce Ann 42. which might at any time be broken at fourteen Days warning; whereas he might have made an entire and final Composition with the Rebels, and was impower'd to give them a general Act of Indemnity. When the Council demanded the Reafons of his making fuch a Truce, his answer was, ' That Excuses Tir-Oen relied fo much on his Forces, that he his Proutterly rejected all Conditions of Peace, unless ceedings. a general Amnesty were granted to all the Rebels, the Irish restor'd to their Estates, at that time poffess'd by the English, and the free Exercise of the Romish Religion allow'd of all over the Kingdom. And these Conditions he persuaded the Queen to agree to. But when every-body disapprov'd these Terms, as very unconscionable, and his sudden return to England rais'd an univerfal Jealoufy concerning him, which was increased by his Enemies at Court by all the Contrivances they could invent, the Queen thought fit to commit him to Custody, but made choice of the Lord-Keeper's House rather than any common Prison, that she might Heis not tempt him to conclude himself an absolutely confindadiscarded Favourite. The reason of his Condiscarded Favourite. finement was the preventing any bad Influence which the corrupt Counfels of defigning Men might have upon him, in reference to the drawing off his Duty and Allegiance yet farther. However he very much refented it, that so ill a Construction should be made of his returning into England with a small number of his Friends; for I have seen a Writing under his Hand, wherein he had methodically rang'd all the Objections which he suppos'd would lie against him, viz. First, That he had ran counter to his Infructions, by delaying his Expedition into Use whereby he had loft his Opportunity, and exhaulted the Queen's Treasure and Forces in the wrong Place. Then, That he had made a Truce directly to the Advantage of the Rebels: And lattly, That he had left the Country in a very unfettl'd Posture, contrary to the Queen's Orders, and with a parcel of Swordsmen at his heels, which was not allowa-

Under the foregoing Objections he subjoin'd these Answers, 'Before my leaving Ireland, I left all things relating to the War in the same State Copy and Posture in which they appear at present, in every Province respectively; and since that the Lord-time, viz. for the space of nine Months, there Deputy. hath no Inconvenience enfued. There can't be tolerable Ground for fuspecting those who attended me into England; for besides that they were very few, their own Occasions oblig'd 'em to a speedy return, and not above six of 'em came along with him to Court. Now was it possible any Harm should be done by such an handful of Men? It would have been as eafy for me to have acted Ill, as to defign Honesty, when I had the whole Kingdom of Ireland under my Command, and a good Army at my beck. Had I entertain'd any Thoughts of Revenge, I had no need to call in the Affistance of others; for he that values not his own Life, has the Lives of other Men in his own cuftody: But I am not to learn whose Maxim that was, Vengeance is mine, I will repay. Must then so much Credit be given to Calumny and Abuse, that my return to England must needs render me a suspected Person, when I have fpent my Blood and Sweat in my Prince's Service, and wasted my Estate for her, and ask'd her Majesty's Pardon on my Knees? I am, there kind of Sufpicions do not commit with either Justice or Charity, unless there were better Grounds for them, especially when " raken up against Persons whose Principles and ' Quality feems to Privilege 'em from fuch Difadvantages. Befides, ought I to fall under a · lealoufy of this nature, who have loft a Farher and Brother in the Service of my Country? I, who have ferv'd her Majesty the space of thirteen Years out of thirty three, and have for feven of 'em been a Privy-Counfellor? I, that have incurr'd and sufferr'd the worst Effects of fome Mens Spleen and Ill-nature, purely for fupporting Religion, and ministring what I could to the Queen's Safety, which they envy at their very Hearts! Is it for my constant Loyalty and good Services, that I stand the Mark of my Adversaries Malice and Revenge; and to fuch a degree, that I cannot promife myfelf any Security any where but in this Kingdom, and that no longer than it shall please God to preserve her Majesty's Life?

Nor was he fingle in these Complaints, but found a great many to second him, and some too He refuses that endeavour'd to rescue him by force from his Confinement, which he ftill countermanded, as delirous to preserve the Reputation and Charaeter of a good Subject. But to return to the Affairs of Ireland.

The Truce agreed on for fix Weeks was scarce expir'd the fecond time, when Tir-Oen got together his difpers'd Forces, and prepar'd to give breaks the his Country new Troubles. Hereupon the Council of the Kingdom fent Sir Will. Warren Kt. to demand the Reasons of this breach of Contract: He made answer in an haughty manner, That he had not broken the Articles, because he had given fourteen Days notice that he would renew the War; and he had just cause to do fo, fince he understood the Lord-Deputy, the Earl of Effex, on whom his hopes of Pardon and Protection entirely center d, was kept in Custody in England: And as for the Council of Ireland, he should have no manner of Regard to them for the future, fince they had dealt fo unfaithfully by him already. That he could not at prefent renew the Truce, if he would, for he had fent O-Donel into Connaught, and others of his Party into other Places. In Distracted the mean while, Reports were spread among the Rebels (and we may venture to guess that Tir-Oen was their Author) that England would soon be involved in new Diforders; and as for Ireland,

Those Englishmen that were stanch and honest, were entirely disheartned when they perceiv'd the Queen's Money had been employ'd to fo little purpose, and they complain'd one against another, that they were shut out from publick Offices and Employments, as much as if they were absolute Foreigners. In the mean time, Tir-Oen made boatting Pretences of afferting Religion and publick Liberty; the Rebels and Malecon-tents he every where Protected, and gave them both Countenance and Affiftance; and to keep 'em fix'd and fleady, he used all Endeavours to bear down the Authority of the English in Ireland, the King of Spain having rais'd both his Vanity and Experience by fending him lately fome Sup-Expectation, by fending him lately fome Sup-plies of Ammunicion, Money and Provisions The Pope likewise furnish'd him with a large stock of Indulgences, bendes mighty Promifes, The Paper, and a Phonix-Plume for Earnell; perhaps be-

were very lavish in the Earl of Esses Commer. dations, and he was made not only the Theme of their Cabals, but by some the Eccho of their Pulpits too. There was likewife feandalous Libels difperfed by these Men, or some of the same Kidney, against her Majesty's Council, the Defign being to wound her through their Sides, by intinuating, that they took little care of the Go vernment, and altogether neglected the State of Ireland.

Hereupon, the Day after the end of Michael L. Kreper mas-Term, when the Council met, as they used the inifto do, in the Star-Chamber, the Lord-Keeper, conduct after a flort Premonition to the Nobility and of the Gentry to go down to their refrective Seats in L.Deputy. the Country, and maintain Hospitality among their Neighbours, and a Charge to fuch as were Justices of the Péace, to punish such as were the the Breakers of it, aud to rettrain, as much as possible, the Disturbers of the publick Tranquillity. And after he had bestow'd a brisk Reprimand upon the Authors of scurrilous, abusive and dangerous Reports, he proceeded to declare how indefatiga-ble her Majesty had been in promoting and re-covering the Tranquillity of Ireland, how oddly and indirectly the Earl of Effect had manag'd himfelf in the Profecution of the Rebels, and what unreasonable and (in respect of the Queen) difhonourable Terms he had made with Tir-Oen, who had hereupon took the Infolence to report. That he refolv'd in a little time to come over to England, and parcel out a good part of it for his own Share.

The Lord Buckhurft, who was made Lord LTresfu-Treasurer in the Lord Burleigh's room, (after responds some sharp Reslections upon the infamous and barefac'd Libels that were abroad) represented, how brave and well-regulated an Army had been fent into Ireland, and how compleatly furnish'd with all manner of Provisions; and likewise, that her Majesty had expended upon this War in six Months time, the Sum of 600000 Pounds, all which the E. of Essex must own to be true.

The Earl of Nottingham, Lord-Admiral, did And Lord likewife fet forth, how the Queen had confulted Admiral, Persons of the best Judgment and Experience, and who were very well acquainted with the State of Ireland, and were not to learn the Temper and Humour of the People of that Nation; and all thefe her Majesty had seriously advised with upon the Business of the Rebellion: That the major part of them were of opinion, that Ulfter was to be reduc'd in the very first place; that the Earl of Fffex was of the fame mind, and had frequently faid, That the young Branches of the Fastion did net so much want lopping, as the Root did to be pulled up; but he was sorry to have occasion to say, that the Earl had acted clean contrary to his Sentiments. He assumed moreover, that five of the Queens Ships, which were fent into Ulfter for present Service, lay six Months together in the Harbour to no pupofe at all.

Secretary Cecil fet forth in the first place her And the Majesty's extraordinary Care in the Defence and secretary Security of her Kingdoms of England and Ireland, by forcing the French out of Sectland, by protecting the 1eform d Religion in France and the Low-Countries, and defending Ireland from the Infults both of the Pope and the King of Spain; and that with so happy Success, that for seven Years before; there had not appear'd one fingle Rebel in Ireland; and the Queen likewife from thence receiv'd greater Revenues than her Father King Henry, her Brother King Edward, or her Sifter Queen Mary had done before her. afterwards to recount at large, how powerful an Army the Lord-Deputy had under his Command, Ann 12. and what a foundalous Defeat Harrington and Clifford (uffer'd: Then, to answer the Cavils of some who pretended, that as absolute as the Earl of Effects Commission was at first, yet twas afterwards retrench'd by private Orders from Lingland, and other Instructions given that did not fo well Iquare with his own Sentiments; and that the Expedition into Minifer, with the neglect of Tir-Oci, were in compriance with the Advice of the Council of Irdand; He alledged, That his Aucantity was not any ways clipp d or leffen'd, nor any new Orders' given him, but what himlest had approved and resolved on from the very beginning. For the truth of which he appeal'd to the Earl of Files himself, and produc'd those very Letters wherein he endeavour'd to excuse his Miscarriage as to Munster: Whether he undertook that March in respect to his own Judgment, or that of the Irijh Council, he must leave to God, the Scarcher of Hearts, the faid Council having given it under their Hands, that they were to lar from perfuading him to that Undertaking, that they did not in the least approve it: whereas fome Perfons were for palliating his abrupt return into Eugland, he could not but own the Queen had, upon his earnest Request, given him leave to return upon any warrantable Occasion; but however, that she did afterwards expresly command him, upon his fending her an Account of the desperate Condition of Ireland, as he tender'd his Duty and Allegiance, not to return hither, till he had given her a facisfactory Account of what he had done in Uisser, and what Perfon he thought most proper to intrust with the Government in his absence. All these Directions he took not any notice of, but pretum'd to return into England, contrary to her Majefty's Command.

In the last place, he repeated the Articles which Tir-Om infilled on, at a time when Succels had bloated him up, of which I have already given some Account. He could not but lament the ill Conduct of that Affair, which Foreiners would not fail to turn to the Diferedit of the English Nation, which had hitherto maintain'd to glorious a Character; besides the Dishonour it might restect upon her Majesty, who had appear'd fo Considerable in the Eyes of all the World: That this Procedure had moreover so flush'd and encourag'd the Rebels, that the next day after the Earl of Effec's return to the Court day after the Earl of Effects return to the Court of England, Tin-One could not forbear using this Expression, That he did not question but he should in a kitle time see as surprising a Change in England as any sige had produced, and that 'twould be his turn then to appear there, and come in for a share with his Neighbours.

What Reasons he had to support himself in fuch Heper, or now he came to the Intelligence of what related to the Earl of Effex, in a few Hours time. he was not, as he faid, able to conjecture. Thus much Cecil.

As for what was faid by others then prefent, I need not take notice, fince all their Declarations were much to the fame purpole. Tis now time to take leave of the Earl of Effec, who being in the Lord-Leeper's Cuffody, began to centre his Thoughts upon things of a divine and heavenly Concernment; and by the pious and devout Strain of feveral Letters which he wrote to his I riends under that Confinement, one might percive that his Mind was unhing'd from earthly Purfeits, and had bid a folemn Adieu to all world-

In the main time Andreas of Austria, Son by the and Million to the Cardinal and Archduke Firdinand, the Emperor Maximilian's Brother, and who acted as Vicegovernor of the Low-Countries in 1599the absence of Albert of Austria, who was gone Ann. 42. into Spain to concert Matters relating to his Marriage, employ'd Charles Lanfranck and Hieronymo The Spa-Camano to negotiate a Peace between the Queen mard and Philip III. King of Spain. The Queen, for Propole her part, shew'd no Aversion to it, provided the King of Spain would appoint a sufficient Commission to treat about it, and if the Confederate Provinces might fome way find their Shares in it: For the lent back word, That the efteem'd it an unpardonable Crime to abandon them, or submit to Terms that might turn to their Prejudice, or her own Dishonour. However, this Proposal of a Treaty provid the occasion of some Jealousies and Milunderstandings between the States and the Queen, because there went about at the same time very Confident Reports, that a new Armada was fitting out in Spain: But 'twas thought that this Blow was diverted by the Holland-Fleet, which took the Isle and Castle of Canary much about that time, and likewise plunder'd the Isle of St. Thomas.

Nor were these Reports without Foundation, for there were several Gallies got ready in Spain, Spanish by the Directions of Frederick Spinola, a Genocle, Gallier who was Master of an Estate too big for a pri- brought vate Man: 'Twas he that perfunded the King of into Fland Spain, when he ferv'd him in the Low-Countries, to fend fome Gallies into Flanders. They were dispatched away under his Command, and cruizing along the Coasts of France, by the advantage of those Etesian Winds, which in the Dog-Days blow generally from the N. W. in our Climate, they got into the Harbour of Scluse in Flanders, without being discovered by the English and Holland Ships that lay ready to intercept em: For they went North about through the Channel; and whether they were driven by the Tide, or were not acquainted with those Parts, or were purely beholden to their Luck, it so happen'd, that they quite defeated the Hopes of the English and Dutch that waited for them. They were indeed ftrangely furprized at first at the Arrival of these Gallies, having found by Experience, in the Year 1545, when Francis I. attempted to no purpose the bringing of them through the Mediterranean to the Coasts of England, that the British Channel was too rough and boisterous to carry such state-bottom'd Vessels. However, they became foon after formidable enough; for they were built by skilful Workmen, much in the form of thofe Veffels which fail'd as far as the Azeres in the Year 1593, which was lookt on as a wonderful Performance. Indeed, they were able to endure a greater Sea than taller or bigger Ships; and were very ferviceable in a Calm, being eafily rowed about with Oars, as occasion required; whereas Veffels of greater bulk, built at a great Expence, were good for nothing when the Wind fell, but to ferve as Marks for the Enemies Shot.

The Rebellion being now got to an Height too great to be suppressed by the Earl of Ormand, who was appointed General of the Army, and Sir George Carem Treasurer, (both of them Lords-Juffices of Ireland) the Queen, who was always Successful in her Choices, in the depth of Winter, and contrary to the general Expectation, was pleafed to fend over Charles Blunt Lord Mentjoy into Ireland in Quality of Lord-Lieutenant, as judging him of a Temper as well Qualified for Government as Duty. He arrived in Ireland in the Month of February with a fmall Retinue, and without any Pomp or Buftle, and found the Kingdom in a very declining and almost desperate state; for Tir-Oen had gone the whole Island over without any Opposition, and pass'd as it were in Triumph from the remotest Part of Ulfter into Menster, as I before observ'd. Having therefore at a short warning got together what Forces he could, (the stoutest Men being then absent in Alwsfer with the Earl of Ormand) he hastned away into Fereal, to intercept and engage him: But Tir-Oen being inform'd of his Defign, (for some of the Queens Council were still too much at his Devotion) prevented him by hafty Marches through difficult and unfrequented Roads. Upon the Lord-Deputy's return to Dublin, he made it his chief Bufinels to felect a Party of brave old Soldiers to ship away to Leugh Foil and Balishanon, near the Mouth of the Lake Erne, that fo Tir-Oen might be shut in and furrounded on all Sides: He likewite took care to furnish the Garifons in Lectic and Ophalic with fresh Supplies, which was a difficult and hazaidous Undertaking, confidering what a vail number of Rebels were dispersed thereabours.

Tir-Oen was in the mean time, kept in play by the Lord-Deputy; and every Skirmish prov'd so unlucky to him, that Fortune feem'd to have chang'd Sides, and to force him upon his old Shifts, to retreat among the Bogs and Marshes. The Lord-Deputy having fix'd these Garrisons, return d in the middle of June to Dublin; and demanded from England some recruits of Provifion, Men and Arms, in order to furnish a Garrifon in Armagh, more on this fide, that the Rebels might be by that means, the more closely ftraitned and block'd up. Mean while he advanc'd towards Leafe, the common Retreat of the Leimster-Rebels, where among others of the lewd Gang, he flew Ony-Mac-Rory-Og, the Chief of the Family of O-More, a Man of a desperate and daring Spirit, and the chief Author of the Late Commotions in Munfter: He then proceeded to fpoil their Country, and drave the Rebels into the Woods and Thickets; fo that few or none of them could flicw their Heads in those Parts. Alloon as the new Recruits arriv'd from Figland, the' he was extreamly ftraitned both for Mony and Provisions, and the Air began to grow very cold in that Climate, the Sun having A fecond got beyond the Aquinox, he march'd once more Mach in into Ulffer, and went up the Streights of Moghery, to Tifter, beyond Dundalk: This is look'd on, to be the most difficult and troublesome Pass, which Nature has made in that whole Kingdom, for it lies among Hills, Woods and Bogs, and all of them clog'd and barricado'd by the Rebels, with Ditches, Planks and Timber, and a fort of Pallifadoes, fill'd up with Stone and Turf, with great Art, and indefatigable industry; beside which, the Waters were out, and made Travelling the more dangerous, by reason of some great and continu'd Rains, which had fwollen the Rivers above their Banks. Affoon as the Warers fell, the English manfully broke through all those Oppositions, and having put the Enemy to flight, and furmounted all Difficulties, the Lord-Deputy creeted a Fort about 8 Miles from Armagh (the Rebels having fpoil'd and ran-fack'd all thereabouts): This he order'd to be call'd Mount-Norris, in memory of Sir John Norris, under whose Conduct, he had learnt the Elements of War, and he made Edward Blany, a Perfon of good Courage and Refolution, Governour of it: By whose means the Malecontents in those Parts, were afterwards severely punish'd, and at last totally suppress'd: In his Return, he gave the Rebels a notable Defeat against Sir Henry Dockwray, and between frequent Skirmishes, and fraudulent and bate Practices, they put him very hard to it; but for all that, his Courage and Bravery carried him fafe through all Difficulties, and he went fo far as to fpoil the little Country of O-Caban, through the affiltance of Arthur O-Neal, the Son of Turlogh; he feiz'd likewife on Dunalong in view of Tir-Oen, and plac'd John Borrles over that Garrison : And not long after he took Liffer Caffle, (to the great regret of O-Donel) by the help of Neal-Garree of the Family of the O-Donels; whom he won to his Interest, by giving him some hopes of the Lordship of Tirconnel, to which he taid an Hereditary Claim; About this time a Spanish Slup arriv'd at Calebeg, with Money and Arms, and the Rebels flock'd to Her as fall as pollible, in hopes of a good Booty, leaving those Parts to be taken and postess'd by the English Garrisons: On the other hand the Lord-Deputy, to lofe no time, enter'd into the Glins, or Valleys in Leimster, in the very midit of Winter, and reduc'd Donel Spaniah, Phelim Mac-Pheoli, and the Mutinous Clan of the O-Tools, of whom he receiv'd Hoffages; he then advanc'd into Fereal, and drove Tirel, the best Soldier of this Rebel-Party, out of his Fastness, (to use their own Term) that is, a Marshy Place all over-run Lord-Dewith Thorns and Briers; at laft he got to Ulfer, puty arthrough many troubletome and winding Paffarires at ges, and had the good Fortune to Conquer fiill as he advanc'd: The first Act he perform'd here, was to walte the County of Ferney, and kill the two Sons of Evar Mac-Cowley; after which, he fent Sir Richard Morrison to destroy the little Province of Fues: In Brenny he fix'd a Garrison, under the Government of Sir Oliver Lambert, and then mov'd away to Drogbeda, and took into his Protection Turlogh Mac-Henry, a Grandee in Fues, Evar Mac-Cowley, O-Hanlon, who pretended himfelf to be Hereditary Standard-Bearer, to the King in Ulfter, together with feveral of the O Raleis, and Mac-Mahom, who fell on their Knees, and tendered him Hoftages.

Thus far did the Lord-Deputy Mentjey, proceed the very first Year; and Sir George Carew Sir George made a Progress in Munster, equally since sful, Caren for he was lately made President of that Sou-does good thern Province of Ireland; which was desperately harafs'd by a Rebellion, which the Titular Earl of Defmond had promoted through every Part of it: For in the first place, he so order'd the matter with the Commanders of the hired Troops from Conaught, (which they call Bounies) that when the Rebels had fent for them, he got Dermitz O-Conor out of the Country by a Wile, fent away Redmund a Burgh, by giving fome hopes of retrieving his Antient Effate, and di-spatch'd Tirell, by allarming him with the Apprehention, of being murder'd unawares; He moreover to dexteroutly fomented a Sufpicion, he had before rais'd among the Rebels, by tham and counterfeit Letters, that they grew jealous and ran away from one another: After this, he and the Earl of Tromond, his Conflint and Inteperable Friend and Affitlant, march'd againft them, took the Tunter Earl, who was referred bir: Sir Charles Wilmer, whom he had made Gover-1600 nour of Kerry, fubdu'd Lixnaw, Cattle Mainy and Ann. 43. Liftwill, and Sir Francis Barkly, took Glanemire. Captain Gream pursu'd the Titular Earl so close, that he was forc'd to quit the Province; and feveral Rebels were frighted into Submillion, by his good and happy Success: and fled to the Queen's Mercy and Protection, and amongst the rest, Florence Mac-Carty, a true Master of the Art of Dissenbling, as most of them prov'd themselves upon this Occasion; for it was discover'd that a great many of them, sent a-way Priests to Rome to ask his Holines's Pardon, for this Tergiversation, (a Term they used for their not perfifting Rebels) and requested a Dispensation for not appearing in open Arms, whilft Matters remain'd in the present Posture : To be Brief, the Pretident, who had found that Province fo miferably out of order upon his Entrance in April, manag'd Things with that Conduct, that by December, all things were in a quiet Pollure, and not one lingle Fort flood out against the Queen.

A new debate concoming a Spain.

Whilst these things were carrying on in Ireand, there was a Consultation held in England, about a Peace with Spain, and it was grounded on the very same Reasons I mention'd ann. 1598. The Arch-Duke Albert, had made a motion this Peacewith way not long before, upon his return from Spain with his Lady the Infanta, when his Holiness presented him with a confecrated Sword. And although the Queen had utterly refus'd, to engage in a Defensive League with the King of Spain, as well as to deliver up the Cautionary Towns, or prohibit a free Trade with Holland and Zealand; Articles which he much infifted upon, nor would She be brought to yield the Point of Precedency to Spain; yet did both He and the French King press for a Peace by repeated Embassies, and indeed the King of Spain, was formost in the Request, for he began now to affect a Peace, not only from Temper and Inclination, but by the Advice and Direction of his Council: He knew in leed very well, that his Father before him, was extreamly defirous of feetling a Peace with England, after he had made one with France; that he might have the Glory of leaving his Kingdoms to his Son, at a time when they were in a fettled State of Peace and Tranquility; and he was likewife perfuaded, that fuch a Treaty would prove to the Advantage of the a Treaty would prove to the Advantage of the Catholick Caufe, and turn to his own Profit and Convenience. Without all donbt, they entertain'd mighty hopes at Rome, (as I found by a certain Piece, written there about that time) that this would occasion a more favourable treatment of the Roman Catholicks in England, who would be permitted upon their Return, to exercife their Religion with more Freedom, and difperfe it to better Advantage. It was thought moreover, that this would conduce as much to his Honour, as the having discover'd a New World did to that of his Predecessors, and that he should find the more Respect and Observance, from the Petty Princes about him, when they found him dilengag'd from the incumbrances of War, so that, he might then sit and act as the Umpire and Moderator of all Europe. Nay that he would likewife prove a Gainer hereby, for by this means, the Estates of Holland and Zealand would be the fooner brought to Reafon, and the Money be spar'd, which went every Year to maintain his Forces in the Netherlands, and to bring home his Indian Fleets; which, provided they made a fafe Return, must needs enrich the Kingdom of Spain: And beside this, the English would by Degrees, throw of their Care, as to Shipping and Navigation, when they found it brought them no Grift from Spain, and this might prove the way to take them Napping, in a golden Slumber of Lafe Am 12. and Pence; when after a long difute, they had almost forgot the Trade and Butmess of War.

Though the Queen was no way ignorant of all this, yet being of Opinion (upon ferious Thoughts) that a Peace would tend much to Her own Honour, and the welfare of the Kingdom, the was contented to refign herfelf to the French King's importunity, and left to him, the appointment of the Time and Place for concluding the Treaty: For the Time, he determin'd the Month of May, and the Place nominated was Bologne, a Sea-Port in France for-merly call'd Bosonia, and Gofforincum Navale. A Treaty And because there was some reason, to guess at Bologn. there would arife fome dispute about the Point of Precedency, there were certain Committioners appointed, to enquire into the Matter and they made an observation, that in the Book concerning the Ceremonies of the Court of Rome, Observed, which (as the Canons observe) is the great consultant Directress and Miltrels of all the other Courts, Presidenthe First Rank among Princes, heldings to the eyelling. King of France, the Second to the King of Landand England, and the Third to the King of Caffile; $p_am. and that the English without Molettation, enjoy'd that Place, in the General Councils of Pifa, Constance, Sena, and Befil, though in that of Bafil, 'twas indeed, unhandformly conrefted by the Emballador of Caffile: Bendes, the Kingdom of Caffile, which is a Title the King of Spain values above all the reft, is but a Young State, in comparison of England, and was an Earldom, not a Kingdom, till the Year 1017, and then the Prince had no folenin Inniquration: That amongst those Princes, who were Styl'd High and Mighty, the King of England was reckon'd the Third, and the King of Spain the Fourth; and that his Holines, Julius III. had pronounc'd in Favour of Henry VII. King of England, against Ferdinand of Castile; that the Queen of England, was both in respect of Birth and Regal Dignity, above the King of Spain, and this was the very Argument, which the Spaniards made use of in the Council of Basil, against Henry VI. King of England; That, in fhort, the Lawyers have jointly refolv'd, That noted the Lawys's new point, and, or by Imme-morial Prefeription, is to be look'd on, as a Fair and Uncontestable Claim; They remark'd further, that

whereas in the First Session of the Council of Trent, under Paul III. there appeared but one Embaffador to reprefent the Person of Charles V. both as Emperor and King of Spain, who in his Mafter's Right, took Place of the French King's Embaffador, the Spaniards have accordingly demanded this Priority ever fince, as well in the Emperor's Right as the King of Spain's, because it had never been disputed against them. At the same time, the English could not forbear taxing the French King's Embassador, with a Point of Indiferetion, for not withflanding it; and entering a Publick Protest against the Emperor's Emballador, should be prefume to take the Precedency of the French King, in the Name of the King of Spain. They observed moreover, that the Spaniards demanded the Upper-hand, in respect of the largeness of their Dominions, and the Extent of their Princes Sovereignty beyond that of others, besides that he had deferved fo highly of the Church of Rome, and had taken Place of the French King, in the Council of Trent in Pins Quartus's Time; though it was done indeed out of Rule: But enough of

Commif-Soneis appointed to Treat

On the Lay appointed, there appear d at Bo-1600. irgu, these Commissioners for the Queen, viz. Ann. 43. 21. Henry Nevill, Her Majesties Leiger in France, folm H. rbert, who was at this time, made one of the Secretaries; Robert Beal, Secretary to the Council in the North, and Sir Thomas Edmunds, Secretary for the French Tongue. For the King of Spain, appear'd Balfhazer Lord of Zuniga-Fonfica, one of the Privy-Council, and Embaifador in the Nuberlands, and Firdinando Carillo, Licentiate of the Order of St. Jago, the King's Sollicitor in Caffile: The Arch-Duke employ d John Richardot, Seigniour de Barler, Chief President of the Council, and Lodowick Verrekein, Auditor and Principal Secretary. The English had these Instructions amongst others; Above all things to take care of the Queen and Kingdom of England, and Welfare and Reputation of the Publick. That, in Point of Honour, they should by no means feld the Precedency to the King of Spain, but allenge it rather, in a Difereet and Sober way, for the Realons already mention'd: That, It the spanish Commissioners would not submit, tome Middle temper should be found, lest the I nglish should be represented, as more concern'd for a Punctilio, than a Matter of Weight and Concerament; They were to propose, for instance the taking Place by turns, and the First to take his chance for it. Then, in regard to Public Good and Advantage, they were to be extreamly careful that the Trade of England and the United-Provincer, were not prejudic'd by any Unjust and Fraudulent Practifes; that the English should enjoy an open and free Trade into the Indies, foralmuch as the same Liberty was granted them, in all the Dominions of Charles V. in the Treaty of 1541. In those Places at least, where the Spaniards have no Plantations, and with those Ludian Princes who are not under their Government: That the Spaniards should offer their Terms, because they had first propounded a Treaty: That as to Rebels and Fugitives, there should nothing be mention'd (tho' according to the Antient Contracts with Burgundy, they were to be expell'd out of the Kingdoms of each Prince respectively, and by that of France, to be deliver'd on demand). But if the Spanish Commissioners should propose it, they should then declare, that none were enrertain'd in England from the Netherlands, but only Merchants and Tradesmen; whereas seve-· ral of the English were supported with Pentions in the Netherlands, on purpose to disturb and cimbioil the Government. Having produc'd on both fides, their Credentiais, the Spaniards made an exception against the Epithet of Most Illustrious, which in those on the trainings Queen's Side, was inferred in the Arch-Duke's Tide, who borrowing his Defcent, as they obferv'd, from Sacred Emperors, and being Brother and Son-in-Law to two Kings of Spain, and Hufband to the Most Serene Infanta Ifubella, Eldest Daughter of Sp.in, was by all Princes Dignified with the Title of Most Serene. The English then alledging, that an Arch-Duke ought not to be on the Level with Crown'd Heads as to Chara-Acr, and that no other Distinction was allow'd in former Treaties to Arch-Duke Philip, Father to Charles V. than that of Most Illustrious; the Spaniards replied, that 'twas no Wonder, if that Age prefented the Arch-Duke with no other Title than that of Mole Illustrious; fince in the very tame Trenty, Hang VIII. Himfelf, was Sould by no other. The English on the other lide, tound thele Haws in the King's Commission. from: That there wanted a Form of Subdelegation, that the Commillion was confusid, and made obleure by a mixture of Commillioners, that

'twas feal'd by the King's privy Signet, whereas her Majesty's was under the Great Seal of Eng- 1600. Lind; and that there was a Claufe miffing, in Ann. 43. reference to the King's obliging himfelf to ratimade antwer, That the form of appointing Subdelegates, was comprized in these Words, par Trattar y Hazar Trattar; that the distinction of Privy and Great Seal was a thing not known in Spain, and that the King's Commillion was fubfcrib'd by his own Hand in the presence of his Secretary, and confirm'd under the publick Seal of the King and Kingdom; and that all Ratifi-cations run in this Form, Eftar y paffar Eftare v pa∬are.

A few days after, the Title of Most Serene to ing inferted in the English Credentials when ever the Archduke was mention'd, the English English Commissioners, who till now had manag'd the lam be Business with those of the Archduke purely by Letters and private Conferences, demanded a publick Meeting in order to a Treaty, and that the Precedency might be allow'd to her Majesty. The Spaniards being offended that the English had made the first Claim, as if 'twere true in such distinct and cales what they use to say, Le premier Demondeur bigutes a seint le Vainqueur; i. c. That the Conquest belongs to the fuff Challenge, made answer, 'That 'twas a ' flrange and unprecedented thing for the Kings of England to be upon the same Foot with his Gatholick Majetly. The English replied. That the Precedency of the Crown of England w.s. known all the World over, and to be maintain dupon good Grounds; and that the Queen's Leiger Ambaffador ought to take Flace of a bere Delegate, as he had a double Power involted in him. Edmunds alledged also, That he had acquainted Richardot before the Conference, that the Queen would not give up the Point of Precedency; and when press'd for an Answer from him, he had nothing to say against it, but said, 'He ' would give his Answer when they came to a ' Meeting; and that he did not think fo small 'a Circumstance would put a slop to the Treaty.

After this the Commissioners invited one another to private Debates at their feveral Apartments, on pretence that their Interviews would be less interrupted, but in reality to trick one another in point of Diffinction and Priority: But this matter funk likewife on both Sides. And tho' the Netberlanders wrought hard to make the Spaniards more complying, yet they could never be brought to admit of an Equality between their Prince and the Queen of England, because he must then of course acknowledge the French King for his Superiour, it being agreed on all hands, that the Kings of England have yielded the Precodency to those of France. However the English held tite to their first Resolution in afferting this ancient honourable Claim, and declar'd withal, that the Spaniards had no Reason at all to take it ill, because to use one's on'n Right, is no Injury to that of another Man; nor could they affign any Reason why they should deny her Majesty at least a Parity of Honour, the being as abfolute a Monarch as the King of Spain, and had as ample if not greater Power and Prerogative within her Dominions.

After this, Edmunds was fent back into England, and return'd with these Directions: 'That if any Method were propounded to adjust the Point upon a Equality of Title, which should New Inbe no way populated to the Queen, they to the fhould admit of it, without infilting too nicely Engish.

upon their first Instruction: That a perpetual ' Peace should be establish'd between both Princes and their Successors, and that no mention ' should be made of a Truce: That Trade should be reduced to the same Foot it was upon Ann. 1565: That it should be solemnly agreed and dim.43 ' fettled, that no Ships should be arrested without the confent of the Prince to whose Subjects they belong d: That they should not upon any Account grant the Spanish Men of War the free use of the Queen's Ports: That if they went so far as to deny a free Traffick in the ' Indies, the matter should be conniv'd at, just as ' it was by the French in the Treaties of Cambresia and Vervin: Every one therefore should be left to venture at his own Cost and Peril: For were a Restraint of this kind allow'd of, the Trade of the English into those Parts would for the future be quite shut up and forestall'd. They were likewise ordered to take no notice of the Rebels and Fugitives, according to the Examples of the French in the Treaties of Blois and Forein. They floudd engage that the English Garifons in the cautionary Towns floud act barely in defence of those Places, without ferving in the Field against the King of Spain. They were to declare moreover, that the Queen was fully refolv'd to preferve the Trade of her Subjects in the Archduke's Provinces, and yet not to recal the English Soldiers, who were in the State's Service, and under their Pay: That they fhould in the last place accommodate every thing to the Circumstances of Time and Place, because they supply Men with better Expedients than they can otherwise apply to every Exigence and Occasion; and that they should have an Eye to the main Drift of the Spaniards in this Negociation, whether 'twere only to amuse the Queen till they could get an Opportunity of Invading England or Ireland, or elfe to win the United-Provinces to their · Party, and unhinge them from the English In-complaint his Head and Hands full of the War in Flanders, complain'd of the Queen's sending Recruits to the States, and preparing Ships for the Indies. The Commissioners answer'd, That they were in the dark as to this; but supposing it true, 'twas no new act of Hostility, but a continuation of what was begun before the Treaty, and was to be dispenfed with till the confummation of a Peace. They retorted upon the King of Spain, his having furnish'd the Irish Rebels with Money and Arms; that he had receiv'd Holtages from them, and promis'd them Supplies: That this was clear enough from his own Letters, which the Rebels fent the Queen to gain her Favour, and which, if they pleas'd, were ready to be produc'd; and that this indeed was a new Encroachment, forasmuch as the King of Spain's Father never ventur'd to relieve them, otherwise than privately and underhand.

In the mean time, the Archduke, who had

Whilft thefe things were under Debate, and both Sides began to luspect that Peace was but a bare Pictence to cover other Defigns, the Spa-nish Commissioners declar'd that his Catholick Majesty would by no means yield up the Priority, or lo much as admit of a Parity of Title, and therefore had expresly order'd them to break off the Treaty. The Archduke's and the Queen's De-Treaty diffoly'd. legates were much concern'd at this Refolution, idioid'd. and therefore to prevent an abfolute Breach, the English propos'd. That the Question of Preceden-New Proc. cy might be laid aside, and they permitted to poss, but treat with the Archduke's Delegates, by Letters, in vain. Conferences, or Messages, as they before had

The Spiniards mov'd, That if they would agree to a Meeting to be had in Holland, and the States to assist at it, they would come to a Treaty in any place in Holland not under the Queen's Possetsion: Or if they would Confer in any Part (of the Spanish Dominions, they would entertain the English with all the Respect and Civility one to Strangers.

There was likewife a Motion Itarted, to have the Bufiness put off for fixty Days, which would rather look like a Discontinuance than a mean Dissolution of the Treaty; and in the mean time all Parties fhould apply themselves to bring Matters to an Accommodation, if both Princes thought lit: But all this was to no purpofe, for immediately did the Spanish and Archduke's Commissioners hatten home before they were look'd for, and the Queen likewife calld back hers, having first made her publick Protest : 'That for had done all that became a good Christian and a free Princefs to fettle a firm and latting Peace, to prevent the shedding of any more Christi th Blood : And tho' there were fourty and futpicious Appearances of foul Play and unfincere Dealing, forafinuch as there were Supplies of late fent to the Rebels in Ireland, yet at their request she did not refuse to fend Commissioners to the Treaty : And fince the flev no reafon to give the Spaniard the Upper-hand, as the had intimated to Edmunds before the Treaty, the had infitted upon an Equality; and if they would not fubmit to that, The was willing ftill to carry on the matter by the interchange of Messages and Papers. Thus, after three Months time, did the Treaty of Bologne dwindle into nothing

Mean while, the States having been Success. The States

ful beyond Expectation, were so far from har-defigns bouring any desires of Peace, that they were Seartowns studying at the very instant to possess them. in Flor-selves of the Sea-Coast of Flanders, the better to ders. guard their Trade, (Spinola's Gallies being very bufy at Sea) as also to relieve Oftend, the only Town they had in Flanders, and which was begirt and hemm'd about with feveral Forts and Sconces rais'd by the Spaniards. These Projects appear'd very feafible, the Enemies Affairs being in an ill Condition, and the old Soldiers at the fame time bent upon Mutiny or Revolt. Having therefore made up an Army of 14000 Foot and 3000 Horfe under the Command of Maurice of Nessau, and engaged the Chief of the States to act in conjunction with him, they refolv'd to land at Oftend; but the Wind being contrary, they difembark'd at low Tide at Philippine-Sconce in Flanders, by the advantage of their Flat-bottom'd Boats, wherein they got to Land at high Water; and their landing pur People into fuch a general Consternation, that the Garifons furrender'd as fast as they approach'd them, nor excepting the strong Fort of St. Albertus near Oftend; and on the 8th Day after, they waded o-ver a fmall Ford, and got to Newport without Newpore any Difficulty. The next Day, just as they were attempted ready to fit down before it, the unexpected News was brought them, that the Archduke was march- Archduke ing towards them with 7000 Foot and a 1000 comes to Horfe: For it feems he follow'd them clotely Night and Day, regain'd most of the Sconces, defeated 800 Scots that were placed in the way to intercept his Passage, and cut off their harrafs d and itragi'd Troops almost as far as Newport. Here the Spaniards thought convenient to make an Halt to recover Albertus's Sconce, and to draw a Trench in order to cut off Supplies of Provifion from Maurice's Army. But this was look'd on as a cowardly Project by the Archduke, who was too much flush'd with his good Fortune to liften to it. On the other hand, Maurice had dif-pos'd all things for an Engagement: The Foot, which composed the Van, he committed to the Conduct of Sir Francis Vers, (as he himfelf has given it us in his Commentaries) and the Horfe 1630. Was Commanded by Count Lodowick of Naffau: Ann. 3. A Resolution was then taken up to repass the Tord as soon as the Tide servid. Vere forbid his Men to ftrip themfelves, affuring them, that in a little time they flould either get better Cloaths or need none at all. He then fought out a piece of Ground most convenient for the Battel, being a narrow Plain between the Sea and fome Banks of Sund, which rofe to a pretty Height to Landward as well as towards the Sea. The English were placed in the highest part of these this, being not above 1500, with 2500 Musketeers of Friesland. Maurice now propos'd whether 'twere better to advance forward against the Enemy, or wait for them in that Posture: And most were of opinion, 'twas the best way to march on, that being the likeliest method to surprize the Enemy, and carry the Day; whereas by waiting their Approach, their own Party would be disheartned, and the Enemy take the Advantage; befides that, they would gain the Opportunity of better fortifying themselves, and of cutting off any prospect of Provisions or Retreat. Vere was of a different Judgment, and thought that the Enemy's Army, which was rais'd in hafte, could not possibly be in a Condition to hold out long in a Country which the War had left bare and unfurnish'd: That on their own Side, there was no reason to sear a Scarcity, for they had Provifion enough in their Ships, and an open Sea to convey what they wanted: That the Enemy being fatigu'd by the hot Weather, and a long March up and down steep and tiresom Hills, would be easily routed by fresh and unharrass'd Forces.

Grave Maurice approv'd of these Measures, and fix'd in the Place where he was, having appointed some Companies to prevent a Sally from the Garison of Newport. He likewise order'd the Shipping to Thear off to a greater diftance, that his Men might grow Bold upon Necessity, when they had lolt the hopes and prospect of any Retreat. Then he began to dispose his Men into Order, and placed fix Pieces of Canon before the first Battalien. The Archduke had got by this time pretty near to Newport, and held an Hour or two. Debate, whether twere best to stay there or give his Men some Refreshment, and wait the coming up of the Troops which were still behind; by which means he loft his Advantage both as to Time and Place. However he had conceiv'd Hopes which made him advance with great Cheerfulness; and finding the Pass too narrow, by reason of the coming in of the Tide, for his Horfe, which could now find no other way than by those fandy Hills, he dismiss d a Prisoner on purpose, who was to alarm the Enemy, by crying that the Scors were all put to the Sword, and that the Archduke would not fland an Engagement; but his Mouth was foon ftopt. Vere's Advice was, to fend out the Cavalry to ftop the Enemy's approach; but the General of the Horse, unwilling perhaps that Vere should reap the Glory of that Design, withstood it: The Canon therefore was by Vere's Orders drawn down upon them, and the Enemy receiving a speedy Defeat, retir'd to the Hills, and there waited for the coming up of their Foot, who march'd along the Shoar, and now and then play'd on Maurice's Men with their great Guns, the Ships at the fame time discharging upon them as the Tide came in. By this time they were oblig'd to double their likes the Place was so narrow, and being put in-to fome Difforder, they were forced to climb the tills till they were almost spent. Pere took his Poll on the top of the formost Hill, that he might Liv the Locativ's Motions from above, and 500

Spaniards endeavouring to gain the Accent in a confus'd and diforderly manner, the Fright 1000. Musketeers receiv'd 'em with a Volley of Small-Ann.43. fhot, and drove 'em back; after which there happen'd a kind of wild Skirmish, such as the Battle of Newport. unequal rifings and descents of the Grounds thereabouts would admit of, the Sand being fo loofe and yielding that they could not take any lure Footing. However, the Fight was briskly main-tain'd by Supplies of fresh Troops on both Sides, each Party mounting the Hills by turns, and gaining a kind of alternate Conquest. Vere, whilft he acted the Part of a good Commander and Soldier, receiv'd a Wound in his Leg and another in his Thigh fome time after, both which he conceal'd for fear of discouraging his Men; and his Forces were fo hard prefs'd, that they were forced to retreat under their Canon by the Sea-shoar, and he himself being forced to follow 'em, had his Horse shot under him, which fell and lay upon him, till Sir Rob. Drury and Higham helpt him up, and mounted him upon Drury's Horfe, and that at a time when the Enemy was just upon him. Just by the Canon he found his Brother Horace with 300 Foot, and immediately order'd 'em to play upon the Enemy, who appear'd now in great Numbers upon the Shoar. He commanded his own Troop of Horfe and Bales to attack the Enemy, and Horace Vere to lie for a Referve with his Foot. He beat the Enemy back to the Hills, and from thence they were repuls'd with a Shower of Small-shot; and assoon as they faw Maurice advancing with the main Bo- spaniards dy, the Horse began to fly in consusion, and the fly. Foot follow'd them, and both were cut off in great Numbers. There were slain about 9000; and among the Prisoners were the Admiral of Arragon, Vigilare, Sapena, and many other Persons of considerable Quality. There were wounded the Archduke himself, after having discharg'd the Office of a brave General; the Duke D'Au-male, Alphonso Davales, Aid de Camp; Roderico Lasso, and several others. But these Particulars I refer to those who shall give the World the Hi-story of the Netberlands. Tis sufficient for me to have made these short Remarks out of Sir Francis Vere's own Commentaries, who has left us to make an Estimate of the English Courage from this Particular, That out of 1500 there were 800 flain and wounded, 8 Captains kill'd, and but two of the Commanders escap'd unhart. The Spaniards attributed this Defeat to the Number of the Enemy, which was double theirs, and pleaded the fatigue of a long March, that the Sun was in their Faces, that the Wind blew the Dust in their Eyes, that the Ground was unequal, and in a word, that their own Horse behav'd himself like Cowards, and the English like good Soldiers. Among those who deserv'd the first Commenda-tions, were the two Brothers Sir Francis and Horace Vere, Edward Ceeil, Califbenes Brook, Thomas Knolles, Daniel Vere, John Ogle, Taxley, Fairfax, Valvajour, Holcroft, Dennis, Turil, Hammond, Suston, Foster, Garnet, Morgan and Scot. The English and French took up this whole Year and the last in making Complaints about Reprifals, which indeed through the frequent Piracies which were practis'd became too common on both fides. But a Measure was at length propos'd towards an Agreement by Monfieur Thumicr Boififfie the French Ambassador, a Person of Sense and Gravity, to this effect, viz. That the Subjects of each Prince respectively should be taken into A Treaty

r600. And to the Nature of Provision in the Ship, prifals. That if the Officers of the Admiralty should either neglect to take Security, or accept what was not sufficient, they should be oblig'd to answer for all the Damages occa-fion'd through their Default. That Care should be taken of the Coft and Charges of the Merchants, and that their Causes should be dispatch'd, if possible, within fix Months. Judgments given in Actions brought at Civil-Law, should from that time be duly executed against all Offenders. That the several Bailes should answer the Penalty agreed on, but till Satisfaction were made to the Party injur'd. That upon the refusal of Justice after ; Months Request made by either Prince, or his or her Leiger Ambassador, it should be lawful to grant Reprisals on either side. That no kind of Arms or Ammunition should be transported into the 'King of Spain's Dominions. That if any thing ' should be detain'd or seiz'd by the King or Queen's Officers, without laying down the just Value, their Majesties should take care to make due Payment in convenient time. That all Ships fitted out by the immediate order of either Prince, or made use of by their Admirals in the publick Service, should be adjudged and taken for the King or Queen's Ships; and if any thing were done by them amis, they should oblige themselves to make Reparation. Reprifals should not be barely suspended, but absolutely revok'd on both sides. That publick Proclamations should be made, not to suffer or permit any Dividend, Transportation or Alienation of Goods taken; and that no Man fhould purchase, receive or conceal them, un-less they should be not adjudged to be lawful Prize by the Verdict of the Judge of the Admiralty. That no Pirates should be harbour'd in the Cities, Ports or Towns on either fide, or permitted to lie at Anchor, but should be arrested and brought to trial, and submitted to the Penalties of the Law, with Cost of Suit, and Interest. However, That every thing herein should be interpreted with this restrictive Proviso, That if any thing should be found contrary to former Treaties, nothing should be here constru'd in derogation from them; but fuch as the badness of the Times required, this flould be lookt on meerly as a prefent and occasional Provision, till a more full and absolute Treaty could be form'd to the mutual Satisfaction of both Princes.

There were likewife fome Demurs started con-Other differences cerning the Imposition of some new Customs on with the the English Wares, contrary to the Treaty of Elois; as also about the deceitful and fraudulent making of English Cloths, to the great Disgrace and Scandal of the Nation. The Queen likewife made a modest Demand of what was formerly lent to the King; fome part whereof he paid back with large and handfom Acknowledgements for the Favour.

But befides this Contest with France, there arose Difference a new Dispute with the Danes, upon the Article of Trade, and the Privilege the English took of Danes. Fishing on the Coasts of Norway, and near Iceland, and that upon this occasion; the King of Denmark being the last Year offended at this practice, and the Piracies committed by the English, furpriz'd and took fome Englishmen belonging to IIall, as they were Fifting upon the Norway. Coaft, with some of his Men of War; Their Ships and lading he order'd to be sold, to a con-

ture, alledging that he had two Years ago fignifi'd his mind in England, as to the Prohibition of the Fishing Trade and that they must expect to Ann. 43be thus ferred, if they would prefume to use it without his Leave. These Proceedings the O. referred as Arbitrary, because there was no hearing allow'd, and took them as so many Invasions upon her Person, her Subjects, and the Antient Treaties between them; She therefore interpos'd in Favor of the Hull Men, in Letters dispatch'd by Stephen Leific, and Thomas Ferrar She own'd that Whisfield and Bernick, had barely pretended that the English had increased on the Fishery of Normiy and Iceland, concary to the Treaties, but had produced no Proof for what he faid, she convined him that several Privileges had been Granted to the English, in this very re-fpect, by the former Kings of Norway, before the Union of the Crown of Denmink to it, and that the same Grants, were afterwards confirm'd by John and Christiern, Kings of Denmark. Ic being then objected, that by king folin's Agreement, the Parent for Fishing was to be renew'd every Seven Years, Common replied, that it had been discontinu'd for nia, y loars, and that 'twas through the neglect of the Danes, not the default of the English; for 'till the extrusion of King Christian, am. 1521. that Septemial Li-cence had been still demanded by the English, and since that Time, 'twas never exacted by Frederick the King's Great-Grand-Father, nor his Grand-Father Christiern, nor his Father Frederick: But the last of these Princes promis'd, in his Letters ann. 1585, that if the English would forbear any Infolences and Abuses, they should enjoy the same Privileges they us'd to do, without Sueing for any new Grant; that upon this out Sueing for any new Grant; that upon this Account, the English were injuriously treated, because they had of late, refus'd to ask a Licence from 7 Years to 7 Years, as they had formerly done, and that the Ablest Lawyers had given their Opinions, that the Sea is free and public by the Law of Nations, and ought not be the Monopoly of any Prince whatever. to be the Monopoly of any Prince whatever; in short, the Queen seem'd desirous, either to have the Matter compos'd by Proper Deputies on both Sides, or else to refer it to the Elector of Brandenburgh, the King's Father-in-Law, the Duke of Mekkenbergh; and Henry Julius Duke of Brunssiek, the King's Brother-in-Law, as Umpires, but this the King would not consent to; and when the Matter could not be adjusted by either Stephen Leister and Ferrar, who were fent into Denmark on purpose, nor by Crag, a Person of good Learning, sent from thence into England, twas at length refolv'd on both Sides, to fend Delegates to Embden; the Queen sent thither Richard Bancroft, Bishop of London, Christopher Parkins and John Swale, Doctors of Law, to concert Measures with the Danish Commissioners; But the English being detain'd by contrary Winds, or prevented by some unlucky Mistake or other, from appearing at the Day prefix'd, the Danes were for getting home as faft as could be, on pretence that the Date of their Commissionwas expir'd; but fome thought the Reason was the scarcity of their Provisions, (for the Danes allow their Embassadors, a certain Quantum of Victuals, in the room of Money, that other Princes give) nor would they hearken to the Proposal made them, of desiring their Prince to extend the Date of their Commflion: Hereupon the English complain'd that the Danes had no Defign of renewing the flate of things in reference to them, but were for exacting new Cultoms every day at their Pleasure, upon their Vessels in Orefund-Key, for making sale of their Effects by new Orders and Decrees, and refolv'd to ftop their Fishery, in Vol.II.

Whilst the Queen was labouring at this rate to enrich her Subjects, Pope Clement VIII. being fentible of her declention in Years, and very defirous to establish the Interest of the Catholick Religion in England, sent two Briefs (as they are call'd) into England, one to the Popish Clergy, and the other to the People, wherein he caution'd them, Not to admit any Person, how near Allied The Popes foever to the Crown, after the Queen's Death, unlefs he Briefs against the were not only inclined to Tolerate the Romiss Persagainst fam, but to Advance and Establish it, to the utmost of his Power, and would oblige bimself, as his Ancestors had done, to perform the same upon Oath: But these Briefs were kept very privately, and the Contents of them, communicated but to a very Few; but here was laid the first Platform of that Execrable Plot, the Potwher Treason: As the main Design of sending these Briefs from Rome, was the Exclusion of King James, from his Right of Succession to the Throne of England, fo were there private Attempts us'd in Scotland, by the Fraternity of the Rethuens, to take away his Life;

The Earl of Effex had now lain Six Months under the Lord-Keeper's Custody, and his good Nature at length, with the Sense of his Missortune, and the Advice of his Best Friends, partitune, and the Artice of Monard, began to work in him a very ferious change of Sentiment, to put being upon removing his Evil Counfellors, Sir Gilly pends himfellors. Suspicions of a severe Treatment towards him, to give it out by Order of herfelf and Privy-Council, that he should have a publick and fair Hearing, (not in the Star-Chamber, left it should fall too heavy on his Purfe or Perfon) But in the Lord-Keeper's House, before the Queen's Council, Four Earls, Two Barons, and Four Judges, and that fome Judgment or Censure should Is brought pass upon him, but short of an Impeachment or before Charge of Treason: The chief Heads of the In-Commisdictment against him were these: That he footers, had, contrary to his Oiders, made the Earl of Southempton, General of his Horfe; that he had Conferr dupon fo many, the Honour of Knighthood. That he had drawn his Forces into Munster, instead of pursuing Tir-Oen, the Head of the Rebels: That he held a Conference with him, contrary to the Duty owing to her 'Majesties Royal Dignity, and the Character of 'a Lord-Deputy, and in private too, which made 'it liable to the worse Construction: All these Points were largely infifted on by the Queen's Council, who produc'd out of his own Letters, written above Two Years before, and dispers'd up and down by some of his Followers, some abrupt Paffages to this Purpose: That no Tempest was more violent, than the Resentment of an inflam'd Prince: That the Queen's Heart was Obdurate: That twas very possible for Princes to Err, and wrong their Subjects: That he knew his Duty as a Subject, and and his Privilege as Earl Murshal of England, &c. From hence they concluded; 'that he represented the Queen as a very Passionate and Irratio-' nal Princess, and compar'd her to Pharaob, on the fcore of her Heart being hardned, and made ' her void of all Sincerity and Justice; so that, excepting a bare Allegiance, he ow'd her nei-

that she had commanded that Cup to pass from him (to use his own Words) and had permitted Ann.43. him to be Tried in a private House; he declar'd therefore, that he would not dispute his Case, or go about to excuse the Failings of his green and inconfiderate Years; he likewise protested, that he still kept himself a Loyal Subject, and neither had, nor would depart from his Allegiance fo much as in Thought: In a Word, he profess'd his Intention to have been fincerely Honest, whatever Appearances might happen aftewards to the contrary, and that he now took a most hearry Farewel of this World: At this he shed a-bundance of Tears, and the Company express'd their fatisfaction and hopes of him in the same manner. However he could not forbear urging some Excuses on his own behalf; such as these: That he made Southampton General of the Horse, out of an Honest, tho mistaken Opinion that the Queen would Approve his Choice, when fhe knew the Reafons he acted upon, which her Majetty having rejected, he immediately displac'd him; that he had Knighted so many, with defign to keep the Gentlemen-Voluntiers firm to his Interest. That he advanc'd into Munster upon the Ill-weigh'd directions of the Council of Ireland; that Ormond, the Principal Person of them, had paid for those Measures with the loss of his Sight, and Sir Warham St. Leiger, by the loss of his Life: As he was going to proceed, The Lord-Keeper reminded him of his first Resolution, and advis'd him to stick to that, and betake himfelf to the Queen's Mercy, who did not design to have him impeach'd of Treason, but only tax'd with the Breach of Orders, for 'twas but frivolous to pretend Obedience, when he had giv'n so few Signs of it, so that if he went about to palliate his Fault, it might prove a means to lessen the Queen's Gracious Intentions towards him; beside 'twas very absurd, to masque an Express and Formal Act of Disobedience, under the Pretext of a Loyal Inclination: 'Tis not very Material to refpect what was observ'd upon this Occasion, by others there prefent, fince 'twas in a manner much the fame with what was faid then, or fome time after, in the Star-Chamber. In fine, the Lord-Keeper pronounc'd his Sentence, That he flould be remov'd from the Council-Bard, suspended from his Offices of Earl-Aurshal and Masser of the Ordance, and kept under Confinement during the Queen's Pleasure This Sentence was approv'd of by all the Rest; and a great many entertain'd hopes of his being again receiv'd into Favour, because the Queen had expresly order'd, that he should not be remov'd from being Mafter of the Horse, as if she defign'd to employ him again, and that the Judgment awarded against him, should not be enter'd upon Record.

There were fome likewise, who observ'd the Temper of the Queen, and the Inclination of the Earl and his Enemies, with the usual Confequences in fuch Cafes, that were apt to conclude much, in Favour of the Earl, upon these probable Grounds: 'That the Queen being a Princes's The Q. of of a mild and intreatable Disposition, was not to seek that the Throne is Established by Merey: That 'twas both in her Power and Inclination, to express Compassion, and thereby fpeak herself a Wise Woman: That she would

by no means, provoke fo confiderable a Person, for sear of driving him to the last Extream;
That she would by no means consent to his ' ruin, in respect to the Government, which would be fo great a loser by it; that her Ma-jesty had hitherto form'd her Actions, upon the

Model of a strict and regular Justice: That fhe had declar'd her Defign to be the Earl's Reformation and not his Ruin; and that the Word of a Prince was Sacred as an Oracle. Princes, like God Almighry, act in confiftency, and without Contradiction: That moreover the was of Mitbridates Temper, and hated those that trode on the Neck of Virtue, when abandon'd by Fortune. That the Queen was as conflant in the Continuance, as different in the Difpoful of her Favors. That there were Inftances of Persons who had grossy offended her Majesty, and yet were not totally laid aside; particularly the Earl of Sullex had been impeach'd, as an Abettor of the Troubles of Ireland, the Duke of Norfolk had been accus'd by Crofts and Sadleir, for not obeying his Orders in the Siege of Leith, and the Lord-Keeper Bacon, about a Book written by Hales, relating to the Succession: Henry Earl of Arundel, Henry the Father of Southempton, and Lumley, were charged for holding private Correspondence with the Queen of Souts; Crofts for a Secret Correspondence with the Prince of Parma, " Walfingham for Affifting Goury in feizing the K. of Scors, and the Earl of Leicester about some Mismanagement of his in the Low-Countries: But yet all these Persons were perfectly reinstated in the Queen's Favour: As for the Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland, who had join'd themselves in a Forein Conspiracy to work the ruin of their Country, and had in order there-to, appear'd in open Rebellion, they had justly paid for their Treason with their Lives; and the Duke of Norfolk's Fate was equally Juit, because he had committed the same Fault twice, and attempted, contrary to his Promife and Oath, to Marry the Queen of Scots, concealing in the mean time all the Designs she carried on Abroad, and affifting those Scots who were proclaim'd Enemies to England; indeed the Queen of Scots herfelf, fell under the same Character, (however the might be protected by the Prerogative of a Crown'd Head) when she once took violent and irregular Courfes to procure her Liberty, infomuch that the Queen and Kingdom's Safety were endanger'd thereby, and and the State had no other way to fecure itself: But now there was nothing of this Nature objected against the Earl of Effect, whose Misearriages both to the Queen and Council, had already been acquitted from the Imputation of Treasonable Deligns: That the Queen, on purpose as it were to keep his hopes alive, had advanc'd none of his Enemies upon his Fall, tho' they had made their Suit, with all poffible Application for much higher Promotions.

That the Earl had been fingl'd out by the Queen, and distinguish'd while he was but Young, by feveral fignal Favours, on the fcore of his Quality, (being, at some distance, Ally'd to the Blood Royal) and the Appearance of a very promiting Virtue. That he had receiv'd among other effects of her Displeasure, a Box on the Ear: That he had done his Country very Eminent Services both at Home and Abroad; that there was not a Man in England, fo happily furnish'd for a General, and who was fo capable of managing a War, keeping off an Enemy, and gaining the Hearts of the People as himfelf; that therefore he was the propered Person to extinguish any Troubles that might arife, and keep the Government from Fermentation, nor did any Man deferve the Queen's Grace and Compassion, more than himself. That all Persons would find themselves concern'd in the fevere Treatment of a Person who had deferv'd to highly; that nothing could inspirit the Enemy more, than to see those Perfons us'd Ill, whose Merits rose higher than

That the Secretary would not be brought to admit any fraudulent Endeavors or foul play against him: That his Adversaries durst not do all they had a mind to; besides, they were so prudent to confider that Affairs at Court do not always run in the fame Channel, but that Love and Hatred, Jealousies and Suspicions, Favor and Rigour are acted by certain Springs, and depend on Changes and Periods, that we know little of. That no Man alive knows whether he shall be a Favourite, or cashier'd before the next Sun-fetting: That they were fometimes f next Sun-fetting: I nat they were solding to offer their best Ministers as Victims to Oblig'd to offer their own Reputation: Witness, ' Tury and their own Reputation: Emplon, Dudley, Cremwel, Cardinal Woolfey, &c. That just as Men find Princes to have acted by others, the fame will their Cafe be, when their own turn comes about. His Enemies ought therefore to take Care, not to engage too far in this bufiness, least they should hurt themfelves most, at the long run, besides the Inhumanity of adding Tears to the afflicted; and that they should not exasperate the Queen, and raife groundless Jealousies in Her, in reference to a Person of that Figure, for the Men could not but wonder at such a Procedure, God who is a Just Being, would not fail to Protect fuch as were injuriously oppress'd. Upon these Reasons, and others of the same

Nature, did several ground a Conjecture that Ellex would once more be taken into Favour; and twas made a Point of Deliberation among them, how the Earl was to Demean himself, during this Interim of Sufpense, whether it was his best way A kind of to get himself dispatch'd on a *Free Embassie, and Value are for a broad into fome forein Parts, 'till this Evile, the foreign are foreign Parts, 'till this Evile, the foreign are foreign within himself. der colour Storm blew over, or else to retire within himself, ef an Em and raife his Mind by the same gradual Move-beffige. ments, by which his Fortune lad declin'd; or whether 'twere properest, to enter on a mix'd Kind of Life, and so stand ready for whatever Fate fhould accost him. But the Earl's Answer was, that he was held from that Attempt by a Scruple of Confcience, and that he must take the Judgment of some Divines upon that Point; however he intimated to Blunt, not long after, by his Servant Cuff, that he would speedily come to some Resolution, and would be fure to acquaint him with it; he began now, to give free access to all Comers, and Merrick, his Steward, kept open House for all Swordsmen, Male-contents and broken Gentlemen, and admitted Buffoons and Paralites of all forts: Some of the warmer Clergy fet up popular Lectures, wich the Tradefmen mightily frequented; and the Earl receiv'd daily Visits from his Sifter the Lady Rich, who had loft the Queen's Favour for abufing her Husband's Bed: And whoever feem'd to disapprove these Measures, was censur'd as an avow'd Enemy to the Earl's Honour and Ligretted the powerful Interest which his Enemies held in the Queen, and which indeed his Friends condemn'd as relishing too much of an indiferent Ann.44 Referement; and therefore adviced him, as the Lord-Keeper had done before, 'not to neglect' himself, his Friends and his Country: That Persons otherwise at the greatest Variance, ought to unite for the Publick Good and Advantage: That he should by no means feek the Cure of his own Private Grievances, in those of the Publick. That he ought to submit to the present Exigence: That he should make the most submillive Applications for the Queen's Favour, who had been fo Generously Kind to him, and not to lend his Enemies an Handle to infult: But this Advice was quite thrown away, and received much fuch an Antwer as the Lord-Keeper's had done, viz. 'That, where he expected Plenry, he mer with an Hurrican, that if he was wanting to his Friends or his Country, 'twas long of others, not of himself: That the Queen had Degraded him to the State of a Private Man, and he could not Fawn himfelf into an Higher Poft: That he had been unjuffly Confind: That Princes had but a limited Power, and were not Infallible. These Expressions coming to the Queen's Ear, The Q ftrangely warp'd her Affections from him, but what incented fhe referred most, was the Affront he offer'd to the Make of her Person, for (to name but one Expresfion) He had declar'd, 'That she was now grown an 'Old Woman, and was as Crooked within, as without: This was a Wrong, which fome Court-Ladies, whose Hopes and Intreigues he had formerly disappointed, took care to aggravate to the highest Degree, so that she did as good as flatly deny him a Licence for Farming the Wines; This put his Spirit into a new Ferment, and to increase it more, the Lord Grey of Wilton drew upon his intimate Friend the Earl of Southampton, as he rode along the Streets; for which however he was by the Queen's Order, committed to Custo-dy, and his Enemies gall'd and fretted him one Day after another, with giving out base and un-

That in the West of England, Raleigh was Governour of the Isle of fersey, that in the Eastern Parts the Lord Cobbum was Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports, the Lord Burleigh President of the North, and the Lord Carew President of Munster in the South of Ireland: That these were the most convenient Places for the Spaniards to Land; that these Persons were every one of them, well affected to the King of Spain, and at Secretary Cecils Devotion, who, together with the Lord Treafurer Buckhurft, and the Lord Admiral, One of whom had the Queen's Purfe, and t'other her Navy, and both were Cecil's Creatures, steer'd the Helm of Go-

I do not affirm, that all this was done with a delign to remove his Adversaries, as opposers of the Succession, provided such a Declaration were not made: However, as nothing works more on the courts the Affections of Men, than a shew at least of Reli-Puntans gion, the Earl endeavour'd to gain the Puritans, & Papilla and their Preachers, to his Party, a fort of People the Queen did not care for. This Juncto met frequently in Drury-Houfe, to avoid Suspicion, and the Earl of Effex produc'd before them a Catalogue of fuch Noblemen as he conceiv'd best inclin'd to his Cause; it was reckon'd to con-fift of about 120 Earls, Barons, Knights, and Gentlemen of good Estates. He then advised them to deliberate among themselves, whether 'twere beit first to seize on the Court, or on the Tower of London, or on both at once? and what Methods were to be taken with the City itself? They were all of opinion, that the best way was to affault the Court in the first place; and this was to be fur was with a choice Detachment to possess hinself of the Palace-Gate, Davis was to feize the Hall, Danvers the Guard-Chamber, which was but flightly watch'd, and the Prefence-Chamber, and Effex was to rush in from the Meuse (which were Stables belonging to the Court) with a felect Party at his heels, and to beg the Queen on his Knees to remove his Adverfaries from her Prefence: 'Twas afterwards confess'd that he had refolv'd to bring them upon their Trial, and then to call a Parliament and make a Change in the Government.

Whifit the Party were expecting Ambaffadors from Scotland, and a favourable Opportunity to advance these Projects to a conclusion, the Jea-Effex fulpested loufies as to Effex were much increased, not only by reason of a much greater confluence of People than ordinary under the pretence of hearing Sermons at Effen's House, but because the Preachers themselves had let fall some Expressions, as if Kings themselves stood accountable to the Su-perior Ministers of the Realm. Hereupon, or elfe perhaps on fome flight Intimations, Robert Sackwille, the Lord-Treasurer's Son, gave the Earl a Visit on the 7th of February, in a pretended way of Complaifance, but really with a defign to observe what Company he kept. The Larl of Effex was foon after sent for by Sir John and not a Man suffer'd to go in or out, unless Effex was under a strange Perplexity, and fent for some of his nearest Friends, whom having inform'd of the Danger they were in of being forthwith order'd to Prison, he consulted with them, whether 'twere better to surprize the Court directly, or to try the Inclinations of the City, and make use of their Affistance, or else to fly for it? Seize the Court they could not, for want of Men and Arms, and other Conveniences; besides, they were told that the Guards were doubl'd: Moreover, 'twould carry a very foul appearance of Treason against the Queen, to commit an Outrage upon her Palace. As they were debating the Point of the Citizens Affection, and the unsteadiness of Humour common to the Vulgar, in comes a Perfon, as if commission'd on purpose, and makes large tenders of Service and Affiftance from the City, against all the Earl's Opponents. Wherewith Effex was so far inspired, that he began to talk of the large Interest he had in the City; and to flatter himself from the popular Noises formerly bestow'd on him, and the loud Complaints that went about against his Adverfaries, that he had a very powerful Party ready to affert his Caufe and protect his Fortune. He likewise believ'd the Report of others, that Sir Thomas Smith, the Sheriff of the City, would be ready to stand by him with a Thousand of the Train'd-Bands which he had under his Command.

He refolv'd therefore, fince Things were come to that pass as to make Delay as dangerous as too much Speed, to go the next day (which was Sunday) with 200 Gentlemen into the City, just before the Sermon was done at S. Paul's, and there give the Aldermen and People the Reasons of his coming, and crave their Assistance against his Enemies; and if the City appear'd backward to espouse his Cause, he determin'd to withdraw to some other Part of the Kingdom; but if they shew'd any inclination to affift him, then to make use of their Assistance in getting access to her Majesty.

All that Night Meffengers were fent up and down from Effen's House to give his Triends notice, that the Lord Cobbam and Raleigh lay in wait for his Life. Hereupon the Earls of Rutland and Southampton came to him on Sunday the 8th of February betimes in the morning, with the L. Sands, Parker, L. Monteagle, and about 300 Gentlemen more of good Quality; who were all receiv'd by him with great Civility. He told some of 'em, that he went in danger of his Life; that he was refolv'd to go to the Queen and acquaint her with it, because his Enemies had abused her Majesty's Name to his Prejudice: Others he assur'd, that the City of Lendon appeared for him, and that he would go thither and make use of their Affiftance to bear down the Power of his Adverfaries.

Some People do not stick to fay, that Gorges did at this time discover the whole matter to Raleigh. However, 'tis certain that Raleigh advised Gorges to take care he were not clapt up for being so long absent from his Government without leave; and that he likewife bid Raleigh look to himfelf, for that feveral Gentlemen were complotting against him and some others who were lookt upon to have abus'd the Queen's Au-

The Queen about this time order'd the Lord-Mayor of London to see that the Citizens were all ready in their Houses to execute such Orders as they should receive; and she sent the Lord-Keeper to the Earl of Essen, with the Earl of Worcester, Sir William Knolles Comptroller of her Houshold, the Earl's Uncle, and Popham, Lord-Chief-Justice of England, to learn the meaning of cil fent to this tumultuous Convention. They were with much ado let in at last through the Wicket, and all their Servants kept out, except the Purse-bearer with the Seal. The Court-yard was fill'd with a confus'd Rabble, and in the midst was Effex himself, with Southampton, and several others, who flock'd in upon this Occasion. The Lord-Keeper applied himself to Esex, and let him know, that he was fent with the other Gentlemen from the Queen, to understand the reason of this unufual Concourfe; and if they had fuffer'd any Grievances, he promis'd them a fair and equitable Redress: Effex answer'd him in a loudequitation recursis: Effect animer a finite in a loud-er tone than ordinary; That there was a Confpiracy against his Life; that some were employed to murder him in his Bed: That a great deal of Treachery had been used against him; and that Letters had been counterfeited under his Hand and Seal: That they were met in defence of themselves, and for his Security, since all he could do or fuffer would not fatisfy bis Adversaries, unless they might have his Blood. Popham spoke fomething much to the fame effect as the Lord-Keeper had done; and promise, if he would fairly tell him what Attempts had been used against him, to give the Queen an account of it, and procure him a fair and candid Hearing Southimpton complain'd, that the Lord Grey had drawn his Sword upon him: But then, replied Popham, he was Committed for it. Then the Lord-Keeper pressing him once more to discover his Grievances, (as privately as he pleas'd) the Rabble interrupted him, crying out, Let us be gone, they do but abuse your Patience: They design nothing but to destroy and abuse you; and in the mean while we lose time. The Lord-Keeper thought it now time to apply to the Throng, and bad them, upon their Allegiance, lay down their Arms.

Mean while Effex retir'd into the House, and the Lord-Keeper with the rest follow'd him, on purpose to have some Discourse with him in private the Mob in the mean time muttering out fome Expressions to this purpose; Cut their Throats; away with that Great-Seal; clap'em up in Custody. When they had got into the inner Apartments, Effex order'd the Doors to be bolted upon 'em, and then told 'em, That if they would have a little Patience, he would go and advise with the Lord-Mayor and the Sheriffs, and he back again in a very Short time.

Thus were these four Gentlemen of the Privy-Council confined and left in the Cuitody of Sir John Davis, Francis Tresham, and Owen Salubury, an old Soldier, and one that neither wanted Courage nor Confidence, with a Guard of some Musketeers.

And thus he went forward through the chief Streets of the City directly to Sheriff Smith's House near Euroburch. The Citizens got together in a fort of Amazement, and Essex defined the control of the City fired them to arm themselves, or else they would be capable of doing him no good Service. How-ever there was not a fingle Person in the whole City, tho' well Difciplin'd, and very Populous, that ventured to appear in his Interest, not even those of the lowest Rank and Condition. For tho' the Citizens were, according to the Temper of the Vulgar, defirous enough of Change, yet their Wealth made them somewhat Cautious, and ready to express their most faithful Loyalty to the Queen. Mean while, Thomas Lord Hurleigh, and Debick Garter King at Arms, came into the City, and proclaim'd Effect and his Adherents Traitors, tho they met with some Op-position. The same Method was taken by the Earl of Cumberland, and Sir Tho. Gerard Knight-Marshal, in other parts of the City. As soon as Essex understood this, he got out of the Sheriff's House as fast as he could in a dejected melancholy Condition, crying out, that England was to be made over to the Intanta of Spain, and defiring the Citizens to take up, drms, tho to no purpose. When he faw that no body was ready to engage in his Cause, and that his own Party flunk away from him by degrees; and hearing withal, that the Lord-Admiral was advancing with a strong Party against him, he began to grow Desperate. He refolv'd therefore to return home, in hopes of obtaining the Queen's Favour by the means of the Lord-Keeper and the rest of the Council which he had confin'd in his House. But when Sir John Levison, who commanded a Party of Men at Ludgate, had refused Gorges the liberty of a free Paffage for Effex, Gorges, confulting his own Interest, perfusaded the Earl to fend him to his House to discharge the Counsellors, and with them to interceed with the Queen for his Pardon, while there was yet some Hope, and no Blood spilt, and the Queen remaining in some Suspense as well as the Citizens. He had now laid aside all Hopes of receiving any Affistance from the City, and so began to make his own House as streng as he could. The Lord Admiral immediately besieged it to Landward, and assigned se-veral Posts to the Regiments of Horse and Foot, under the Command of the Earls of Cumberland and Lincoln, the Lord Thomas Howard, the Lord Grey, the Lord Burleigh, the Lord Compton, and others; the Admiral himself, with his Son the Lord Effingham, the Lord Cobbam, Sir John Stan-b.pe, Sir Robert Sidney, and Sir Fulk Grevil feiz'd upon the Garden by the Thames-lide. Hereupon Effex and Southampton, who imagin'd that Things had hitherto been kept in the dark, ampion were on the 19th of February arraign'd in Wellminfer-Hall, before the Lord Buckburft, Lord-Treap.or-1.01, refore the Lord Buckburg, Lore-Tree-furer of England, who was made upon this Occa-fion Lord-High-Steward of England; their Judges or Peers, the Earls of Oxford, Natingham, Shrouf-burg, Deby, Weredre, Comboland, Selley, Mortel-dand Lincoln, the Lord Vitcount Howard of Bundon, and Lineari, the Lord View of the Barons of Hunddon, Del wire, Mirley, Cobbam, Stafford, Grey, Limley, Windfor, Rieb, Darcy of Chiche, and Howard of Wilden, who was at that time Conflable of the Tower of London. Their Affifiants were, Poplam, Lord-Chief-Juffice of England; Periam, Lord-Chief-Baron of the Exchequer; Gawdy, Fanner, Walmfley, Clirk and King smill.

The Names of the Peers being called over, Iffer demanded, whether they had not the same Privilege with private Men, of excepting against fome of their Peers. The Judges antwerd, That the Reputation and Character of the Peers of England was fuch, that they were not oblig'd to take their Oaths upon any Trials, nor did any Exception lie against them. After this they were joined in the same Impeachment of Treason, Articles of the Queen's Crown and Life, and confulted

the charge how to furprize her at her Palace; and that they had broken out into a publick Rebellion, by flutting up the Council of the Nation, and exciting the Londoners to Mutiny and Sedition, by falle Stories and Reports, by affaulting the · Queen's faithful Subjects in the publick Streets, and fortifying the Earl's Houle against the Queen's Forces.

Being demanded, Whether they were Guilty or not Guilty of the Crimes laid to their Charge? They answer'd, Not Guilty; and put themselves, for their Trial, upon God and their Peers. FJfex alledged, That he had done nothing but according to the Dictates of Nature and the Laws of Self-defence. Then Televerton, the Queen's Open'd by Serjeant at Law, open'd at large the Particulars of the Charge; and made out, That a bare Intention of Mischief against a crown'd Head, was High-Treason: He then drew a Comparifon between Effex and Cataline; for as the latter got to his Party a medly of People of all forts; To had the former entertaind a mixt Crowd of Atheifts, Papifts and even Stigmatiz'd Perfors, in his Service. He upbraided him with the abuse of those many Favours the Queen had conferr'd upon him, tince the had been still loading him with fresh Honours and Preferments, and began her Bounties to him when his Age was too green to plead either Merit or Service. He farther charg'd him for having abus'd and mifinanag'd his Trust and Preferments, by courting the Breath and Applause of the Soldiery, and cherifling an Ambition, which, like the Crocodile, grows in Bulk, as it advances in Years; and profels'd himfelf amaz'd at their pleading Not guilty, when their Crimes were fo notorioufly known and publick.

He also commended very highly the Confessions to be produc'd against them, because they were free, confiftent and ingenuous, and not extorted through four or force. And after having fumm'd up the main Subitance of the Charge by way of Narrative, how he would have feiz'd the Queen, and can'd a Parliament, he ended with this finart Observation; That it were much to be wished that this Robert might be the less Earl of Estex of the Name, state he had ambitiously attempted to be Robert the First, King of England.

To the whole of this Charge, Effen answer'd Effects with a visible Briskness and Courage: 'That Answer's Rhetorick was the Talunt or Trade of those, who valu'd themfelves upon the knack of pleading innocent Men out of their Lives : He therefore defir'd the Peers to form a Judgment upon the Reality of Things, not from the bare Pomp

Now came on the Charge relating to the Con-

fultation held in Drury-House, about seizing the Court and Tower into their hands. Southampton made a short and mouest Defence, and ask'd pardon for his Crime, which was purely owing to his Affection for the Larl of Effex; and after a declaration of his stedfast Loyalty to the Queen, Southern he answer'd, 'That fome Proposals of that kind grant were made indeed, but nothing resolv'd upon, tence. 'the whole matter being reser'd to Essex: That what was acted, was a thing quite different from the matter of debate, viz. Their going into the City, which was with no other defign than to facilitate Esfex's access to the Queen, there to make a personal Complaint of the Wrongs that were done him: That his Sword ' had not been drawn all that day: That he heard nothing of the Proclamation wherein they were declar'd Rebels: That he hinder'd as ' much as in him lay, the firing of any Shot from Effec's House. He then desir'd that the Cause " might be decided by Rules of Equity, not the Niceries and Quirks of the Law. This the Niceties and Quirks of the Law. Queen's Attorney call'd a colourable Evafion, and demanded whether it were not Treason to feize upon the Court-Gate, the Court, the Privy-Chamber, &c. hereby to get the Queen into their hands? Southumpton calmly ask'd him, what he thought in his Confcience they design'd to do with the Queen? The same, reply'd he, that Henry of Lancaster did with Richard II. He went to the King, and fell on his Knees, pretending nothing but the removal of his Evil Counfellors:
But when he had once got the King in his Cuttches, he robb'd him of his Crown and

Twas then demanded, whether this Cabal was form'd by Effex's Means and Endeavours? And there were feveral Testimonies brought to prove, that the main Heads of this Confultation were written with his own Hand; and that he threw tome Papers into the Fire, that they might not (as his own Words were) tell any Tales. he heard all this objected, which he imagin'd had hitherto been kept as a profound Secret, he faid, 'That the hopes of Life and Pardon had drawn these kind of Confessions from some Men, and that he wish'd them an happy enjoy-' ment of their Lives, whereas his own was become a burden to him : That Cobbam, Cecil and Raleigh's Attempts had drove him to a necessary defence of himfelf; and that whatever Conftruction the Law might put upon his Visit to the City, 'twas a great satisfaction to him, that his Conscience did not tax him with the least Thought of difloyalty to the Queen. Cobbam's then role up, and declar'd, That he had never answer. born any ill-will to Effex, but neither could he bring himfelf to approve his Ambition. Effex replied, 'That he would for all that have remov'd fuch a base Latermer from the Queen's Person, though at the expence of his Right ' Hand. Francis Bacon, one of the Queen's Council at Bacon

Law, endeavour'd after this to weaken Effex's aniwers Excuse for his Rebellion, on pretence of a Plot Est x's aid for his Life, by an excettent Speech to this tions, purpose: That Cebham, feeil and Raleigh, were Gentlemen of that unquestion'd Worth and Probity, and Perfons withal of fuch plentiful Estates, that they would never have brought the one or the other into Hazard by so base and dishonourable an Action. He shew'd, that those Fictions of a Plot upon his Life, were deftroy'd by their own Inconsistency, for a smuch as Essex never continued long in one Tale; but pretended sometimes that he was to be murder'd in his Bed, then in a Boar, and laftly by the Jefuits; besides the vanity of his Suggettions, fince, it feems, he had given out that the Kingdom of England was fold to the King of Spain. He faid moreover, That 'twas a common thing for Rebels to attack Princes through the Sides of their Ministers, and tax'd Effex for an Hypocrite, and one that had conceal'd the worst Designs under the Mask of Religion. He resembled him likewise to Piststratus the Athenian, who cut and wounded his own Body, and made the People believe his Enemies had done it; whereby having procur'd himfelf a Guard of Soldiers, he reduc'd the Commonwealth under a flate of Slavery. He was going to proceed, but Effex interrupted him, and put him in mind, That twas not so long since he had written an affectionate Letter to the Queen on his behalf, and against those very Adversaries he had been speaking of. And this, 'tis true, he had done as a Friend, when he thought there was room to introduce Effex once more into the Queen's Favour. Effex rejoin'd, That he was inform'd that Secretary Cecil had once told the Ceciltax'd Council, that the Infanta of Spain had as fair a by Effex. Title to the Crown of England as any of her

Competitors. As foon as he had dropt the Word, in came Cecil, who lay perdue in a Room hard by, and beg'd the Lord-Steward upon his Knees to per-mit him to clear himself of so base and scandalous an Accufation. Which being granted, he thus applied himself to Effex: I confess, my Lord, you have a flux of Wit to which I cannot pretend; and in point of Heraldry I must yield to your Lordship, for I am not a Peer of the first Kank; though I think I may 1601. c.ll myself a Nobleman: and I will as freely own, Ann.44 that you are the better Soldier of the two. Int fill. I wear the Guard of Innocence; and in this Court I bear the Character of an honest Mun; whilst you appear here as a publick Criminal : on which account I challenge you to name, if you dare, the Counsellor, to whom I said those Words. Essex retused this: upon which Cecil was ready to conclude it a Fiction of his own; which Effex however deny'd. Then Cecil turn'd to Southampton, faying, I in treat you, Sir, by that Nearness and Intimacy, which has been between us from our Youth, as you are a Chrifian, and a Man of Honour, that you name the Per-fon. Southampton referr'd it to the honourable Board, whether he might, by the Rules of Honour and Decency, nominate the Person: They then judging it very reasonable that he should be named, Sir William Knolles, the Earl's Uncle, and Comptroller of the Queen's Houshold, was He being, at Cecil's mention'd as the Man. But, faid Essex, these Words were spoke to me with a quite different Air of Construction. Then Cecil reply'd, The Odium, which your Lordship's Malice would endeavour to bring me under, with all the World, is purely owing to that peaceable Temper, whereby I have aim'd to promote the Good of my Country; and to your Lord-fhips Love of Fighting; as it turns to the ac-

Whilst Knolles was expected, the Attorney charged Effex with having acted under a Dif guise; for that, being himself a Protestant, he had promis'd Blunt a Toeration of the Romish Religion. This Essex deny'd, but own'd at the fame time, that he knew Blunt to be a Papift, because he was educated under Allen, who was afterwards a Cardinal; and that he had heartily endeavour'd to make a Convert of him. He declar'd moreover, that he could never approve, that Christians should be persecuted for the Faith they profess'd.

Southampton did now a fecond time urge in his pron once own Defence, the great Respect he had for Efmore ex- fex; together with his Ignorance of the Laws; and cast himself, with a great deal of Submission, upon the Queen's Mercy, whom he acknowledg'd to be a most superlative Pattern of Goodness; and against whose Crown or Person he never had harbour'd one Thought amiss.

The affiftant Judges being ask'd their Opinion concerning the Earl's repeated Protestations, that no Harm was design'd the Queen; were pleas'd to declare, That whoever attempted to make himself so proverful, that the Prince should not be in a condition to oppose him; he was guilty of Rebellion, that in the Sense of the Law, every Man is interpreted to be a Rebel, who conspires against the King's Crown or Life; for a Rebel will never suffer a Prince to reign; lest be should afterwards call him to an -ccount for a Traitor This they proved from the Imperial or Civil-Law, which makes any Attempt against the Prince to be Treason; And also from the Reafon of the thing; because its impossible, that he

Sr John Levison, who stood by, did then give a full Account of the Scuffle, which I before mention'd to have happen'd near S. the Lord Sands. The Earl of Effex began now to be more calm Effex's and moderate in his Answers; and said, That Answers his Delign was meerly to oppose violent Meafires by Force; and that he would not have fures by Force; and that he would not have one. made fo unadvis'd an Entrance into the City, had he not foreseen that his Life was in Dan-Then Mr. Attorney-General infifted upon ger. Then Mr. Attorney-General infilted upon Lea's Plot, and some Irish Transactions; and charged him again with Ambition, Popery, and Atheifm: All which he flatly deny'd, and faid, he made no doubt, but to make fo Christian an End, as would quickly clear him of all those Slanders. Bacon told him afterwards the Opinions of the Judges, and that they were both adjudged to be guilty of Treason; and he provide them uncapable of producing any Excuse for this Fact, because they refused to lay down their Arms, at the Lord-Keeper's Command, and when they had been publickly proclaim d Triitors. Effex reply'd, that he faw no Herald, but an infamous fort of Fellow, whom he should never have took for fuch an Officer: That had he intended any thing more, than to defend himfelf against his private Enemies, he would not have ventur'd ab oad, with fuch an inconfiderable Handful of Men, and those without Arms; for they had no other or better, than their Swords, Bayonets, and Piftols. Bacon reply'd, that this was a piece of Policy in him, fince he depended on the Affistance of the City, and imagin'd no less, than that they would provide them-selves and his Friends with Arms, upon his Account: wherein he follow'd the Pattern of the Duke of Guise, who made his Entrance, not very long ago, with a very fmall Number, into the City of Paris; but gather'd fuch Numbers in his Progress, as to force the King himself out of the City. He concluded, that let the Herald be a Person of never so ill a Reputation, he was yet invested with the Queen's Authority. after the two Earls were, by the Lord Steward's Command, order'd to withdraw; and then the Lords quitted their Sears, and went afide to a Conference; and having held a Debate of about an Hour, they returned to their Places, and by a general Vote found Effex and Southimpton guiltone ty of Treafon. The Priloners were then call'd pronouncing again to the Bar, and the Clerk of the Crown sed guilty acquainted them with the Sentence, according to Form; and ask'd them feverally, if they had any thing to offer, why Judgment should not pals upon them: Effex requested the Peers to interpole with the Queen in favour of Southamprom, who was capable of doing her Majetty good Service. And this he did in fo modest and becoming a way, as excited a Compassion in all who were there present. The Lord-Steward did now make a very pathetick Speech, and advis'd Effex to implore the Queen's Mercy; after which he pronounc'd the Sentence of Death against them, in the usual Form, that they should be hang'd and quarter'd, or. The Edge of the Ax, which was from them before, being now turn'd towards them, Effec faid, If her Majefly had pleas'd, this Body of mine might have done her better Service: Honever, I shall be glad, if it may prove serviceable to her any way. He defined to have the Benesit of the holy Sacrament, before his Death; and that Mr. Alhton, a Clergyman, might affift him in his fpiritual Concerns. He ask'd Pardon of the Earl of Worcefter, and the Lord Chief-Justice of England, for detaining them in Custody; and of the Lord Morley, and the Lord La-Ware, for bringing their Sons into Danger, who were unacquainted with the whole matter. Then the Lord-Steward brake his Staff, and the Court broke up. I was present myself at these Proceedings, and have related them with all Fair-ness and Impartiality; and as succincity as I could, without omitting any material Point, but what may have escaped my Notice.

The next day came on the Trials of Sir Rob.

thers try'd Vernon, Sir William Constable, Sir Edmond Bainham. Knights, John Littleton, Henry Cuffe the Earl of Effex's Secretary, Captain Whitlock, the two Brothers fobn and Christopher Wright, and Orel an old Soldier. They had no fooner held up their Hands, according to Custom; but a Letter came from the Queen, who had been inform'd by Sir Fulke Grevil, that most of them had been drawn in at unawares; commanding, that Littleton, who was then fick and past Recovery, together with Orel, and Bainham, a Person of lewd Principles, and one that ridicul'd the Laws, should be brought upon their Trials, and the rest remanded to Prison. Bainham and Orel pleaded Ignorance, and that their Adherence to the two Larls, was purely out of Respect and Com-plaisance. Littleton, being clearly cast by Dan-vers's Evidence, could not deny but that he asfifted at the Confultation: And when, among other Heads of his Indictment, he was charged with some ill Design, by reason of the great Number of Horses, and Quantity of Arms, he had then at his Inn: His Answer was, that he had an Effate able enough to keep a good Stock of Horses; and that he had always taken a particular Delight in Horses and Arms. When he receiv'd Sentence of Condemnation with the rest, he listed up his Eyes, and only repeated these Words: We praise thee, O God! We acknow. Their lives lege thee to be the Lord! Then he told them, that the Q. could never be fafe as long as he liv'd; and defired them, that he might luffer privately in the Tower. He very much blamed fome of his Accomplices, as aiming at nothing less than the Ruin of their Country; and desir'd particularly to speak with Blunt and Cusse. As foon as he faw them, he accorded Cuffe after this manner: Effect to Be fare you ask Parkon of God and the Queen, and a Cuffebebove yourself fo as to procure it. Cuffe was surprized at this, and in few Words, Cuffe's but to the purpose, charged the Earl with Weak- Answer. ness and Levity in betraying his bett Friends; and this was all that he faid. Effex impeach'd likewife, as privy to the De-Effex dif-fign, Sir Henry Nevil, a Person of Note, who covers his was just going into France, in Quality of Ambaffador, there to relide, in order to ratify the Treaty of Blois, and prevent any Outrages on either fide: Whereupon he was countermanded, and order'd into the Cuftody of the Lord-Admira). But there being fuch a Number of them, and Ireland proving very happy under Montjoy's Administration, the Queen was so prudent, to dissemble what she had heard as to this mat-

But still Effex thought a verbal Confession too little; and therefore being mov'd by the dif-mal Scene prefented to his Confcience, by the Person whom he chose to guide it; he deliver'd the fame in Writing under his own Hand, which his Enemies shewing to King James some time after, brought the Earl and his Friends into great Difesteem with that Prince.

On the 25th of February, (the day appointed for his Execution) Dr. Thomas Montford and Dr. William Barlow, together with Ashton the Minister of the Parish, were sent to him betimes in the Morning, to prepare him for Death: In the Prefence of whom, he return'd hearty Thanks to Almighty God, for disappointing those Defigns of his, which would have provd so perni-cious to the Government. He told them he had now taken a View of his Crime in its full Dimensions, and was deeply concern'd, that he had endeayour'd to put fo fair a Face upon a foul Caufe, at his Trial: He acknowledg'd the Queen's Goodness in permitting him the Beneficial Caufe, at his Trial that acknowledg'd the Research Caufe Research Caufe Research fit of a private Execution, to keep his Thoughts from that Discomposure, which the Noise of a Crowd must needs have engaged them in; protesting withal, that he had learnt by a sad Experience, the dangerous Emptinels of popular Applauses. He own'd himself a corrupt Member, and fit to be lopt off from the Body of the Commonwealth; having attempted an Enter-prize, which, like a publick Leprofy, had spread its Contagion far and near.

The Queen was, in the mean time, unresolv'd The Q. how he should be disposed of. On the one side unstance of the control of th cover'd the whole Scene, and confess'd who were his Accomplices. But fome did not flick to expound the Meaning of his Presence, in such a barbarous Sense, as if he came to feast his Eyes with the Tragedy of the Earl's Sufferings: But being advis'd not to press upon him at his Death, he retired farther off, and faw him executed out of the Armory

As foon as the Earl came upon the Scaffold, he pull'd off his Hat, and lifting up his Eyes to Heaven, confess'd that he had in his younger Years been guilty of many and great Sins; for which he put up his most ardent Prayers for God Almighty's Pardon, through the Merits of Jesus Christ; and more particularly for this last Sin, which he branded with the Epithets of bloody, erying, and contagious; as having drawn fo many Porlons in to offend their God, their Prince, and their Country. He then ask'd Forgiveness of the Queen and her Ministers, and pray'd for her Majesty's long Life and Prosperity; protesting to the last, that he never intended the least Violence to her Person: He gave God Thanks, that he never had been popifuly affected, nor athe-ifically inclined; but had ever fix'd his Hopes upon the fole Merits of his Redeemer: He then pray'd God to fortify his Spirit against the Terrours of the last Enemy, and begg'd of the Spe-ctators to join with him in a short Ejaculation, which he utter'd with all the Signs of a ferious and inward Devotion. After this the Executioner ask'd him Forgivenes, which he freely gran-ted: Then having repeated the Apostle's Creed, he placed his Neck upon the Block, and having repeated the first Verses of the 51th Pfalm, he faid, In all Submission and Obedience do I prostrate myself to receive the Punishment I have deserved; Have Mercy, O God, upon thy penitent Servant, for into thy Hands, O Lord, I commend my Spirit. Then Beheaded. Was his Head taken off at the third Blow; but the first depriv'd him of all Sense and Motion.

This was the fatal, but withal pious and Chriflian End of Robert D'Evereux, Earl of Effex, in the 24th Year of his Age; though the French Marshal Biron, and some other lewd Persons, did ridicule his Piety, as a way of dying fitter for a Gown-man, than a Soldier; as if a Chriflian might not startle at the Terrours of Hell, without forfeiting his Courage. However this speaks his Father's Precaution to have had something prophetical in it; he having warn'd his Son, upon his Death-bed, to take heed of the 36th Year of his Age; so that 'twas an Hint which appear'd to be inspired from above. But this we have taken Notice of under Ann. 1576.

Heretupon the Title Annu-4t of Viscount Hereford was conferred upon his Great-grand-father Walter, by King Edward VI. and that of Earl of Effex upon his Father; by Queen Elizabeth. This Gentleman, Robert Earl Education of Effex was bred up in his travenery Years and Preof Fflex, was bred up in his younger Years at and Precambridge; where he devoted himself to the Study of Humanity and Religion, and being introduced to the control of the due'd to the Queen by his Father-in-law the Earl of Leicester, 'twas with some Difficulty he rais'd himself to the Condition of a Favourite, the Q-happening to have no great Respect for his Mother. But he had no sooner wrought himfelf into her Majefty's Efteen, by a Deportment that feem'd to deferve it; but file was pleas'd to forgive him a Debt, which his Father ow'd to the Exchequer, made him Knight of the Garter, and advanced him to the Honour of a Privy Counsellor, when he was scarce 23 Years of Age. He was several times appointed General of her Majesty's Forces, though Fortune did not always smile upon him: (I do not pretend to fetch the Reason from Astrology, and place his ill Successes upon the malign Aspect of Mars, which happen'd to be in the Eleventh House, at his Nativity.) However it was, the Queen Great Fre heap'd upon him fresh Honours and Favours ever wour with ry day, and had a particular Value for him, be- the Qa cause he was a brave Soldier, and cut out for a As foon as he had got a fecure and real Camp. Interest in the Favour of his Royal Mistress, he made it his business to outstrip all Persons, whether of his own or a superior Rank; and this was a Quarrel which the more politick Courtiers had to him; efpecially when he took upon him to disparage all whose Actions were not of his own Square, and to brow-beat those who had not the Advantage of the Royal Ear or Favour. Add to this, the Pains and Expence he was at to gain the Careffes of the Vulgar, which are always precarious and fhort-lived; and to recommend himself to the Army, which is equally fatal and hazardous. Nor was he exculable in his Deportment to the Queen herfelf, whom he treated with a fort of Infolence, that feem'd to proceed rather from a Mind that wanted Bal-

laft, than any real Pride in him; tho' it look'd

the more ungrateful, because acted when he had more than once been restored to the Queen's Favour, and receiv'd fresh Instances of her Boun-

He was of a Temper that would readily kindle an Injury, but would not fo eafily forget one; and so far was he from being capable of diffembling a Refentment, that (as Cuffe used to complain to me) he carry'd his Passions in his Forehead, and the Friend or the Enemy were easily read in his Face. He marry'd Fran- His Wife ces the Daughter of Sir Francis Walfingham, and and chils Sir Philip Sidney's Widow; a Match that the Q. dtea. did not approve, as being without her Confent, and, as she thought, beneath the Dignity of the Essex-Family. vours from her, join'd with a Coldnels and Dif- Dife-respect towards her Person, and back'd by the Carriage fly Management of some that wish'd him not to her.

On the 15th of March, Sir Christopher Blunt, Sir Charles Danvers, Sir John Davis, Sir Gilley 1601. merrick and Cuffe, took their Trials in Westminster-Hall, before the Lord-High-Admiral of England, the Lord Hunsdon Lord-Chamberlain, Secretary Others araigned. Lecil, Sir John Fortescue Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Lord-Chief-Juftice of England, and fome other Commissioners. They were impeached of the fame Crimes with the Earl of Effex, viz. That they had plotted and contrived the Death of the Queen, by confulting to feize upon her Person, to raile a Rebellion in the · City, &c.

The three first propos'd this Question, Whether they might not own the first part of the Indicament, and plead not Guilty to the ather? fince they utterly denied any Plot or Conspiracy against the Perfon of the Queen. Merrick and cuffe being taken from the Bar, the Judges declar'd, as they had done before, That whoever takes up Arms with an intention to over-rule his Prince, or abridge the Royal Prerogative, he is guilty of a Plot upon the King's Crown and Life, and ought fo to be adjudged.

This they made out by fome Precedents of People in the Country, who within the Memory of some lately alive, were condemn'd for a Rising in Oxfordshire and Kent. The Kentish-men rose in Arms to have an Augmentation of their Day-wages and Salary, and the other to get the Ditches and Fences remov'd from Pastures and inclosed Grounds. To this purpose several other Proofs were produc'd, shewing very plainly, that whoever went fo far as to contrive the fecuring of his Prince's Perfon, would on confequence make as bold with his Life; because Insolence is inseparable from Conquest, and the Rage of the Multitude knows not how to pity or diffinguish, especially when their own Sasety is at stake.

Sir Christopher Blunt tried.

Blint was tax'd from his own Confession, and that of the Earl of Essex, who had impeach'd him as a principal Abettor of the late Treason. As foon as he heard his Confession read, and saw it fign'd by Esser's own Hand, he seem'd very much start!'d at it, and desir'd to be allow'd the liberty of a Conference upon that matter with the Lord-Admiral and Cecil in another Place: He then fetch'd a deep Sigh, and with his Eyes lifted up, used this Expression; Thou, O GOD! knowest from what Designs I endeavour'd to dissuade the Earl. After this was read Thomas Lea's Confession, a Person I have mention'd before: He acknowledg'd that by Blunt's leave, who was General in the Wars of Ireland, he had fent to Tir-Oen, and was inform'd by the Messenger, that Tir-Oen should say, That if the Earl of Essex would be rul'd by bim, be would make bim the greatest Man in Eng-

Twas urged moreover, that Lea had faid, That he knew that Effex, Tir-Oen and Blunt, were all engag'd in one Aim and Design, nor could Blunt himself deny, but that he had, by Essex's Orders, given leave to Lea both to fend and go in Perfon to Tir-Oen. There were likewise read several Papers, which were sent out of Ireland, tending to prove the Correspondence between Effex and

Danvers's

Trial.

Then Flemming, the Queen's Solicitor, applied himself to Danvers, and acquainted him, that twas the Sense of the Law, 'That if a Man 's shall join himself as an Associate with treasonable Persons, he is guilty of High-Treason, admitting he know nothing of any design to take up Arms against his Prince; And that Darvers could not therefore, upon any account, appear Innocent, when he had been convicted by his own and other Mens Confessions, as

To this he answer'd no more, than that the Ann 44 Respect he had for the Earl of South impron had in this Affair overborn any regard to his own Life and Estate: For, it seems, Danvers having been obliged to sty for killing a Man, Southampton first conceal'd and then convey'd him into France, where he behaved himfelf commendably in the Field, till the Queen was pleased, after a great deal of Importunity, to grant him his Par-Davis being condemn'd in his own Confcience, and cast by his own Confession, had not a single Word to fay: And being charged with being Popishly affected, he could not deny but that his Tutor at Oxford had grounded him in the Principles of Popery, and that Blunt had confirmed him in the same whilst he was a Soldier in Ireland. At which perceiving that Blunt was a little mov'd, he foon fatisfied him, by faying, that he was induced to approve of that Perfuation, not fo much upon the force of Blunt's Arguments, as the Lu-ftre and Integrity of his Life and Conversa-

Then were Cuffe and Sir Gilley Merrick brought Cuffe's to the Bar; and Cuffe was confronted with the Confessions of Danvers, the Earl of Essex and Sir. Henry Nevil. Danvers acknowledged that Cusses had attended upon all the feveral Meetings, and bad always advised to attack the Court. The Earl himself had declared before the Council, and given it under his Hand, that he had been the main Instrument that put him upon these disloyal Measures : And Sir Henry Nevil ingenuoully confess'd, (unless my Memory fails me, for I was then prefent and heard his Confession read) That Cuffe told him at his return out of France, that he must expect to be blam'd for the miscarriage of the Treaty of Bologne; that he made him feveral Vifits afterwards, and perfuaded him to come and pay the Earl one, which he did once afterwards: That after all this, when he was just ready to return to France, he defir'd him to go to Drury-House, and hear what Measures they were going upon; protesting withal, that nothing was to be there debated on, but what was for the Earl's Advantage and the publick Good, and which he night hear fafely, without calling his Loyalty into question: That he requested him, in the last place, to be with the Earl when he feiz'd on the Court, and fo discover'd to him the whole Defign; which when Nevil difap-prov'd of, as a very dangerous, leud and diffi-cult Undertaking, and withal faid pleafantly, 'Twas one of those Experiments which had never any Commendation till it was over. Cuffe did all he could to extenuate the Hazard and Difficulty of it; affur'd him, that the Earl had the City of London and several of the Aldermen at his beck, and then applied that of Lucan to the Occasion:

> - Arma Tenenti Omnia dat, qui justu negat.

' He that the juster claim of Power denies, ' Gives all that fuch an injur'd Power can feize.

Nor indeed was Cuffe able to deny one Syllable of all this.

Hereupon the Attorney-General began to argue with him in a Logical method, and Cuffe manag'd himfelf fo well in Mood and Figure, that Cecil could not forbear calling him a very Subtle Sophister. But Anderson, the Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas, being unable to keep his Temper, and telling them that they were both but indifferent Disputants, press'd him close with the Statute of Treason made in the Reign of Ed-1601. ward III. 1601. ward III. To be brief, Cuffe's Defence was Ann.44. chiefly made up of these two Pleas: 'That whereas he was impeach'd of Treason for being present in Essex House on the Day of the Infurrection, by the fame Logick might a Lion within a Grate undergo that Charge. That he had indeed lamented that whole Day the miserable Case of the Earl, which was all that he was concern'd in: That he used all the Perfuations he could with him to implore the Queen's Mercy. And then for the Confultation in Drury-House, 'twas with no better Propriety to be stil'd Treason, than an Embryo to be call'd a perfect Birth, forasmuch as it never took effect. In answer to this the Council pleaded; 'That he had no occasion at all to stay in Essex-House, and that every one had their Office affigned them; fome were to Defend the House, (and himself was one of that Number) Others were to fecure the City, and both Parties were to join in a mutual Affiliance of one another.

That in the point of Treason, there were no Accessaries, but every one was adjudged a Prin-cipal, and all guilty alike: That the Confe-rence in Drwy-House was a formal Treason of ' itself, because they consulted about taking off that Debate in execution. In the last place, the Judges deliver'd it as the Sense of the Law, That if feveral Persons conspire against the Life of their Prince, and execute their Designs in different ways, yet is it adjudg'd to be one and the same C ime in all respectively, because they were all all engag'd in one and the fame mischievous Design.

These Answers of the Judges, together with the Confessions of Essex, Nevil and Danvers, did fully invalidate whatever Cuffe could fay for him-

Merricks Merrick was mancred in the new parties having invited by certain Letters his Brother before personal other refolute Personal other Persona Merrick was indicted in the next place, 'For Salisbury, Groine, and feveral other resolute Perfons, to his Party; and for undertaking the defence of Effex-House; for fortifying and holding it out against the Queen's Forces; for hav-ing procur'd the outdated Tragedy of the Depolition of Richard II. to be publickly acted at his own Charge, for the Entertainment of the Conspirators.

This the Lawyers constru'd as done by him with a delign to intimate, that they were now giving the Representation of a Scene upon the Stage which was the next Day to be acted in reality upon the Person of the Queen. And the fame Judgment they pass'd upon a Book which had been written some time before by one Hayward, a Man of Sense and Learning, and dedicated to the Earl of Essa, viz. 'That 'twas penn'd on purpose as a Copy and an Encouragement for deposing the Queen. A dear Performance it prov'd to the Author, for the unseasonable Publication cost him a long Imprisonment, particularly one Expression in the Presace relating to the Earl; That he was a Person of the most pro-mising Hopes, and seem'd reserved for very great Things.

Merrick heard the whole Charge with a composed Bravery, and said no more but this; That the Earl of Effex had been the occusion both of his Rife and his Ruin.

They were every one of them found guilty of Requefts High-Treason by a July of 12 Men; and after Sentence of Death was pronounc'd, Blum and Danvers Danvers requested, that they might be Beheaded; (a Privilege allow'd to Noblemen) and indeed demanation they were both honourably Descended: Danvers's tional, was not over seasonable, when he was

I am fully perfuaded, that whoever feels a fecret Confelation within himfelf, whilft he groans under the Infliction of any earthly Punishmen; is chaftis'd by God with a paternal Fenderness, and not in an angry and judicial way. But to come to the cause of my Death: There is no body here can possibly be ignorant what a wild Commotion was rais'd on the 3th of Fibruary by a particular great, but unadvised Erri: I do here call God, his Angels and my own Conscience to witness, that I was not in the least concern'd therein, but was shut up on that whole Day within the Houte, where I spent the time in very melancho y Reflexions he was interrupted, and advised not to disguise the Truth by diffinctions, nor palitate his Crime by specious Pretences. Then he proceeded in by specious Pretences. Then he proceeded in these Words: 'I confess 'tis a Crime as black as Treason, for a Subject, who has lost his Prince's Favour, to force his way to the Royal Prefence. For my own part, I never perfeaded ¢ any Man to rake up Arms against the Q een, but am most heartily concern'd for being an Instrument of bringing that worthy Gentleman, Sir Henry Nevil, into danger, and do most earnestly intreat his Pardon. And whereas I faid, that One and twenty Aldermen out of the Twenty' ar were devoted to the Earl's Interest; I only neant, that they were his Friends, and ready to ferve him, but not in the way of open Rebellion. Here he was again interrupted, and fo began to apply himfelf to his Devotions, which he managed with a great deal of fervour; and then making a folemn Profession of his Creed, and asking pardon of God and the Queen, he was dispatch'd by the Executioner. He was a Person of admirable Learning and equal Wit, but of an unquiet and turbutent Spirit. After him, Sir Gilley Merrick fuffer'd in the Merrick

Tis above three Years fince I observe the Earl's Mind to be utilised with Diffeoments, and many Metions of Ambition. In Ireland, whilft I was ' ill of my Wounds at the Caftle of Rheban, as likewife at I alka afterwards, he cold me, That he referred to find over his best Troops out of Ireland to Millord-I leven in South-Wales, to gain them en-' tivly to his Laterest,; and when he had gather'd more 'Frees, to march up to London. I consider'd well of the matter, and endeavour'd to diffuade him from it, as a desperate Delign, and one that would occasion the essuing of a great deal of Blood. I cannot dony but I advised him to get ' the Court into his Power, and so to make the most reasonable Conditions for himself: And tho 'tis very true, that in all our Debates we ' fully intended not to touch her Majesty's Perfon; yet had the bufiness succeeded, I cannot ' fay but it might have cost her Majesty her Life. After the Earl was absolutely discharg'd, he treated with me upon the same Subject at Effect-House, but fixt upon nothing. After which he fent for me out of the Country, not ma-'ny Days before this treasonous Enterprize ' was acted. As for other things, I have already made a particular Confession of them before the Right Honourable the Lord-Admiral, and the most vorthy Secretary, to whom, I request you, Sir Waher Radigb, to present my Respects, and I likewise ask Forgiveness of you all. Then he lookt up to Heaven, and 'you all. Then he lookt up to Heaven, and lead of God, 'to preferve and defend the Q 'And thou, O GOD, continu'd be, forgive my evil Intentions and profligate Life. Then he took leave of the Lord Grey and the Lord Compton, who were prefent; and having faid a fhort Prayer to himfelf, he submitted his Neck to the Ax, with a Refulution worthy of

Thus was the Rebellion crush'd, the Tranquillity of the Government fecurid, and the rest of the Conspirators reduced by the Execution of the the Computators request by the insection of the Effect, Caffe, Merrick, Darwers and Bluar. Those that had the best Purses were fined, but very few paid their Fines: The real had their live, if areal, and enjoyed the benefit of a free

Tower: But Smith having been falfely accufed, and put to a great deal of Trouble upon the Informations of fome few, and Effect's Credulity, was either by the Queen's Goodness, or on the score of his own Innocence, permitted to be bail'd out of Prison.

On the 8th of July was Sir Henry Nevil brought N. vil's before fome of the Queen's Judges and the Privy - Chirge & Council at York Houle, and charged, 'with ha ving attended upon the Confultation in Drany-· House: That he had not discover'd the Defigns which were in agitation; and that he had communicated to Effect the private Transactions relating to his Embassy in France. He confess'd, 'That at the Earl's request he had given him a Journal of what had pals'd during his Administration: That he was present only at one Meeting: That he had always laugh'd at tleir Projects as fo many Chimera's, and confider'd them as the Dreams of a crazy Brain: That he was afraid to reveal any thing that E few and Persons of his Figure were concern'd in, for he hated the Character of an Informer, and was in great hopes they would change these wild and indiscreet Measures, for better and more fober Refolutions, fince as yet nothing had been determined or fix'd on; or elfe, that he might take a fairer Opportunity, and that he might that a rather Opportunity, it is less full perfected, for disclosing their Purpoles, after he had got again into France. However, Sentence he was by the common Vote of them all ordered to the Tower.

to the Tower, and briskly Reprimanded, as one that deferred the Severity of the Law.

There was a Verdict likewise about this time passed in the Star-Chamber, which having a re- John Das lation to the present Cause, ought not therefore tableCheat to be omitted in this place. I took notice before punished. of the Earl's having complain'd that fome Letters of his had been counterfeited. There was an Inquiry made into this Bufiness, and it produc'd a very remarkable Difcovery. The Countefs of Essew apprehending that in Times so troublesom, neither her Husband nor herfelf were free from Danger, concealed fome particular Letters which the had received from him, in a certain Cabinet, which she committed to the care of one Mrs. Ribove, a Datchwoman: She hid them somewhere in her House; but by chance John Daniel, her Husband, found and read them over; and obferving there was fomething in them which might affect the Earl's Safety and provoke the Queen, he got them transcribed by one who was very dexterous in the Imitation of Hands and Characters: And just upon the Countes's Lying in, he told her, That he would most certainly deliver them into the Hands of the Earl's Adverfaries, unless the would immediately give him 3000 l. The Counters, to avoid the Hazard, paid him down directly the Sum of 1170 L. which as large as it was, procured her only the bare Copies; the Impoter, it feems, having a defign to put off the Originals at a round Rate to the Earl's Advertagles. He was for this Cheat condemn'd to perpetual imprisonment, fined 3000 L. whereof 2000 was adjudged to the Countels, and to have his Ears mail'd to the Pillory, with this Inteription, A most neterious Imposter.

Not long before this, the South Ambassadors, the Larls of Marr and Kinles (whom I observed before to have come something of the latest) were introduced to the Queen, and after a Compliment of Congratulation, upon the happy pre-vention of the Effects of this Rebellion, they had fome Diference with her Majesty upon the Builnels of Paichane Thomas's efeaping condign Punilhment, and the Fraud that was practifed in carrying off two Englishmen, William Evers and Appleld from Sectland. They likewise demanded Ann. 44 the Affignment of a certain portion of Land in England for the Kings use. The answer given Q'san(w. them was; 'That their Gratulatory Address was very acceptable, and that the Queen wished the Scotch might never transcribe fo bad a Copy; or if fuch a Commotion should happen, that one Day might put an end to it, as it had ' done to this: That Valentine Thomas was pardon'd on purpose to prevent the opening of a closed Wound, forasmuch as a Slander, be it never fo false and ill-grounded, finds Credit and Countenance easily enough with bad Men: That ' Evers had render'd himself suspected of ill De-' figns, by his flat Denials and false Protestations: That Ashfield was a Man of seditious Principles. and had trick'd the Warden of the March, and got a Licence to travel into Scotland; and that the Warden had paid him in his own coin, and fetch'd him back again: That to harbour the feditious Subjects of another Prince, was the fame thing with raifing Troubles and Commotions at home. As to the Affignment of fuch ' a portion of Land, the Queen faid, she had given a fufficient answer before; however she condescended to advance a yearly Augmenta-' tion of 2000 l. as long as the King maintained a firm Alliance with her, and did not liften to the Suggestions of such as valued their own peculiar above the publick Concernment.

The Spanish Gallies lying at Scluis, did at this time infelt the Coast of Kent, but more especially the Holland and Zealand-Ports; insomuch that the Queen built feveral Privateers, and mann'd them with Persons freed from the several Jails; and the Londoners contributed very liberally to the Defign, tho', as it happen'd, to little purpofe. However, to free themselves from any apprelienfions on the fcore of thele Gallies, the Confederate-Provinces were fo careful as to fend an Army once more into Flanders, to feize the Sconces about Oftend, and so ravage the Country round about with the more freedom; besides that they would by that means fecure Contributions from those Parts, get the Sea-Port Towns of Flanders under their power, and prevent the Enemies Gallies from receiving any Harbour or Protecti-on thereabouts: And the better to conceal their Defign, and divert the Enemy, they thought convenient to fend Grave Maurice at the fame time into Gelderland to beliege Rhynberek. They acquainted the Queen herewith by Sir Fran. Vere and defired her to permit 4000 Men to be raifed in England, and transported at their charge; to which the Queen gave her confent. But before Vere was returned out of England, Maurice was marched towards Berck, and the Archduke Albert Archduke had belieged Oftend; infomuch that the States were now obliged to go upon new Measures, and endeavour rather to preserve Oftend than to take any of the Spanish Forts: In order to which they conferr'd on Vere the Title of General of all the Forces within and without Oftend; and gave him an abfolute Authority and Commillion. From Berck they fent for twenty Companies of English; but Grave Maurice having already began the Siege, and expecting the Enemy would at-tack him, fent but eight Companies, under the Command of Sir Horace Vere, and that with fome reludancy. Sir Francis Vere, relying on their Promife, that the rest should follow soon after, and that he should have a sufficient recruit of much exposed to the Enemies Shot, they having just before his coming, block'd up the Haven :

And twas not long after that Sir Edward Cecil, as young a Soldier as he was, ventured upon a f bold Exploit, and reliev'd the Besieged with Men, Victuals and Ammunition.

Oftend, which was within a very late Remem- Oftend brance no better than a poor Fishing-Town, deteribed, was at the beginning of the Troubles in the Lowwas at the beginning of the 1 roupies in the London Countries, first Pallitado'd, and then Strengthned with a Garifon, and Fortified with many Works, as affording a very commodious Haven: By which means Sir John Conneys, and after him Sir John Nervis, did so annoy Flunders, that the Prince of Parma was forced to lay Siege to it, the' to little purpose. La Motte attempted it by Stratagem, but was beaten off with confiderable lofs, and the Archduke Albert furrounded it with Spaniards 17 Sconces; but the Garifons to be maintain'd in artemp' these proving no less burdensom to Flanders than ways, the Enemies, and the Haven being thought con-venient for the Spanish Gallies, and likely to spoil the Navigation of the Zelanders and English, the Spaniards refolv'd to get it into their Hands at any rate; and the States were as resolutely bent to defend and preferve it; and to fay truth, this Age cannot afford an Instance of a Siege so bravely carried on and so stoucky opposed, there was never more Men kill'd on the like occasion, nor any Service that continu'd fo long: But I shall not stand to give you a second Journal of the Siege, which is to be had in print; it shall fuffice to glance a little on the following Parti-

Sir Francis Vere, finding his Forces confiderably diminish'd by frequent Sallies from the Town, when it had now been besieged for five Months, besides the Damage done by the Enemies Shor, and the Sickness which rag'd in the Place, and the Sea having at the fame time fwallow'd up one part of the old Town, their Provision likewile growing fhort, and the Winds proving fo contrary as to give them no hope of any Sup-plies which had often been demanded; and he being moreover inform'd, that the Enemy defign'd to make a general Affault upon the Town. defired to capitulate with the Archduke about Conditions for a Surrender; and Hostages being exchanged on both Sides, Commiltioners were fent to manage this Affair. But General Vere had no other intention but to spin out the time, and feed them with the hopes of a Surrender, till some fresh Recruits were sent in to him; fo that he dismiss'd the Commissioners with baffled Exhe dimited the Commissioners with bassed Expectations, and excused himself by that military Axiom; That to impose upon an Enemy, has a minture in it of Pleasure and Convenience, as well as Equity. He used likewise a sharp piece of Raillery with them, and said, He hoped they would excuse him if he should find himself obliged to play the same Come a second time; fince he could not in Honeur act otherwise, when he had received the supplies he wanted, and all other Necosities. The Archduke was roughly to the Ouise at this Percedure, and any touch'd to the Quick at this Procedure, and taxed Vere as a Person that was like to gain a Conquest by Craft sooner than Courage; and sour-teen Days after, he play'd 18 great Pieces of Biblio Cannon upon the Counterscarps for the whole affailted. Day; in the Evening he forced 2000 old Soldiers to make an Affault upon the old Town at Low-water, and fent fome Troops of Horse after them to prefs them forward: But General Vere, who appear'd with his Brother Sir Horace in places of greatest Danger, with a select Party, bravely beat them off three several times. Those that were to make the Attack upon the East-side of the Town, came fomething too late, but retir'd fealonably upon the coming in of the Tide, though not without fome Damage. lortification, made a thift to gain them with lit-1001. t.e Trouble, the Soldiers being call off to the Aug. 41. Defence of other Places; but they were foon obliged to quit them again: Two thousand were dispatch'd to an Avenue on the West, call'd the Gullet, and made themselves Masters of an Half-Moon which was abandon'd; but they were foon calledg'd from thence, and feveral of them perified, whilft to avoid drowning, they fled away in confusion: There were planted on the Welf-Bravely defended Gate nine Pieces of Cannon, which continually discharged such terrible Showers of Chain-shot and pieces of Iron, with other destructive Materials, on those who storm'd the Western Bulterrals, on thote who florm of the Weltern Bul-wark and the Sand-Hill, that they fell in great Numbers; and the Tide happening to flow in upon them in the midft of the Affault, they were flittled with fluch a Conflernation, that they threw away their Arms, Ladders and Draw-Bridges, and left themfelves to the Fury of the Waves, and the Sword of the Enemies, who were ready to Sally out upon them. The Archidake was not fo far discouraged by this terrible Staughter of his Men, but he flill continued the Siege, tho with poor hopes of gaining the Town, there he was neither capable of cutting off Supplies from it, nor of springing any Mines, by reason there were so many Works and Rampires

Covernor round the Town. But Vere, having now repaired those Parts which were batter'd and damag'd, changes was call'd away by the States, who thought good to change the Governor, and fent fresh Recruits every five Months; and so he was succeeded by Frederick Dorp: And both he, and those who came after him defended the Town for three Years and about an hundred Days, against all that the Enemy, or rather the Sea, could do, to oppose them. It had been happy for the Soldiers if the Sea had broke in and fwallow'd it up; for this Place prov'd the common Grave (tho' indeed a most glorious Monument at the same time) to the best Soldiers in the Low-Countries, Spain, France, Ingland, Scotland and Italy, whilst they fought All the while for a meer barren and fruitless Plot of Ground. But this Account is more proper for the History of the Netherlands. However it will not misbecome our English Annals to infert the Names of fuch as died at or else bravely maintain'd this long Siege, and by that means recomthis Siege, mended their Names to Polterity: Among the Last we are obliged to take particular notice of the two Veres, Sir Edward Cecil and Sir John Ogle; and among the former, the most considerable Persons were Sir Charles Fairfax Kt. Colonel Lawrone, Dutton, and Dnake, Serjeant-Major Carpen-ter, Holcoft, Jeffery Dutton, Grevil, Wilford, Hum-phers, Dnake, Broughton, Herbert, Frest, Maddison, Garant, Butter, Rogers, Dennis and Conigrave, all Captains. Nor ought we to omit the mention of John Corew of Antony, a young Cornish Gentleman, who having his Arm shot off in a Sally, and carried a great diftance from him, took it up as if he felt no Pain; and whilft his Fellows were bemoaning the Difaster, brought it in his other Hand into the Town, and fhew'd it to the Surgeon, with this Expression; Look, here is the Hand which but to day at Dinner-time serv'd the Occasions of my while Body.

This Siege brought the French King to Calais, the thousaft Passage to England, French K. from whence is the shortest Passage to England, in order to secure the Frontiers of his Kingdom; which the Queen no fooner heard of, but the fent Sir Thomas Edmunds to pay him a Visit of Congratulation. He, in return of her Complai-Lonce, fent Marshal Biron with D'Arverse, D'Aurant, and feveral other Noblemen, into England. The Queen happening at that time to take the Country-Air at Bring, welcom'd them into the Kingdom, and gave them so savourable and gra- C cious a Reception, that they went as high as 1601. possible in the Commendations both of her Elo- Ann.44. quence and Generolity.

But forasmuch as certain French Writers have Queen's mention'd, that the Queen shewed to Biron and Discourse the other Gentlemen the Earl of Effen's Skull in with her Closet; or, as others affirm, fix'd upon a Pole, it must needs be a Story as ridiculous as falle, fince that was interr'd with his Body. 'Tis certain indeed, that in fome Discourses with the Marshal, she tax'd Essex as highly Ungrateful, and no less Obstinate and Indiscreet, for not asking her Pardon: And the took occasion from thence to express her Defires, that the French king would rather use in time such a fort of Rigour mixt with Mercy, than fuch a Clemency as might prove fatal to his Government, whenever he had occasion to demand the Lives of Traitors, who fought for nothing but publick Change and Diforder. And this Advice might have aw'd Biron out of hofe desperate Designs he was at this very time forming against his Prince, had he not been under the power of a ftrong Infatuation: But he was fo blinded by the Fate which purfued him, that in a very few Months he fuffer'd the fame Punishment that Essex had done before him.

The Queen, upon her return from her Pro- A Parliegress, held a Parliament at Westminster, wherein, ment among other things, feveral good Laws were called, made for the Relief of the Poor, and of maim'd and difabled Soldiers and Seamen; against frau-dulent Guardians and Trustees, the Cheats and Impositions of Clothiers, and the Robberies and Outrages committed upon the Borders of the Kingdom towards Scotland. But whereas great Complaints were made in the Lower-House, relating to the Engroffing-Practice, (for it feems there were some who under the colour of publick Good, but in reality to the great Damage of Several the Kingdom, had got the Queen's Letters-Pa- good Laws tents, for the sole Privilege and Liberty of vending some particular forts of Wares) the Queen therefore, to forestal them, publish'd a Procla-mation, declaring those Grants to be null and void, and also left them to be tried at common Law: A Method which was fo acceptable to the Lower-House, that eighty of that Body were appointed to wait upon her Majesty with their humble Thanks, which the Speaker was to pre-fent in the Name of them all. She received them very gratiously, and gave her Answer in the following Speech.

Princes have too often an eye to their own Advantage; that their Faults are often concealed from their Notice, and that they cannot, if they would, inspect all things, when the Weight and Business of a whole Kingdom lies on their Shoulders.

About the beginning of this Year died Henry The death of the E of Herbert Earl of Pembroke, the Son of William, who Pembroke. was created Knight of the Garter, An. 1574, and made President of the Council in the Marches of Wales upon the death of his Father-in-law, Sir Henry Sidney: By whose Daughter, Mary by name, a Lady much addicted to Poetry and other pleafant Studies, he had William, the prefent Earl of Pembroke, who fucceeded to his Father's Title; Philip now Earl of Montgomery, and Ann, who died whilft she was very young.

About the same time departed likewise Hem L. Norris. Lord Norris of Ricet, who was by K. Henry VIII. reftor'd to his Estate, after his Father was put to Death, with fome strict Conditions relating to the Estate of his Grandmother, who was one of the Heirs of Viscount Lovel; but he was more firmly fettled in it by Queen Elizabeth, who was pleas'd to make him a Baron upon his difcharge of an Embaffy into France, with great Commendations for his good Managery. He had by Mary, his Wife, one of the Heiresses of John Lord Williams of Tame, (who in Henry VIII.'s Reign was Treasurer of the Court of Augmentations, and a Privy-Counfellor to Queen Mary, and very much in her Favour) a Race of Children that prov'd Men of extraordinary Spirit and Courage, viz. William, his eldeft son, Marfhal of Bervick, who died in Ireland, and left behind him his Son Francu, who enjoy'd the Title of his Grandfather: John, whom I have frequently mention'd; Thomas President of Munster, and for some time Lord-Justice of Ireland, who died of a slight Wound for want of due care: Henry, who died about the same time by the very same Disaster; and Edward, the Governor of Oftend, who was the only Son that furviv'd his Parents.

Within a few days after him died Peregrine Berty, Lord Willoughby of Eresby, Governor of Berwick, who had pais'd through all the Offices of a Commander both in the Low-Countries and France with great Commendations: Robert, his Son by the Lady Mary, Sifter to Edward Earl of Oxford, fucceeded him both in Honour and Estate.

'Tis now convenient to turn our Prospect towards the Affairs of Ireland. About this time there was iffued out a Proclamation purfuant to an Act made in Henry VII.'s Reign, forbidding the carrying any English Money into Ireland, because the Rebels secured a great part of what went over to buy up Arms and Ammunition; or elfe the Merchants transported it from thence into forein Parts, to the great Detriment of Eng-'twas therefore taken into Consideration, the altering the Irigh Coin, by mixing with it fome alloy of Brafs, forafmuch as the War there drain'd this Kingdom of an annual Sum of Confulta. 160000 l. Sterling. By this means some were of tron about opinion, 'That the Expences of the War might the last 'be leisen'd: That all the good Money might be drawn out of Ireland into England by Bills of Exchange, and on confequence the Rebels lofe their Trade with Foreiners, when the good Money fail'd, which must needs weaken them

Others maintain'd on the contrary, very much. That this Alteration of the Coin would turn to the Queen's Dishonour, and the Detriment ann 44of the Kingdom: That the good Money could not be drawn out of Itel-nd without a vall Expence to the Queen: That should there be a new Coin in England, the Profit arising thereby would not balance the Charge of bringing the old Money over; and the Profit would be lefs, were it coin'd in Ird.ind, where they must be forced to fet up a Mint at vail Charges, and hire Workmen at excellive Rates: Nor would this in the least prevent the Rebels Correspondence with Foreiners, as long as there was any Silver in new Coin, and the Merchant knew the way to separate it, since 'tismuch the same to him whether he receives one piece of Coin or three of the fame Value; and that it was to be feared the Soldiers would Mutiny upon this account, forafmuch as their Pay would be confiderably leffen'd.

But Buckburft, the Lord-Treasurer, a Person Altered well vers'd in Assairs of this kind, got the Queen's qualty. went vers in Anansor in Kind, got the Queen-leave, upon pleading a Necellity, which gene-rally governs the present Occasion, for altering the Money for a certain time, and then reducing it to its old Standard. The Queen herfelf was averse to this Motion, saying often, That it would reflect upon herfelf, and dischilge her Army. However the Soldiers continued Quiet and in good Order on Hamiltonian to the Queen good Order, an Happiness peculiar to the Queen, who had a way of Commanding by a Power mixt with great Love and Tenderness for her People. But without doubt it prov'd a very great Prejudice to the Army; and whether it turn'd to her Majesty's Advantage or not, I cannot rell. However it could not but fetch in a vast Gain to the Pay-mafters and Officers of the Treasury; and perhaps it ow'd its Contrivance to the A-varice of that fort of Men, which is usually very Ingenious where any thing is to be

As foon as the Lord-Deputy was inform'd of this Refolution, he got his Forces together early in the Spring, to prevent Mutiny, or any other ill Effects of Idleness; and before they could be well form'd into a regular Body, he march'd with those he had ready, to Moghery; where he kept them closely employ'd: for he order'd the Trees to be cut down, and a Paffage made thro a thick Wood, and there he built a Fort. He then drove the Mac Genises out of Lecale, when they had possess'd themselves of it, and took in all the Rebels Cattles, as far as Armagh, into which City he also put a strong Garrison: And fo great Advances did he make this Summer, that he removed Tir-Oen from Blackwater, where he had very commodiously encamp'd himself. Mean while, John O-Dogherti being dead in Tirconnel, the Lord-Deputy declar'd his Son to be his Heir, because his Father held his Estate according to the Laws of England; and he deliver'd it into the Hands of Hugh Boy and Ph.lim Reaugh, his Guardians, who were entrusted with the Care of his Education: O-Neal Garve was mightily nettled at this, and prefently feiz d upon the young Gen-tleman's Eflate, as pretending a rightful Claim thereto; as if he imagin'd himfelf the fole Proprietor of the Lands of Tirconnel, and all the People in it: And he very much stomach'd the Lord-Deputy's being of a contrary Opinion, though he had refolv'd to carry himfelf impar-tially on both fides. However Sir Henry Decreasy Dictrical gave O-Neal Garve fuch fine Words and fair Pro- rous Mac miles, that he got harrover to the English Party; Swine, and to find him fome Work, he fell upon Mic-Swine Fanagh, a principal Man among the Rebels, and carry'd off a rich Booty, which he ne-Vol. II. vertheless restored to him, upon his Submission, 1601. taking the Oath, and Delivery of Hostages:
Ann.4+ But upon his revolting a second time, he hung him up in Effigie, and after having spoil'd his Country, drove him to that Extremity, that he gave Holtages once more, and continued ever after a peaceable Subject. After this he wasted a small Country in Tir-Oen, call'd Sleugh-Art, a Place full of Woods and Bogs, and about fifteen Miles in Length; by the direction of Neal Garve.

Takes the He then took Derry-Castle, and put Garrisons Cattle of into Newton and Ainogh.

The Lord-Deputy, upon his Return to Black-poster, fent for him; but for want of Necessaries, and the Enemy having block'd up all the Ways, he was not able to get to him. Whereupon the he was not able to get to him. Deputy advised him, not without some Appearance of Resentment, to repair this Neglect, by some Service that might make Amends for it; which indeed he fail'd not to do, upon the first handsom Occasion: For, being inform'd by Neal Garve, that the Soldiers were drawn out of Tir-Conell, to march against the Lord-Deputy; and that the Monaftery of Donnegal, near Bali-finanon, had none but a few religious Persons in it, he fent him thither with 500 English, who and Donwith great Ease made themselves Masters of the Place. O-donel, upon the Lord-Deputy's Return, march'd with all his Forces to Donnegal, who had furnished themselves with burning Firebrands to destroy the English. There were 30 days spent in refolutely maintaining the Siege, and there was as much Noise and Shouting, as if they had got an absolute Victory; for it happen'd, that the Monattery took Fire, and was burnt down in the Night, but yet did the English maintain themselves with great Resolution.

Whilft Matters went on with good Success in these parts, the Lord-Deputy receiv'd several Letters of Information, and built on a much of the Letters of the fame kind, that the Spanish had heard before of the fame kind, that the Spanish had heard before of the fame kind, that the Spanish had heard before of the fame kind, that the Spanish for Munster. niards were making for Munster. Hereupon he was obliged to drop his Delign, and to think of fecuring Ireland from a forein Invalion, rather than the Effects of an intestine War. But however, to prevent the Loss of what he had already gain'd, he first fortify'd the Garrisons in Ulfter, and then made the best of his way to Munster, having with him only two Cornets of Horse, the Infantry being order'd to follow with their Commanders. Tir-Oen and O-donel did likewise haften thither as fast as they could, by secret and unknown ways, having now broken up the Siege of Donnegal: Upon which Sir H. Docwray march'd immediately by Land, and reliev'd the Garrison of Donnegal. He placed two Companies in Ashenon taken row, under the Command of Edward Diggs, who took Balishanon in a little time; a Place which they principally aim'd at : And he was now pretty even with the Irish, for their Treachery in betraying Newton and the Castle of Derry

The War being now transplanted into Munfer, the Series both of Time and Fact obliges me to pursue the Scene. Tir-Oen and the Rebels of to pursue the Scene. Tri-Oen and the Rebels of J. Mumfer had, by their Emillaries, Matthew Ovieda a Spaniard, nominated by his Holines for Archbishop of Dublin, the Bishop of Clenforr, the Bishop of Killalee, and one Archer a Jesuite, got the King of Spain's Promise, that Succours should be sent to the Rebels in Mumfler, under the Conduct of Don Juan d'Aquila; a full Assurace having been given, that all Mumfler should revolt, and they to take the straight Fast of Dublings, and they be trivially English of Dublings, and they be trivially English of Dublings, and they are trivially English of the State of Dublings, and they are trivially English of the State of the and that the titular Earl of Defmond, and Florence Mac-Carty, would bring in a confiderable Number to their Affistance. In the mean time the Definional President, Sir George Careur, to prevent this, immediately impeached the said titular Earl, whom he had lately feiz'd in a private Place; where being forsaken of all his Friends, he had very advantageously conceal'd himself. This he did, be-2nn.44. cause should he have died without a Trial, his Estate could not have been forfeited by the common Law without an Act of Parliament. After he was condemn'd of Treason, he declar'd, That he took up Arms for the Restoration of Popery, and the Estate of his Ancestors; and that he was incited thereto by the Insults of the newly-arriv'd English, the late Exactions put upon arable Lands, and the way used in England of trying by a Jury of twelve Men; besides, that he was buoy'd up with the Expectation of Supplies from Spain, which by the Archbishop's account he knew were ready to arrive, he having been fent into Spain in February: Besides, that the same was confirm'd by Florence Mac-Carty: The President likewise discovered, that there had passed a Conference between Tir-Oen, the said Archbishop, and others, about the most convenient Place where the Spaniards might land in Ireland; and that they had jointly resolv'd that Munster was the most proper Part of the Kingdom for that Defign, the' they could not agree as to the particular Port: Some thought it the best way to seize first upon Limerick, as lying near to Connaught and Leimster, and not very far from Ulfter, and therefore very conveniently fituated for joining their Forces; besides that 'twas remote enough from England to prevent any alarm from the English Fleet. However, Donat Mac-Cormack affirm'd, That Florence Mac-carty did for good Reasons give the Preference to Cark, as being a more convenient Haven, and a City weaker, and so less defensible; so that the Spaniards might from thence directly make an Attack upon Barry, Roch, Cormach, Mac-Dermot, and Mac-carty Reogh, who stood firm to the Government; and either draw them to their Party, or else seize upon their Estates. Here- As is Floupon the Prefident judg'd it upon all accounts rence May the best way to surprize Florence, though he had carry, formerly granted him Letters of Protection, and an Act of Indemnity for his Life: And having fecured him, after many Attempts of his to e-fcape, he fent him with Defmond into England; by reason he had wrong'd a certain Creditor, contrary to the Purport of his Protection: And being now at length most certainly inform'd of an Invasion from Spain, which he could not make either the Lord-Deputy or the Council in Eng-land believe: He order'd Provisions and Necessaries to be brought from all Parts into Cork, conven'd an Assembly of the Province there, and seiz'd on some seditious and suspected Persons, to prevent any Mischief that they might occa-fion. He took Hostages from others, and ma-naged matters with that Conduct and Circumfpection, that the Town was fupply'd with P10visions, to hold out a Siege of feveral Months. He likewise receiv'd a seasonable Supply of 2000 Men from England.

The President having, in the midst of Septem- L. Deputy ber, receiv'd a most certain Account of the Spa- of the niards being under Sail, did immediately give Spaniards the Lord-Deputy Notice of it; who being ar-coming-rived at Kilkenny, fent for the President thither: He therefore appointed Charles Wilmot Governor of Cork, and then haften'd away to the Lord-Deputy. They immediately held a Confultation, whether the Lord-Deputy, who was attended but with a fmall Retinue, and had no Life-Guard, should return back, or stay at Kilkenny, till his Forces were got together. Some thought it best for him to return, and that it was not consistent with the Grandeur of a Lord-Deputy, to go forward with fo poor a Train: The Prefident was very politive in the contrary Opi-

'Twas requifite therefore he should advance forward, and use his Authority, as Lord-Deputy, against such as were inclinable to re- volt; who would not only in all Probability remain more fix'd to their Duty, when overaw'd by the Lord-Deputy's Presence, who had been to famous for his happy Successes; but would most certainly revolt, should he return back. Some were of opinion, That the best way was, for the Lord-Deputy to march for-ward, as far as Clomel on the Edge of the Province, and not venture farther, till his Forces a rrived. But the President offering him a Guard of 200 Horse, and assuring him that Cork was plentifully furnish'd with all Necessaries, he advanced on with a great deal of Chearfulnefs.

the Enemy.

In the mean while, the Spanish Fleet, which could not reach Cork-Haven, by reason the Wind slacken'd, enter'd the Mouth of Kingsale-Harbour on the 23th of September, and landed their Forces. Whereupon Sir Richard Percy, who com-manded the Town with 150 Men, being not firong enough to oppose them, immediately retreated, according to his Instructions, with his Men, to Cork. The Spaniards finding the Gates open, enter'd with 35 Colours flying, and were congratulated by the Inhabitants; the Mayor going before them with his Staff, and performing the Office of a Quarter-Master in affigning 'em President's their several Quarters. The President order'd all the Cattle and Beafts for Service, that were on this fide the River Averley, to be driven away; and fent Flower with 400 Foot with light Arms, to spoil the Country all about: And he likewise found it requifite to augment his Army, by lifting every where a great Number of Citizens and Townsmen: not that they were likely to do much Service, but as they would ferve for Hoftages; besides the Apprehensions, that whilst they lay at home, and had nothing to do, they might through their great Fondness for Popery, or their natural Respects for the Spaniards, whose Descendents they affect to be thought, be induced to revolt, and deliver up the feveral Towns to

Don Jisan d'Aquila, who was General of the Spaniards, with the Character of The Catholick King's Captain or Superintendant-General in the Holy-War, for the Preservation of the Faith in Ireland, put out some Manifesto's; wherein he endeavourd to possess the People, That Queen Eliza-beth was, by several Censures of the Bishop of Rome, deprived of her Crown: That her Subjects were abfolv d from their Oaths of Allegiance; and that the Spaniards were come to deliver Ireland from the Power of Satan. For after this rate he express'd himfelf, and the Humor took fo well, as to procure the Coming in of a great many loofe Fellows to his Party. The Lord-Deputy having gather'd together what Forces he could from all parts, immediately fell upon the Siege of King-fale: And having disposed of his Army all about it, he judg'd it of absolute Necessity to take Kincurran, a Castle upon the Haven, and near the Town, wherein were placed 150 Spaniards; because of its being so convenient for defending ran-Gastle the English Fleet, as well as annoying the Spani-taken. ards, if they should be obliged to return. This Place was foon forced by the President to surrender upon Discretion; for being made Lieute-nant-General of the Army, he forthwith mounted his great Guns, and repuls'd the Spaniards both by Sea and Land, who came to relieve it.

Much about the same time was the Haven Ann.44 block'd up by the Vice-Admiral Sir Richard Levilon, who was fent from England with two or three of the Queen's Ships, to hinder them from bringing Succours to it: And the English began to shoot briskly into the Town from their great Cannon, and belieged it more closely and vigorously than before. Notwithstanding, the Briskness of their Attacks was something abated, in regard Levison was forc'd to draw off his Seamen and make Sail against 2000 Spaniards, who were landed at Bere-Haven, Baltimore, and Cafilehaven; Some Spaniards

The Prefident was at the fame time dispatch'd from the Camp, with some Troops, to prevent O-Donell's joining with these new Succours from Spain; but the Ground being hard-frozen, he got by Night, and through some By-paths to the Spaniards. And twas not long after, that Tir-Oen Tir-Oen himself, with O-Rork, Reimund Burk, Mac-Mahon, joins the Randal Mac-Surley, Tirell Baron of Killey, and Spariard. fome others of the principal Men among the Rebels, appear'd in View: With whom Alphonso O-Campo having join'd the Spaniards, that were just landed, (both Parties together making up 6000 Foot, and 500 Horse) they were big with the Thoughts of an affured Victory; because their Troops were more in Number, and their Men fresher and less satigued, and every way surnisht with all Necessaries. Whereas the English were miserably harass'd with a Winter's Siege, their Provisions short, and their Horses atmost spent with hard Service and flack Provender.

The Lord-Deputy carry'd on the Siege amidst all those Advantages, with wonderful Vigour and Refolution, and strengthned his Camp with new Works. On the 21st of September, Tir-Oen appear'd with his Forces upon an Hill; and having fix'd his Camp there, he shew'd himself likewise the Day following. The next Night, the Spaniards made a Sally from the Town, and the Irish endeavour'd to posses themselves of it; but they were both repuls'd. On the 23th of December, some Letters were intercepted from d'Aquila's d'Aquila to Tir-Oen, wherein he desires that the tercepted. Spaniards who were newly arrived, might be put into the Town, and an Assault be made on both fides at once, upon the English Camp. The fame Night, when the Moon was just rising, the Lord-Deputy order'd Sir Henry Poer to make a Detachment of eight Companies of old Soldiers, and to dispose them in order of Battle, on the West side of the Camp. Sir Henry Greames, who was upon the Scout that night, with a Party of Horse, gave the Lord-Deputy Notice, very early in the Morning, that the Rebels would certainly advance; because he observ'd so many Matches lighted in their Camp. Hereupon a general Alarm was forthwith founded, and Troops dispatch'd away to all those Posts, where there was any Access to the Town. The Lord-Deputy, with the Prefident, and the Marshal Sir Rich. Wingfield, marched towards the Centry, and by Sir Oliver Lambard's Advice, look'd out an advantageous Place to receive the Enemy: There were fent thither the Regiments of Sir Henry Folliot and Sir Oliver St. John, with 600 Marines under the Command of Sir Richard Levison. Tir-Oen, who had design'd, as afterwards it appear'd, to conduct the Spaniards and 800 Irish, by the Favour of the Night, into King sale, at break of Day discoverd the Marshal and Sir H. Danvers, with their Troops of Horse, and Poer at the Foot of the Hill, with his Regiment of Foot: Being therefore baulk'd of his Defign, he made an Halt, and foon after made his Haut-Boys found a Retreat.

1601. count that they retreated in confusion, he gave Ann 14. Orders to pursue them, and marched himself at the Head of his Troops, the better to observe Rebehrer Artereat: But there happen'd to arise for treat, and their Retreat: arepufud thick a Fog and so violent a Rain, that for some time they loft fight of them; but foon after the Weather clear'd up, and he could discover that they made a very precipitant Retreat in ; large Bodies, and were cover'd by their Horse: He therefore refolv'd to engage them, and fent back the President with three Cornets of Horse, to prevent the Spaniards fallying out of the Town if they should attempt it. The Lord-Deputy purfu'd them fo briskly, that he fore'd them to make an Halt on the fide of a large marshy Bog, at which they could not come but they must pass a

Fort: But the Horse which guarded it being de-Battel on feated by the Bravery of the Marshal and the Earl Dec. 21. feated by the Bravery of the Marina and the Earl of Clan-Richard, the English made a refolute Attack upon the Enemy's Horfe; and being join'd by Sir William Godelphin, who commanded the Lord-Deputy's Wing, Sir Henry Danvers, Min-Jam, Toffe, Fleming, and Sir John Berkley Major-General, they renewed the Assault with that vigour, as to put the Enemy's Horse to flight. was not thought adviseable to pursue them, but they rather chose to rally their Forces and break in upon the main Body of the Enemy's Army, which was in fo great a Consternation, that they earily made their way through it. Mean while, Tirel with his Forces, and the Spaniards, kept their Ground, and the Lord-Deputy brought up his Rear against them; and that he might shew himfelf an active Soldier as well as an expert General, he charg'd them with three Companies of Sir Oliver Saint-John's, under the command of Roe, and gave them fuch an Overthrow, that they made a confus'd Retreat to the Irifh, who immediately abandon'd them to the Swords of the Lord-Deputy's Troops of Horfe, under the command of Sir Henry Godolphin, which made a pro-digious Slaughter of them. Tir-Oen, O-Donel, and the rest, sled away as fast as they could, some one way, and fome another, every one throwing down his Arms and fhifting for himfelf. Don Alphenso O-Campo was taken Prifoner, with three

* Alferez, Spinish Commanders, and six * Ensigns; there were 1200 Men kill'd, and nine Colours taken, whereof fix belong'd to the Spaniards. The English lost but few, but had a great many wounded. and among the reft Sir Henry Danvers, Sir William Godolphin and Crofts; fo very cheap and yet fo confiderable a Victory was this to the En-glijh.

The Lord Deputy having order'd the Retreat to be founded, and Thanks to be return'd to God, over the Bodies of the Slain, conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood on the Earl of Clan-Richard for his Courage and Service, and return'd to the Camp with Acclamations of Joy and Triumph, finding it fare and no way diforder'd: For the Spaniards in the Town, perceiving that all Posts were well mann'd and secur'd, and had found by Experience, that all their Sallies had turn'd to their own Disadvantage, were under a dismal kind of Perplexity and Sufpence: And the English happen'd, as before, to have Fortune still on their fide; for the Wind flood in a Quarter that would not suffer the Reports of the Guns to be heard in the Town.

The good This Victory was glorious in itien, and com-effects of detable in its Confequences upon many accounts; This Victory was glorious in itfelf, and confifor Ireland, which was in a recling kind of Posture, and lean'd towards a Defection, was by this ctory.

As foon as the Lord-Deputy received an Ac- | O-Donel was forced to fly into Spain, and the rest of of the Rebels were broken and difperfed: Befides which, the Queen's Authority was reviv'd, the Infolence of diforderly Perfons curb'd and reftrain'd, Men of better Principles recover'd from their Fears, and a perfect and lafting Peace was fettled afterwards in all Parts of the Iiland.

The next day the Lord-Deputy commanded fosias Bodley, the Surveyor of the Works, who had managed his Employment with great Bravery and Diligence during the Fight, to finish the Mount which was begun, and to carry on the Trenches nearer the Town: this was fix Days a

To be fhort, after a fmall Conference, the Spaniards and th English, who were both heartily weary of the Siege, agreed to the following Ar-

That the Spaniards should deliver up Kingsale Articles with the Forts and Ca- of Capi to the Lord Deputy, with the Forts and Ca- of Capiflies at Baltimore, Bere-Haven, and Caftle-Haven: tulation. That they should march out with their Lives, Goods, and Colours flying; that the English should supply them with Ships at a reasonable Rate, to transport them, at two Voyages, into Sprin: That D'Aquila should depart last: That they should not act in an hostile manner against the Queen of England, till they were landed in Spain; and if in their return they touch'd at any English Port, they should be well and civily treated: That if they lighted on any English Vessels, they should not be molested: That so long as they were obliged to tarry in Ireland for a Wind, they should have what was necessary for their Money, and no Affronts nor Injuries offer'd to them; and for the Ships which were to transport them, Security should be given, by the delivery of three Hostages, fuch as the Lord-Deputy should approve of.

The Fourty Fifth Year of her Reign.

These Articles being on the second of January drawn up in Writing, and fworn to on both Sides, the Spaniards took the Opportunity of good Weather, and fet fail from Ireland, their Forces being very much diminish'd; and the Irish were deliver up very much disturb'd, that they had by Agree-the Forts, ment furrender'd to the English all the Forts and Go. return was expected thither.

Nevertheless Eugenius O-Hegan, whom the Pope had defign'd for the Bishoprick of Ress, by supplying them with Money, and feeding them with the Expectation of fresh Succours from Spain, did fo far fix the Minds of fuch as waver'd in their Refolutions, that they ftill perfifted in their Rebellion. But Wilmet, Governor in Kerry, and the two Brothers, Roger and Gavin Harvey feiz'd on their Castles in Carbury, and by driving away their Cattel, and putting many of them to the Sword, reduc'd them to better Order by force. The President himself seiz'd on Cormac Mac-Dermot by Surprize, who was a great Man in Mujkey, and was supported by many Adherents. He was accused as an Abettor of Disturbances, and committed to Custody: But when he saw his Country ruin'd, his Caftles feiz'd on by the English, (Wilmot having upon his Escape taken Muckron, his best Seat, as it was by chance all on fire) and his Son being a Prisoner in England, his Wife in Cork, and himfelf under a double Hazard both of Life and Fortune, he submitted him-felf, and beg'd Pardon, which was granted upon his producing Security for his good Behaviour.

Mean while, Samuel Bagnal put Tirel to flight, being lately arriv'd in Muskery with his Band of hireling Vagabonds, and feiz'd upon his Castles, forced him away into the Mountains of Dermond. Wilmot did at the fame time fo warmly purfue the Knight of Kerry and his Affociates, that they implor'd his Pardon and Protection in the most lamentable Tone imaginable. Tirel being purfued by the Lord Barry and Wilmot, got by some blind Ways into Leimster. Not long after, William-a-Burgb and Seinlivant Bear, being furrounded with Fears and Difficulties, leit Bear and Buntrey without any Defence, to the Arms of the English. On the other tide. the other side, Captain T.fle, who was fent out by the Prefident, hotly purfued Engenius Mac-Carty and Donat Kengh in Carbery, and flew the Bi-Bithop of thop, Engenius O-Hegan, as he was fighting in the Crowd with a Sword in one Hand and a Breviary in t'other.

Altho' Ireland was now clear of the Spaniards, the Queen however, having a tender Regard to her People's Safety, fent out a Fleet of eight Ships from the Royal Navy, with some others of lester Burden, to the Coasts of Spain, under the Command of Sir Richard Levison and Sir William Mounson, on purpose to divert the Spaniards from the thoughts of a new Attempt upon Ireland. Lewifon fet fail on the 19th of March, and Meunsen follow'd him, having made a stay of some few Days, tho' to no purpose, to take the Low-Country Ships along with him. Mean while Lewisen Place Fleet fell upon a Tieet of 38 Spanish Vessels, with Plate Pheriest fell upon a Licet of 38 Spanifo Velleis, With Material artacked, but invain his finall Squadron, but without Effect. When Manifon came in with the rest of the Navy, they spoil'd all the Trade on the Coast of Perugal. At length they had Intelligence that a wast Carack of 1600 Tuns, and richly Laden from the East-Indies, was arrived at Sofimbria in Perugal near Coast Saichel, and that there were eleven Gallies Cape-Spichel; and that there were eleven Gallies there at anchor, eight of them belonging to Spain, and assign d to Frederick Spinola for the Low-Country Service, and the other there were Portugueze Ships. Sessimbria is a small City situate upon a Bay within the Road, built with Stone and fortined with a Caffle and twelve great Guns: the Carack lay jult under the Fort, and the Gallies on the West-fide the Road under a Rock, with their Stems foremost, and had each of them five Guns mounted, so that no Affault could be made without eminent Danger, by reason of the & Galler the Caftle, the Carack and Gallies were all so set on in the Carrie, the Carrack and Gallies were all 10 let on in well provided. However, Sir Ricbard Levifon, the fort of by the Seamens confent, was refolutely bent selfabria, upon making an Affault, and to fet the Carrack on fire, if they could not take her.

The next day therefore, having the advantage of a gentle Breeze, he, according to Agreement, fet up a Flag on the Admiral's Main-Top, and

Mounfon put up another (as is usual at Sea) in the

Vice-Admiral's Fore-Top; and entring not long after with five of the Queen's Ships into the Road, they came to anchor just overagainst the Gallies, and play'd upon them with their Guns fo furiously, that after feven Hours the Marquis of Santa Cruce retir'd with the Portugueze Gallies under his Command; but feeing Spinola did not follow him, he return'd again. But the Gallies being unable to fland the Brunt, endeavour'd every one to provide for themfelves by flight, 2 Gallies two of them were taken and burnt; and there taken, was found in them a great there of Powder defigned for the Natherland; the reft being torn and batter'd, and most of the Slaves kill'd, with a great deal of Difficulty reach'd the Mouth of the River Tayo. Mounson was just preparing to fet Fire to the great Carack, but Levison prevented him, and advertisd the Captain, by Sewall an old Seaman, That the Gallies he depended on were put to flight, and two of them taken: that he was now Mafter of the Road; and the Castle itself was not able to stand the force of the English Ships, and how then should his Carack? If therefore they refused a good Treatment when 'twas offer'd them, they were like to be handled with the utmost Severity. The Captain desir'd fome Gentlemen to be fent to him, with whom he might make Conditions at large. Mounfon A Patley was the Man, and the Spaniards infilted on these with the Terms: 'That all the Perfons in the Carack (for Grack 200 Gentlemen came on board on purpose to defend her) should depart fafely with their Arms; that their Flag should not be taken down; that the Ship and Guns should remain to the King's use, and that all the Lading should fall to the Exylish. Manuson consented that they should all be difmits'd within three days, but would by no means permit that the Spanish Flag should be horsted in the fight of the English, except at the Ship's Stern; nor would he agree that the Ship should go to the king of Spain:

more than five common Seamen. Mounfon was fent back with feme Ships to the Coasts of Spain, where he staid till the midst of Winter, to keep them from making any new Defect upon Ireland. Whilf he was making the belt of his way for Sp. in, Fralerick Spinds entered

But after a long Dispute, it was agreed; the Portugueze should be difinifed in two days time, and suffer'd to go with unlighted Matches that their Flor should be diffusive that their Flor should be should be ches, that their Flag should be levell'd; that fhould fairly be deliver'd up just as it was, and that in the mean time no Guns should be fired

' upon the English from the Castle. All the Perfons were fent out of the Carack the fame Night, except the Captain and fome others who were pur afhoar early the next Morning. The fame

the English taking the advantage of a fair Gale, brought her home, her Cargo being computed, according to the Portugueze Account, at a million of Ducats, and their loss in the Enterprize no on the 23d of September into the British Channel, 1. 02. and kept along the French Shoar with fix Gallies, Ann 10 which made their escape at Sesimbria, designing to get with them into some Port of Flanders: E 2 ifi chace the Sir Robert Mansel waited for him with two or three Men of War, and four Hollanders were likewife cruizing on the Road. The Spaniards first discover dewo of the Hollanders Ships, and resolved Spaniflo Gallies, to fet upon them; but happening to fpy one of the Queen's Ships nor far off, they shifted their Oars, and stood the remaining part of the Day, They fall hoping by the advantage of the Night to gain in with the their intended Port. Manfel, with the 2 Datch-Q's ships men and his own Ships, gave them chace from smaware. Eight in the Morning till Sunfet. When Night change on the Gallies alread their country for the state of the Country of the State of the Stat came on, the Gallies alter'd their course for the English Shoar, and came so near it, that some of the Slaves got off their Fetters, leapt overboard, and fwam to Land; and before they were aware they fell into a Place where one of the Queen's Ships and the Hollanders lay at anchor. Hereupon Mansel taking it for granted that the Gallies must needs fall in with those Ships; in order to make them keep their course with the more affurance, ficer'd a little out of the way on purpose to get between the Gallies and the Coast of Flanders.

The Queen's Ship they lighted upon was called the Answer. Broadgate, the Captain of her, who had prepar'd to Fight, upon the report of the Guns, which he heard at a distance, be-stow'd upon them 38 Shot, and the Hollanders gave them as warm a Salute. The Gallies did not fire fo much as one Gun, but got away by the help of their Oars; and failing at random, one of them, in the Night-time, fell is with Manfel; he discharg'd all his Guns at her, and fhot down her Main-Maft; and upon hearing a lamentable Cry, made up and offer'd her Quarter by an Interpreter. The other five Gallies came afterwards to her Affiftance, at which he let fly a broad-fide, but what Execution it did could not be discover'd, tho' the Night was not fo dark as usual. After this there was not the least noise of shooting heard, till an Holland Veffel fell foul upon a Galley call'd the Lucera or Phosphorus, took away her Rudder, and so disabled her, that the funk immediately after with almost all the Persons that were in her. Another Duteb Ship falling soul by chance of the Galley call'd Padilla, split her in pieces, and but narrowly escap'd the same Disaster hersels. Another of the Gallies was cast away through the Carelessness of the Sailors, in its way towards Calais. Two more of them put into Newport: Spinola himself, in the Admiral, escap'd into Dunkirk with a very valuable Cargo; and after he had refitted the three Gallies, he carried them The death to Schiis, and the Year following was kill'd with of 'pmola' (Schiis, and the Year following was kill'd with a Cannon-Shot in a Sea-Fight with the Hollanders, leaving the Character of a very brave Person behind him. We have before took notice of the Commiffion of the Bishop of London, Christopher Perkins, and John Swale, whom the Queen dispatch'd to Embden, An. 1600, had no effect. The Queen therefore fent away to Breme thefe following Perfons upon the fame Errand, viz. Ralph L. Euers, Sir John Herbert Under-Secretary, Daniel Dun Doctor of Law, and one of the Masters of Requests, and Stephen Leister was join'd as an Assistant to them. The King of Denmark sent Mandefunt to them. The King of Denning rope Presberg, Arnold Whitfield Chancellor of Denmark, and fonds Carifius Doctor of Law. English complained, That they were debarred the freedom of Navigation into Musicoup by the Northern Channel, and the liberty of Fishing upon the Coasts and Islands of that Country; and that they were obliged to pay extravagant Impoitions meerly for their Paffage through the Seiml: 1602. They demanded therefore, 'That the ancient Ann. 45. They demanded therefore, 'That the ancient Ann. 45.

Treaties between Henry VII. King of England, A Treaty and John King of Denmark, An. 1490, might with the be revived and put in use; that the precarious Danes, and exorbitant Demands of new Customs might be taken off or remedied, and a fix'd Rate fet down in Writing, with fome stated and cer-tain Laws about Sales and Forfeitures; that their Ships might not be detain'd in the Sound, longer than was necessary; that the Grievances of private Persons might be heard and redress'd; and that no Ammunition might be transported into Spain

Hereupon it was debated on both Sides, 'whether Princes might lawfully raise their Customs Queries Whether this was not againft the Laws of Equity, admitting it had been practised; fince all Customs ought to be founded upon a just and equitable Bottom? Whether what has been determin'd upon mature and ferious Deliberation, and for fome time allowed and tole-rated on both Sides, can be render'd void and null, without a direct Infringement of the Power and Prerogative of those Princes who establish'd the same at first? Whether those Cuftoms impos'd upon the Danes, &c. by the English, in the Reign of Queen Mary, for Wares imported and exported, were not more reasonable than those which the Danes exacted for Paffage only; they pretending to demand as their bare Fee, for fecuring the Sailors, a Rofe-Noble of every Ship, one Piece in the hundred Laftage? Whether Customs are demandable Fallage only, fince they are paid no where elfe but for the Landing and Sale of Goods? Whether the Northern Channel be no free the Northern Channel be no free the Northern Channel be no free to the Northern Channel be not free to the Northern Channel be not free to the Northern Channel be not free to the Northern Channel Chan for the English to fish in, as well as the Islands and Coasts thereof? and, Whether they may not fail through it into Muscowy, the Sea being open to every body, and an Element that is no more in the power of Princes, than the Air itfelf, according to that Expression of the Emperor Antoninus; I am Misser indeed of the Continent, but the Sea is under the disposal of the Law; let therefore the Law of Rhodes determine the matter? Whether, upon this account, it was a Dominion over the Sea, feeing Princes have no Right at all but in those Seas that lie near their own Territories, and that no farther than to fecure their Trade from Pirates and Enemies? Besides that, the Kings of England never prohibited Fishing and Navigation in the Irish Seas between England and Ireland, tho' they are equally Proprietors of the Coaffs on both Sides, as the King of Denmark is of Norway and Iceland, who yet pretends to this Royalty upon not against the Law of Nations, to usurp such

" of War, yet there might be Punishments in-1602. ' flicted severe enough to restrain them; at least there ought to be Reprifals granted for the recovery of Damages, because Princes are very much concern'd to see that their Subjects receive no Detriment: That the English need not complain that any Ammunition was transported into Spain, fince the Danes furnished them with so small a Quantity, that the Spaniards reap'd very little Benefit or Service from it.

When these Things had been canvass'd on both Sides for two Months, and several Papers deliverid in to the faid effect, the Danes told the En-A new In-glish all of a fudden, That they had no power to hibinon ofreview or reinforce the old Treaties, to take off the Danes or abate the Duties and Customs, or to grant the liberty of Fishing in the Iceland or Normay-Seas, without his Majesty's special Licence and Authority, and upon certain Terms and Conditions; and withal, they forbad the English to fish at the Islands of Faroe, (which was most admir'd at of any thing) and that on the fame Penalty they had been debard the faid Liberty upon hereto-

The English, on the other side, protested a-gainst this Inhibition as null and void, as also against any other Declaration that they should make contrary to the plain and express tenour of the Treaties. And when they could come to no other Conclusion but this, That the Points in debate should be refer'd to their several Princes respectively, and the Danes promised to interceed effectually with their King to publish the Rates in his Toll-Books, in order to make appear the certainty of his Numbers, Weights and Measures; and that they should not be alter'd at will, contrary to the Rates fet down in those Books, which were also to be lodg'd in the Hands of the Custom-House-Officers; And that as to the Point of Forseitures, no Goods should be seiz'd but what were conceal'd or unmark'd. The English Commissioners express'd themselves satisfied with the Danes Promises, and the whole Business was put off till another time, with a referve still of all Rights, Dues and Demands to the Queen of England, her Realm and Subjects.

Whilst these Things lay in dispute between the two Crowns, the Popish Ecclesiasticks in England were at Daggers drawing among themfelves; for the Jesuits and secular Priests began to bespatter one another in virulent Pamphlets, and dipt their Tongues and Pens in the bitterest Venom. The fecular Priests were in a mighty Pet that Blackwel, formerly a Student in Oxford, of Trinity-College, and an absolute Creature of Garnet's, who was Provincial of the Jesuits in England, was made Superintendant over them, and therefore they made bold to disclaim his Authority. On this account, he first strip'd 'em of their Faculties, (as they are term'd) and not long after, upon their Appeal to the Pope, procur'd a Breve for declaring them Schismaticks and Hereticks. But they got clear of this Censure, and that by the Verdict of the whole University of Paris. After which they put out feveral Books, in which they extoll the Queen very highly for having treated the Catholicks with great Gentlenefs and Candor from the very beginning of her Reign.

They made it appear, 'That in the eleven first Years of her Reign, not one Papist was call'd into Question on the score of Conscience or Religion; and that in the space of ten Years compleat after the Publication of Pins V's ' Bull against her and the Popish Rebellion, there were were not above 12 Priests put to Death, some of whom were convicted of Trea-' fon, till the Year 1580, the time when the Jefuits had their helf footing in England. Then they prov'd at large, 'That their impious Defighs and Practifes against the Government put all things into Confusion, provid very Prejudicial to the Catholick Interest, and occasion d the making feveral fevere Acts against the Papilts. However, That in the ten Years following, there were not above 50 Priests executed, and 55 more banishid, (so Merciful was the Queen) though she might have Prosecuted em according to Law: That fince then there had been English Semiparies erected in Spain, had been English Schingaries creeted in Spain, by the Management of Parsons, an English Jefuit; and that there were fent from thence, every Year, a flock of overgrown and mischievous Priefis: That this Parsons persuaded the King of Spain to a new Invasion of England and Ireland: That he had princed a Book to affert the Infanta's Title to the Crown of England, and demanded an Oath of the Students of those Seminaries respectively, to maintain the same. That Holt, another Jesuit, incited Hesket to raise a Rebellion, and tamper'd with Cullen, York and Williams to murder the Queen: And that Walped, a Jesuit, persuaded one Squire to attempt the same by Poison; insomuch that the Queen, who was of opinion that Conscience was a free Principle, and ought not to be forc'd, was oblig'd to use Severity against this fort of Men, that she might not expose her own and the Kingdom's Safety.

Parfons, whom they nicknam'd Cowbuck, was tax'd for a Baftard; a Fellow sprung from the Lees of the People, a Man of turbulent and feditious Principles, a Sycophant, a prevaricating Hypocrite, a Government-Broker, and what

The Libels published by the Jesuits against the Taywrite Queen they tax'd as false, and charg'd the Auagainst thors with Treason against God and her Maje. fty. They moreover maintain'd with great strength of Argument, that Fire and Sword are no fit Instruments to propagate Religion, which ought to be maintain'd by a Spirit of Mildness and Gentleness. In the last place, they desir'd the English Catholicks to fend no more of their Children to be bred up in the English Seminaries, where they were like to have no other Princi-ples infus d into 'em, but those of Treason and Rebellion.

Amidst these Heats and Contentions, which with what dengn foever they were carried on, the Bishop of London took care to improve and cherish with all the Art imaginable: The Privy-Council easily perceived, that the Jesuits and the greater part of the Seculars, had this private Aim, to draw off the Queen's Subjects from their Obedeince, and to excite the People to maintain the Popish Religion by force. The Queen did therefore iffue out a Proclamation, commanding the mation a-Jefuits, and fecular Priests their Adherents, im- paint the mediately to depart the Land; and those of the J-suits. more indifferent and moderate Party, to be gone seculars, in two Months, unless they would take the Oaths of Allegiance. And that neither they, nor any of their Order should return into England, on pain of suffering the utmost Penalties of the Laws.

And without doubt there was a kind of Providence in the publishing of this Order, since it prevented a notorious Villainy at that time upon the Anvil: For, whilft thefe things were in agi-tation, Thomas Winter, (as he afterwards confels d himfelf) and Tofmund a Jefluit, were fent over into Spain by the Directions of some of them. where they carried on very dangerous Defigns, Exclusion of James King of Sects from his Vol. II. (N n n n) Rightful Rightful

And while these Attempts were forging in England, the mutinous Soldiers in the Netherlands were up in Arms against the Archduke, and several in France against the King; so that all the Princes together feem'd to lie under the Influence of some ill Planer. In France the Duke de Biron lost his Head, for Rivon beheaded in carrying on a dangerous and wicked Defign againft his Country, and throwing out fome provoking Expressions against the King. I know not the Particulars of his Confession; but great Discoveries he made, and amongst others, something that so russed the Duke of Bovillon, that when he was commanded to appear before the King, he refus'd it; but apprehending the King's Displeasure, and the great Interest of his Adverfaries at Court, he retir'd into Germany. Here-upon the King complain'd of him very heartily to Queen Elizabeth, 'As if he thought his Mar-'riage with Mary of Flarenceunlawful, the Pope's Dispensation good for nothing, and on confequence, his Son a Bastard: That he had defign'd the Reversion of the Crown for the Prince of Conde, aim'd at the Destruction of all the Catholicks of the first Quality, and conspired to betray the Spaniards for a Price to the United-Provinces: That he refus'd to be tried by the Parliament of Paris, and had made his Appeal to the Chamber at Chaftres, which could pretend to no manner of Cognisance in such Matters; and had excepted against his Accufers, which is not allowable in cases of High-Treason: That these were but Tricks and Stra tagems to evade a Trial, and lift himfelf into the Regal Authority; and that he therefore ask'd Queen Elizabeth's Advice, what was best to be done upon this Occasion. She return'd him Answer by her Residentiary Ambassador in France, 'That she was much confor a great Honour to be intrufted with Matters of that high Concernment. She commended at the fame time his Evenness of Temper, in hearkning rather to the Advices of his Friends a fluch a Juncture, than to the Suggetions of a private Person. As for the Advice he was pleas'd to ask, her Answer was, 'That if the Proofs against him were as evident as the Improvement was feared love, he would do not peachment was fcandalous, he would do well to proceed against him according to Law; but till Matters of Fact were clearly made out, it would be unfafe for her to Direct any thing, for fear of offending God, her Conscience, or an innocent Person; lest, however, she should happen to disoblige the King, should he entertain a Thought that she was not duly concern'd for his Safety. She thought therefore that Silence was the best Argument in so doubtful a Point. However, she intreated the King to consult his own Reason and Conscience as closely as might be, and to examin well the Evidences and Confessions, whether they came from Persons of Credit and Probity, and free from all suspicion of Bribery and Corruption, forasmuch as no Man stands free from the Attacks of Malice and Slander. And she infinuated at the same time, That bare Allegations are but flender Proofs to influence the Confcience of an unbyass'd Judge against a Person of fo fair a Character for Virtue. That the Crimes objected, till farther Proof, were much too black and heinous to be with any colour or fhew of Probability imputed to a Person of his Cha-racter. For, who would believe that a Perfon of fo fober and religious an Education, and who had shewn himself fo stanch a Loyalist to

' the King, and fo true a Friend to his Country, in all the Difficulties which had attended both, could ever have harbour'd fuch vile Dengns against his Sovereign, a Prince of that singular Defert; or that he should ever join with a Cabal of Persons of broken Fortunes and Estates, between whom and himself there did not appear the least conformity of Temper or Interest, Religion or Principle, and from whom he could expect nothing but Balenels and Falle-hood? That it was to be fear'd the Spaniards had the chief hand in these Suggestions, on purpose to imbroil the French once more in the Inconveniencies of a civil War.

The King heard all this with great Dissatisfaction, and thereupon let fall Expressions to this purpole: That the Queen though better of Bouillon TheKing's than he had defere d; that he was one of the principal tell.

Abettors of the Earl of Elfex's defign upon the Queen and her Privy-Council; and that when he charged him therewith, he was not able to deny it, but gave him a Smile instead of an Answer. The Crimes charg'd upon him, he affirm'd most solemnly to be really true, and reckon'd the feveral Favours he had confer'd upon him, viz. 'That he had made him one of the Houshold, contriv'd an advantageous Match for him with an Heirefs of the House of Bouillon, gave him the possesfion of Sedan, made him one of the Gentlemen of his Privy-Chamber, and advanc'd him to the Honour of a Marshal and a Duke: That he was very lately refolv'd to have shew'd him Mercy, if he would have ask'd for it: But fince he fcorn'd to ask Pardon, and the Guilt of his Confcience had driven him out of the Kingdom, he had no reason to shew him any farther Favour. He added moreover, That he had interpos'd with the Queen in favour of the Earl of Effex, in an Instance not unlike this, but had defifted when he found his Crime was so notorious. The Ambassador replied, That the Queen enter- Queen's tain'd a good Opinion of the Duke chiefly for these Rea-answer. fions, fignaliz'd his Courage and good Affection to his Prince and Country: That she should be forry to find any Truth in the Matters he flood charg'd with, as in the Earl of Effex's case she had done; and, if so, she should have an absolute Detestation for him. And as for the Advice she presum'd to give, it was purely owing to the Regard she had for the King's Safety, which she tender'd no otherwise than her own.

But, if any Credit may be given to the French Writers, and the more exact Observers among the English, Biron, Bouillon and some others, who thought that they had fecur'd the King's Crown and Dignity at the hazard of their Lives and Fortunes, when they faw him shew more Fa-vour and Countenance to those who but lately plotted his Ruin, and admit them to his Cabinet before others, as if they had been Men of the greatest Defert and best confirm'd Principles, and would wipe off their past Crimes by their future good Behaviour; and observing likewise, that the Stream of all Preferments ran in their Chanel, and that they were intrufted with those very Governments, which in the late Confusions they had seiz'd upon; they could not for-bear shewing some Disgust, when they sound themselves suspected, as it were, for Traitors: And thereupon, as well as upon some other Accounts, imagining they had deferv'd a much better Treatment at his hands, they began to contrive together how to intail their Governments upon themselves and their Heirs. And when they could not compais their Intentions by fair means, they grew more daring and infolent than profess'd Enemies: For some of them were not Ann.45. ashamed to asperse the King, in a most virulent manner, in some Letters lent by them to the Queen; not only as an ungrateful Person, but also as a weak Prince, and a Coward; and that his way of Conquests was not by real Bravery, but meer Bribes and Promises. The Queen norwithstanding, having a great Concern for the King's Honour and Security, and withal a compassionate Sense of the frequent, dangerous and fudden Revolts of the French, fail'd not to cry him up as the great Preserver and Restorer of the almost-wither'd Monarchy of France.

I have mention'd these Passages in respect to the Memory and Merit of the Queen's judicious and prudent Advices to this Prince, her conftant Friendship to an old Ally, and one who was once of the fame Religion as well as Interest, and her prudent Management and Instructions for the Advantage of them both. About the fame time the fent some Succours to Geneva, the Nursery of the Reformation; which was at present affaulted by Stratagem and Force, by the Duke of Savey; the Bishops and People all over England contributing very bountifully towards its Re-

This Year died in the Month of February, at Dr. Nouel, a very great Age, Alexander Nowel, Doctor of Divinity and Dean of St. Paul's, who in Queen Mary's Reign liv'd an Exile in Germany, for the Take of his Religion; which, after his Return he firenuously afferted by his Sermons and other learn'd Difcourfes. He gave 2001, per an. to Brazen-Nose-College in Oxford, where he had his Education, for the Maintenance of 13 Students; and was in his whole Life a shining Pattern of Sobriety and Vertue. He was succeeded by John Overal, Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge, and a Person of extraordinary Learning; he being recommended very highly to the Queen, by Sir Fulk Grevil, who was a mighty Favourer of learned Men.

what was transacted in Ireland this Year. After 1 the Spaniards were driven thence, Tir-Oen fled as fast as his Fear carry'd him, cross the Country, to recover his Lurking-places in Ulfter, and had Perplexity a great many Men Iwept away, by the Floods and Swelling of the Tides, occasion by the Winter-Rains: And he now began to give up his Hopes, and to fill himself with the most dismal Apprehensions; for an ill Conscience would allow him no Peace, but made him afraid of his own Shadow; infomuch that he was every day looking out for new Places to abfcond in, and quitted his Shelter, as foon as he had attain'd it.

I must now look back, and take a View of

The Lord-Deputy, to refresh his Soldiers, who were miserably harafs'd, put them into Winter-Quarters; and having disposed Things in Man-Marches, and army disposed riming in Duan-fer, return'd to Dublin. As foon as the fharp Weather was over, he return'd again by eafy Marches, to infuse the greater Terror, with a good Army, into Ulfer; deligning, as he had done before, to furround the Rebels there, by erecting Forts, and placing Garrifons about 'em, to trepan and hem them in : He transported his Army over Blackwater by Flotes of Timber fastned together; and finding a Ford, not before L. Deputy difcover'd beneath the old Fort, he built a Sconce there, which he call'd by his own Christian FortChar- Name, Charlemount. Tir-Oen being alarm'd heretemoun: at, fet fire to his own House at Dungannon: The Lord-Deputy march'd forward, and as foon as Sir Henry Documy join'd him with his Forces from Langh-Foil, he fent Detachments into all the Country, cut down the ftanding Corn, fer Fire to the Villages and Houses, and drove away the Carrle all about.

The Forts in Longh-Crew, Longh-Reah, and Mo-berlecow, (where Sir John Berkley, a Gentleman 1602. of good Courage, was shot) were deliver'd up to Ann. 45 the Lord-Deputy, who placed a Fort, and a Garrison in it, at Lough-Eaugh, or Lough-Sidney, which he call'd Montjoy, from his own Title, and made Sir Arthur Chichefter, Knight, Governour thereof; who, on the score of his great Courage and Defert, did afterwards succeed the Lord-Deputy.

He fent Sir Henry Decurray back to Derry, and Deckaray he took O-Cahan into favour, after he had fur-the Rebel render'd a great part of his Territory to the Queen's Use; on condition he might hold the rest by Letters-Patents. Then, by the Lord-Deputy's Orders, he wasted Omye, and made a prodigious Slaughter; driving away Cormac-Mac-Baron's Cattle, tho' with fome Hazard to himfelf. After this he was call'd back by the Lord-Deputy; and when he had taken the Caftle of Agar, was fent home to his own Charge, and with him Sir Henry Folliot, whom he made Governour of Balishanon, first with the Limitation of his Deputy, but not long after with a full and plenary Authority, (contrary to all Expectation) the English very much admiring that he was preferr'd before Decevray, who was the Instrument of reducing Balishanon at the first. At the same time (to the equal Surprize of the Irish) he took into his Protection Roderick O-Donel, a notorious Rebel, and let alone Neal Garve, who had hitherto flood Neal-firm to the English, and was so provoked by the Garve Neglect, that in a moody Humour he took upon tikes the him the Title of O-Donel, (which prov'd fital to O-donel, him) and began to tyrannize over the People, and exact from them that Oath, which was the

Just before the Close of the Year, Sir Arthur Chichester and Sir Henry Decuray resolved to attack Tir-Oen on all fides, who was then skulking in the woody Valleys: But all the Avenues and Passages were so miry, the March so troublesom, by reason of the Thickness of the Trees; and withal the Weather was fo foul, and the Scours fo falfe, that they were forced to defill from their Delign. But in conclusion, the Garrisons which were fettled up and down by the Lord-Deputy, did fo annoy and diffurb the Rebels, by frequent and repeated Attacks, and the feveral Marches and Countermarches which they made; that finding themselves begint and furrounded on all fides, and reduced every day to greater Extremities; and that they were forced likewife to skulk and hide, like a parcel of Wild-Beafts, in the Woods and Thickets; a great num- Several of ber of them began to change Sides, as their For- the Rebels tune had done before them; and strove who submitshould be foremost in submitting themselves, tho' with what Caution they could, to the Lord Deputy: They complain'd withal, that Tir-Oen had exposed that Nation to Ruin, purely to cherish a private Difgust; and that this War was carry'd on, to answer his Ends or Interest; but would be fure to prove of the world Confequence to every body elfe. Those who submitted were more favourably treated by the Lord-Deputy; whilst, contrary to his Promise, he took but little Notice of such as adhered faithfully to the Queen's Interest: But perhaps he thought it ne-cessary, to give some Respite to a languishing Government, rather than by an over-halfy Cure occasion its Wounds to bleed afresh. Nor was Tir-Oen in the least ignorant, that his bad For-tune had drawn off his Adherents, and diminish'd his Forces: So that being tired out with his ill Successes, he refolv'd to prevent farther Mischief, out of a Principle of Scis-preservation, consistent enough with the greatest Courage:

Paidon for his great Offences; and gave withal, fuch pregnant Evidences of his Sorrow and Concern for what was past, that the Queen empowred the Lord-Deputy to receive him into Favor, figgrant provided he would ask it upon his Knees, with eden con the fame Submiffiveness he had express'd in his

The Six and fortieth Year of her Reign. 1603.

Tir-Oen had no fooner receiv'd Information hereof, but he carneflly profe'd the Dispatch of the Business, by the Application of Arthur Mac-Baren, his Brother, and some others. And, after feveral Denials, at last, upon Promise that he would submit his Life and Estate entirely to the Queen's Mercy, the Lord-Deputy permitted him to cone to hillifen, having by fome of his Friends been inform'd of the Queen's Indisposition, which was the more dangerous, because of her advanced Age. Hither he came as fait as he absolutely could, with one or two more in his Company; and being admitted into the Presence-Chamber, (where the Lord-Deputy fat in a Chair of State, with a great many Swordsmen about him) he fell on his Knees, at the very Threshold, with a down cast Aspect, and in an Habit as abject and After he had for fome time continued in that Posture, the Lord-Deputy made a Sign to him to come nearer : He got up accordingly, and making a few nearer Approaches, fell once more upon his Knees, and fpoke to this purpose: I acknowlege my Sin against God, and my Offence against my most gracious Queen and Sovereign; to whole Royal Clemency I en-tirely refer myself, and give up my Life and Fortune to her Majethy's Disposal. And as I have been fensible of her Goodness formerly, and have at present felt the Influence of her Power, fo I humbly intreat her to make me in fome degree the Subject of her Royal Compaffion, that I may stand as a Monument of her Clemency to future Ages: I have yet before ' me time enough, and do not want either Strength or Refolution to expiate my Fault, by some good Service for the future. As he was going on, and making fome Complaints of the Injuries he had receiv'd through the Ill-will of fome particular Persons; the Lord-Deputy interrupted him, and said, That there was no Colour to be used for an Offence like his: And after he had spoken a very little more to him, with a Brow of Authority, (which is a Soldier's best Rhetorick) he order'd him to withdraw; and the next day he brought him with him to Dublin, designing to bring him over to the Q. that she might dispose of him at her Pleasure.

Thus was Tir-Oen's Rebellion happily extinsupprefid guish'd, the eighth Year after it broke out; thro' the Queen's better Fortune, and the good Conduct of the Lord Muntjey Lord-Deputy, who was afterwards created, by King James, Earl of De-Difguits, with a little Touch of Ambition ar the bottom: It was fomented and kept up by the Neglect and Stingyness of England: It run all over Ireland, on the Pretence of reftoring Popery, and the Prospect of unbounded Liberty: It got Strength by the Weakness and Credulity of some, and the private Countenance of others, that were in place; and gain'd more Ground by one or two fortunate Successes, back'd by the Spaniard's Gold and Forces, and the Popes Indulgences. It was protracted and ipun out by the ill-tim'd Emulations of the English, the lodging of the Government in two Hands, and the Avarice of the old Soldiers, who made the War a kind of Trade: To which we may add, the subtile Stratagems of 1603. Tir-Oen, his seign d Submissions and treacherous Ann 46. Capitulations, the Protections granted to Offenders, the Difficulty and Straitness of the Roads and Paffages; and, in the last place, the desperate Temper of the Irifh, who trufted more to the Swiftness of their Heels, than the Strength of their Hands.

The Queen, who had hitherto enjoy'd a good Queen Stock of Health, through her exact Temperance talk fick both as to Wine and Diet, (which she used to say at Windfor was the noblest part of Physick) being in her climafterical Year, viz. the 70th Year of her Age; began to perceive in herfelf fome Weeknels and Decay of Health and Spirits, and the ill Weather increas'd her Indisposition; till on the last of Fannary, which provid a very flormy day, fire removed from Westminster to Richmond, to enjoy there the Remains of Life with more Freedom, and hetter Opportunities for the Service of She happen'd on that very day (whether from some Reflexions upon her Death, or Presages as to what might follow) to fay to the Lord-Admiral, for whom the had a particular Respect, My Throne has been held by Princes in the way of Succession, and ought not to go to any but my next and im-mediate Heir. And the Courtiers made it their Observation, that the Queen was never more constant to the Service of the Chappel, than at present: They likewise report, that she then Her Coro-commanded the Ring in which she had been c- nations. fpouled in Form to her Kingdom, at her Coro-Ring took nation, and had never took off before, to be filed from her Finger; because it was so grown into the Flesh, that it could not be got off any other way: And this was look'd on as a very melancholy Omen, and portending no less than a Dissolution of her Marriage with the State; which by that Emblem she had contracted. In the beginning of her Sickness, the Almonds of her Throat fwell'd, but foon came down again : After that her Appetite went off by degrees, and she gave herfelt to a Melancholy, which by she grows the Effects appear'd owing to a Cause as peculiar melanchoas powerful: Whether it was the Violence of her by Diffemper, or the Lofs of Effex, (as his Friends flatter'd themselves) or that she had been overpersuaded to pardon Tir-Oen, after so wast an Expence in supporting the Irifh War; or that she had heard fome Rumours, or receiv'd fome Intelligence from the French King, that many of the Nobility did, by private Letters, court and carefs the K. of Scots, who was adored by them as the Rifing-Sun; whilft she was difregarded, as being just upon her Declension: This she feem'd to give too much Credit to, (as indeed both her Age and her Sex disposed her to be jealous) and perhaps there was Reafon enough: For fome of the Court-Nobility (not to mention the Ladies) most unhandsomly forfook her, when they had the least Reason to have done it; for the Queen was still the same, tho' the Courtiers were chang'd; and 'tis probable they withdrew their Respect, either because her Majesly was very antient, or they tired with the Length of her Reign, (for long Possession lessens the Value of the best things) or else perhaps they long'd for a Change, and grew out of Humour with the prefent times, in hopes of feeing finer Days hereafter; as if all patt Favours were to be for-got, as being a Clog upon the Memory of ungrateful Persons. Nor is it impossible but this might be a kind of Court-Stratagem to quarrel with the prefent Administration, on purpose to curry Favour with the Successor; out of a false Maxim, that the fucceeding Prince takes a kind of Pleafure in the Difparagement of his Prede-

Tir-Cen

Rife and of it.

And in truth, this was a Course they 1603. pursu'd so openly, that they fell at last into quar-dam. 46. rels among themselves; and some were for sending for the Successor, whilst the Queen's Recovery was yet uncertain: infomuch that they feem'd to have made him already a Prefent of their Affections, as much as could be done at that Distance. Hereupon the Queen look'd upon herfelf as an helpless and abandon'd Person; and would, in an Excess of Passion, drop now and then an Expression to this purpose: They have now got me in a Yoak: I have no body left me that I can trust; and my Condition is the perfect Re-verse of what it was. And to embitter her Sorrows yet more, they perfuaded her that she had toft much of her Interest in the Hearts of her People: Whereas they, having a natural kind of Grudge to those in Power, complain'd most of all, that an exorbitant one was lodg'd in fome who were too near the Queen's Person, and indeed had almost stoln away her Prerogative; and that others perceiving the Queen's Decay, were making the belt Markets for themselves, as is usual in such Cases.

As foon as the Rumour was confirm'd that the

Q. grows worfe,

Queen's Illness increas'd upon her, and that she was now greatly averse to Physick, as indeed she was now greatry averte to Prylick, as indeed ine had ever appear'd in her younger Days; 'tis hardly credible, with how forward a Zeal, all Ranks and Conditions of Men, Puritans, Papifts and others, as they were led on by particular Young K. Views and Expectations, hafted away, at all courted by all Part land, to pay their Adorations to the Riing-Sung Land, to pay their Adorations to the Riing-Sung the August Sung. the young King: whose Pretentions the Queen always favour'd at the bottom, though she was too prudent to lay open her Thoughts. And in truth, Persons of all degrees and qualities seem'd And in to concur in the fame Sentiments, and had with great Satisfaction and Regard confider'd and look'd upon him as the undoubted Heir of the Crown: though at the same time there went about some false Reports of a Marriage of his Uncle's Daughter, the Lady Arbella; and the French Ambassador did all he could to raise Commotions, left the two Kingdoms of Britain, England and Scotland, which were as yet divided, should come to an Union. In the beginning of March she was feiz'd with a kind of Stupour or Heaviness, join'd with a Pettishness common enough to ancient Perfons: infomuch as the would frequently fit in a filent Posture, and refrain from eating; as having sequester'd herself for Thought and Meditation. She would admit of no Discourse, unless with the Arch-Bishop of Canter-bury, who join'd with her in Prayer and other

Devotions, which the perform'd with great Fervour, till her Speech left her; and then she was very attentive to his Grace, whilst he pray'd by finn 1. her. About this time the Lord-Admiral having acquainted the rest of the Council with what the Queen had told him in private, when she went last from Westminster, in relation to her Succeffor; they all thought it convenient, that bimfelf, with the Lord-Keeper and Secretary, fhould wait upon her Majelty, and acquaint her, that they were come in the Name of the reft, to learn her Pleafure, in reference to the Seccession. The Queen answerd, with a faint Voice: That the bad already declared. That as the bad held a Regal Scepter, so she defined no other than a Royal Succellar. And the Secretary requelling her to explain herfelf; I would (faid the) have a King fucced me; Oren and who flould that be, but my nearly Kinfman the occlares King of Scots? The Archby. then advining her these the Stee Fix her Thoughts upon God; the reply d, I nat flee did so, nor did her Mind in the least wander from him. When the could no longer express her Piety any other way, she lift up her Eyes and Hands to her Maker, as a Token where her Thoughts were centred; and doubtless the Concern she was in at her Incapacity to send up any other Prayers, did in God's account fupply the Place of an articulate Devotion; and gave apparent Signs of a devout and well-prepared Heart to the Standers-by. On the 24th of March, being the Eve of the She dies. Annunciation, the enjoy'd a blefled Remove from this World to a better; and relign'd that Breath into her Maker's Hands, which the had receiv'd on the Eve of the Bleffed Virgin's Nativity. She took leave of her Crown and Life in fuch a way, that her Decease was the same, which Augustus wish'd for, happy and peaceable; after a glorious Reign of 44 Years and 4 Months, and in the 70th Year of her Age: A Period never yet attain'd by any of the Kings of England.

Her Lofs, which was very confiderable to the Her Lois, Which was very connectable to the English Nation, was in some measure compensated by the mighty Hopes which were conceived of her Successor King James; who was, not K. James many Hours after, proclaimed K.I.N.G., with prothe joyful Shouts and Acclamations of the Peochamid. However, 'tis not possible, that any Succession of Times or Persons should erase the Memory of fo excellent a Princes: The Reputation of her Vertues does still furvive, and cannot fail of descending to Posterity; she being a Person, who (to use her Successor's own Expression) exceeded all the Princes since Augustus's Reign, in the Felicity and Prudence of her Administration.

Ltho' Kings and Princes Sovereigns, owing their Homage and Service only to the Almighty God the King of all Kings, are to yield are in that respect not bound to yield Account or render the Reasons of their Actions to any their cti-on only to Almigh-and that amongit the most Ancient and Christian Monarchs, the same Lord God hath committed to us the Sovereignty of this Realm of England, and other our Dominions, which we hold immediately of the same Almighty Lord, and so thereby accountable only to his divine Majesty; yet we are, notwithstanding this our Prerogative, at this time efpecially, mov'd, for divers Rea-fons hereafter briefly remember'd, to publish not only to our own natural loving Subjects, but also to all others our Neighbours, especially to such princes and States as are our Confederates, or have for their Subjects cause of Commerce with our Countries and People, what our Intention is at this time, and upon what just and reasonable Grounds we are moved to give Aid to our next Neighbours, the natural People of the Low-Countries, being by long Wars and Persecutions of strong Nations there, lamentably affli-Aed, and in present Danger to be brought into a perpetual Servitude. First, It is to be understood, (which percase is not perfectly known to a great number of Perfons) that there hath been, time out of mind, even by the natural Situation of those Low-Countries and our Realm of England, one directly opposite the People to the other; and by reason of the ready croffing of England of the Seas, and multitudes of large and commodiand them ous Havens respectively on both sides, a continual Traffick and Commerce betwixt the People of Countries. England, and the natural l'eople of these Low-Countries, and so continued in all ancient Times, when the several Provinces thereof, as Flanders, Holland and Zealand, and other Countries to them adjoining, were ruled and possessed by several Lords, and not united together, as of late Years they have been by intermarriages, and at length by concurrences of many and fundry Titles have also been redue'd to be under the Government of their Lords that fucceeded to the Dukedom of Burgundy, whereby there hath been in former Ages ma- Confedeny special Alliances and Confederations, not only rations betwixt the Kings of England, our Progenitors, both be-and the Lords of the faid Countries of Flanders, twist the Holland, Zealand, and their Adherents; but also England betwixt the very natural Subjects of both Coun- and Lords tries, as the Prelates, Noblemen, Citizens, Bur- of the geffes, and other Commonalties of the great Ci- Lowties and Port-Towns of either Country reciprocally, by special Obligations and Stipulations Subjects under their Seals interchangeably, for mainte of both nance both of Commerce and Intercourse of Countries. Merchants, and also of special mutual Amity to be observ'd betwixt the People and Inhabitants of both Parties as well Ecclefiaftical as Secular: And very express Provision in such Treaties contained for mutual Favours, Affections, and all ThePeople other friendly Offices, to be used and prosecu- of bothshe ted by the People of the one Nation towards the Countries other. By which mutual Bonds, there hath con-fpecialOb-tinu'd perpetual Unions of the Peoples Hearts ligations together, and so by way of continual Inter-inter-courses, from Age to Age, the same mutual changably Love hath been inviolably kept and exercis'd, as it had been by the Work of Nature, and never utterly diffolv'd, nor yet for any long time dif-Offices, continu'd, however the Kings and the Lords of the Countries fometimes (tho' very rarely) have been at difference, by finiter means of fome other Princes, their Neighbours, envying the Felicity of these two Countries.

And for maintenance and testimony of these Treaties natural Unions of the People of these Kingdoms Treaties extant of and Countries in perpetual Amity, there are extant of tant fundry authentick Treaties and Transactions time, befor mutual Commerce, Intercourse and strict A-twist the mity of ancient Times: As for Example, Some king of beginning accorded in the Times of Hen VI. out Progenitor, and Philip II. Duke of Eurgundy, Dukes of Dukes of Eurgundy, Eurgun and Inheritor to the County of Flunders by the Burguard, Lady Margarat his Grandmother, which was a low the bove 140 Years pair, and the fune also renew domantee by the noble Duke Charles his Son, Father to the their their King of Spain's Grandmother, and Husband to Countries. the Lady Margarer, Sifter to our Great Grandfa-ther King Edward IV. and after that, of new to the present King of Spain.

Conventian In all which Treaties, Transactions and Conom for the federations of Amity and mutual Commerce, it was also at all times specially and principally contained in express Words, by Conventions, Concords and Conclusions, that the natural People and Subjects of either fide, should shew mutual Favours and Duties one to the other, and should fafely, freely and securely Commerce together in every their Countries, and so hath the same mutual and natural Concourse and Commerce been without interruption continu'd in many Ages, far above the like Example of any other Countries in Christendom, to the Ho-nour and Strength of the Princes, and to the fingular great Benefit and Inriching of their People, until of late Years that the King of Spain departing out of his Low-Countries into Spain, hath been (as it is to be thought) counfelled by his

Spaniards Counsellors of Spain, to appoint Spaniards, Fogra lately reiners and Strangers of firange Blood, Men payanted more exercised in Wars than in peaceable Go-G seens s vernment; and some of them notably delighted in the or in Blood, as hath appear'd by their Actions, to Countries, be the chiefest Governors of all his said Lowto the vio. de the chiefest Governors of all his laid Low-lation of Countries, contrary to the ancient Laws and Cuthe Liber- stoms thereof, having great plenty of noble, vaties of the liant and faithful Persons naturally born, and Country. fuch as the Emperor Charles, and the King himfelf, had to their great Honours used in their Service, able to have been employ'd in the rule of those Countries. But these Spaniards, being meer Strangers, having no natural Regard in their Government to the Maintenance of those Countries and People in their ancient and nacountries and reopic in their ancient and natural manner of peaceable Living, as the most noble and wife Emperor Charke, yea, and as his Son King Philip himself had, whilst he remain'd in those Countries, and used the Countels of the States and natural for the Countries. States and natural of the Countries, not violateing the ancient Liberties of the Countries; but contrariwife, these Spaniards being exalted to absolute Government, by Ambition and for private Lucre, have violently broken the ancient The Deftruction. of the No-Laws and Liberties of all the Countries, and in the People a tyrannous fort have banish'd, kill'd and deffroy'd, without order of Law, within the space of a few Months, many of the most ancient and of the Countries by the principal Persons of the natural Nobility that were most worthy of Government. And how-Spinish Govern-foever in the beginning of thefe cruel Perfecutions, the prerence thereof was for maintenance of the Romish Religion, yet they spared not to deprive very many Catholicks and Ecclefiastical Persons of their Franchises and Privileges; and of the chiefest that were executed of the Nobility, none was in the whole Country more afmentable feeted to that Religion than was the noble and valiant Count of Egmond, the very Glory of

of Eq-mond, the Courtery; who neither for his fingular Vi-form that Country; who neither for his fingular Vi-mond, the corries in the Service for the King of Spain can Glory of be forgotten in the true Histories, nor for the Cruelties used for his Destruction to be but for Countries ever lamented in the Hearts of the natural People of that Country. And farthermore, to bring these whole Countries in Servitude to Spain, these forein Governors have by long intestine War, with multirudes of Spaniards, and with some few Italians and Almains, made the greater part of the faid Countries (which with their Riches, by common Estimation, answer'd the Emperor Charles equally to his Indies) in a manner desolate; and have also tamentably dettroy'd by Sword, Famine, and other cruel manners of Towns 8 Death, a great part of the natural People, and with the now the rich Towns and strong Places being wealth defolate of their natural Inhabitants, are held thereof, and kept chiefly with Force by the Spa-possessed by the All which pitiful Miseries and horrible Calafion very greatly pitied, which appear'd specially this present Year, when the French King pretended to have receiv'd them to his Protection, had not (as the States of the Country and their Deputies were answer'd) that certain, untimely French K. and unlook'd for Complors of the House of Guife, effers to ftir'd and maintain'd by Money out of Spain die h veaide ftir'd and maintain'd by Money out of Spain, di- h reaided sturb'd the good and general Peace of France, to bit and thereby urged the King to forbear from the subjection Refolution he had made, not only to Aid the the op oppressed People of the Low-Countries against the pressed Spaniards, but also to have accepted them as his reopie of the Lowown Subjects. But in very truth, howfoever Countries they were pitied, and in a fort for a time com-forced and kept in hope in France by the French King, who also hath oftentimes earnestly solicited us as Queen of England, both by Message and Writing, to be careful of their Desence: Yet in respect that they were otherwise more straightly knit in ancient Friendship to this Realm than to any other Country, we are fure that they could be pitied of none for this long time with more cause and grief generally, than of our Subjects of this our Realm of England, being their most ancient Allies and familiar Neighbours, and that in fuch manner, as this our Realm of England and those Countries have been by common Language of long time refembled and termed as Man and Wife. And for thefe many friendly Meffages and Ambaffadors, by England's many Letters and Writings to the faid King of continual Spain, our Brother and Ally, declar'd our Com-driend paffion of this so evil and cruel Usage of his divise so passion of this so evil and cruel Usage of his divise so natural and loyal People by fundry his martial Spain for Governors, and other his Men of War, all Stran-reftraining gers to thee his Countries. And farthermore, of the Type as a good loving Sifter to him, and a natural his Go-good Neighbour to his Low-Countries and People, sectors. we have often, and often again, most friendly warned him, That if he did not otherwise by his Wifdom and Princely Clemency reftrain the Tyranny of his Governors and Cruelty of his Men of War, we fear'd that the People of his Countries should be forc'd, for safery of their Lives, and for continuance of their native Country in their former State of their Liberties, to feek the Protection of fome other foreign Lord, or rather to yield themselves wholly to the Sove-reignty of some mighty Prince, as by the anci-ent Laws of their Countries, and by special Privileges granted by some of the Lords and Dukes of the Countries to the People, they do pretend and affirm, that in such cases of general Injustice, and upon fuch violent breaking of their Privi-leges, they are free from their former Homages.

and at liberty to make choice of any other Prince to be their Prince and Head. The proof where-of, by Examples past, is to be seen and read in the ancient Hiftories of divers Alterations, of the Lords and Ladies of the Countries of Brabant, Flanders, Holland and Zealand, and other Countries to them united by the States and People of the Countries, and that by some such Alteration, as the Stories do testify, Philip the Duke of mities of these most rich Countries and People, are of all their Neighbours at this day, even of such as in ancient Time have been at frequent Difcord with them, through natural Compaf-urgent Caufes, and many others, we have by The Q. of of Spain's Interest is derived; but the farmer discussion hereof, we leave to the view of the Monuments and Records of the Countries. And now for the Purpofes to stay them from yielding The Qual themselves in any like fort to the Sovereignty England's of any other strange Prince, certain Years path, meaning upon the earnest Request of sundry of the greatto stay the test Persons of Degree in those Countries, and most obedient Subjects to the King, fuch as Commerce were the Duke of Afron, and the Marquis of floor yet. Hancy, yet living, and of fuch others as had ding their principal Offices in those Countries in the time further than the countries of the countries. of the Emperor Charles, we yielded at their imtherforein portunate Requests, to grant them prests of Money, only to continue them as his Subjects, and to maintain themselves in their just Desence againft the Violence and Cruelties of the Spaniards their Oppreffors, thereby flaying them from yielding their Subjection to any other Prince from the faid King of Sp.in: And during the time of that our Aid given to them, and their flay in their Obedience to the K. of Spain, we did fixely acquaint the fame King with our Actions, and did ftill continue our friendly Advices to him, to move him to command his Governors and Men of War, not to use such infolent Cruelties against his People, as might make them to despair of his Tavours, and seek some other Lord.

And in these kind of Persuasions and Actions we continu'd many Years, not only for Compassion of the miserable State of the Countries, but of a natural Disposition to have the ancient Conditions of straight Amity and Commerce for our Kingdoms and People to continue with the States and the People of the faid Dukedom of Burgundy and the Appendants, and namely, with our next Neighbours the Councies of Flanders, Helland and Zealand. For we did manifestly fee, if the Nation of Spain should make a Conquest of those Countries, as was and yet is apparently intended, and plant themselves there as they have done in Naples and other Countries, are the fact of hostile Enterprize of a Power of Spaniards, being the span fent within these sew Years by the Victoria adding thereto the late Examples of the violent and the Pope into our Realm of Ireland, with an intent manifestly confessed by the Captains, and the Pope into our Realm of Ireland fent by the that those Numbers were sent aforehand to seize Ring of spain and upon some Strength there, to the intent with spain and upon some Strength there, to pursue a Conquest thereof; we did, we fay again, manifestly fee in what Danger our Self, our Countries and People might shortly be, if in convenient time we did not speedily otherwise regard to prevent or stay the same. And yet notwithstanding our said of-ten Requests and Advices given to the King of Spain, manifestly for his own Weal and Honour, we found him by his Council of Spain fo unwilling in any fort to incline to our friendly Counfel, that his Governors and Chieftains in his Low-Countries increased their Cruelties towards his own afflicted People, and his Officers in Spain offer'd daily greater Injuries to ours, reforting Traffick; yea, they of his Council thither for in Spain, would not permit our express Messenger with our Letters to come to the King their Mafter's Presence; a matter very strange, and against the Law of Nations.

of Spain. And the cause of this our writing and sending The just to the king, proceeded of Matter that was worof Bernar, thy to be known to the King, and not unmeet of Bernar, thy to be declared to the World, to shew also to be declared to the World, to shew otEngland imparting to him our Griefs, and to let it appear how evil we have been nfed by his Ministers, as in fome part may appear by this that followeth.

Altho' we could not have these many Years past any of our Servants whom we fent at fundry times as our Ambaffadors to the King our good Brother as was meet, fuffer'd to continue there without many Injuries and Indignities offer d to their Families, and divers times to their own Persons by the greatest of his Counfellors, so as they were constrain'd to leave their Places, and fome expell'd, and in a fort banish'd the Country, without caufe given by them, or notified to us; yet we, minding to continue very good Friendfilip with the king, as his good Sitter, did of long time and many Years give favourable allowance of all that came as his Ambailadors to us, faving only upon manifest dangerous Practices attempted by two of them to trouble our State, whereof the one was Girald Delpes, a very turbulent-spirited Person, and altogether unskilful and unapt to deal in Princes Affairs being in Amity, as at his return into Spain he was to there alfo reputed; the other and last was Bernardin de Mendeza, one whom we did accept and use with great l'avour a long time, as was manifestly seen in our Court, and we think cannot be denied by himfelf, but yet of late Years (we know nor by what Direction) we found him to be a fecres great Favourer to fundry our evil disposed and feditious Subjects, not only to fuch as lurked in our Realm, but also to such as fled the same, being notoriously condemn'd as open Rebels and Traitors, with whom, by his Letters, Meffages and fecret Counfels, he did in the end devise how with a Power of Men, partly to come out of Spain, partly out of the Low-Countries, whereof he gave them great Comfort in the King's Name, an Invasion might be made into our Realm, fetting down in Writing the manner how the fame should be done, with what number of Men and Ships, and upon what Coasts, Ports and Places of our Realm by special Name, and who the Perfons should be in our Realm of no small Account, that should favour this Invation and take part with the Invaders, with many other Circumstances declaring his full fet Purpose and Labours taken, to trouble us and our Realm very bours taken, to trouble us and our recain very dangerously, as hath been most clearly proved and confessed by such as were in that Confederacy with him, whereof some are fled and now do frequent his Company in France, and some were taken, who confessed at great length by writing the whole course herein held by the said Amballador, as was manifestly of late time publish'd to the World upon Francis Throgmorton's, a principal Traitor's, Examination. And when we found manifestly this Ambailador to dangerous an Instrument, or rather a Head to a Rebellion and Invasion, and that for a Year or more together he never brought to us any Letter from the King his Mafter, notwithstanding our often request made to him, That he would by some Letter from the King to us, let it appear, that it was the King's will that he should deal with us in his Master's Name in fundry things that he propounded to us as his Ambassador, which we did judge to be contrary to the King his Mafter's will; we did finally cause him to be charged with thefe dangerous Practices, and made it patent to him how, and by whom, with many other Circumstances we knew it, and therefore caufed him in very gentle fort to be content within fome reafonable time to depart out of our Realm, the rather for his own Safety, as one in very deed mortally hated of our People; for the which we granted him favourable Con- He is faduct, both to the Sea and over the Sea; and you ally thereupon we did freedily fend a Servant of ours deput the not Spain with our Letters to the King, only to Realm certify him of this Accident, and to make the whole matter apparent unto him; and this was

And bende these Indignities, it is most mani-fest how his Ministers also have both heretosore many times, and now lately practifed here in England by means of certain Rebels, to have procur'd fundry Invafions of our Realm, by their Forces out of Spain and the Low-Countries. Very hard Recompences (we may fay) for fo many our good Offices. Hereupon we hope no rea-fonable Perfon can blame us, if we have dispofed ourselves to change this our former course, and more carefully to look to the Safety of our felf and our People: And finding our own Dangers indeed very great and eminent, we have been the more urgently provok'd to attempt and accelerate some good Remedy, for that befides many other Advices given us both at home and from abroad, in due time to withstand these Dangers, we have found the general Disposition of all our own faithful People very ready in this case, and earnest in offering to us both in Parliaments and otherwise, their Services with their Bodies and Blood, and their Aids with their Lands and Goods, to withftand and prevent this prefent common Danger to our Realm and themfelves, evidently feen and feared by the fubverting and rooting up of the ancient Nation of these Low-Countries, and by planting the Spanish Nation and Men of War, Enemies to our Countries, there so near unto us. And besides these Occasions and Considerations, we did also call to our Remembrance our former fortunate Proceeding by God's special Favour, in the beginning of our Reign, in remedying of a like Mif-The Q. of chief that was intended against us in Scotland by England's certain Frenchmen, who then were directed only proceding proceeding

Scotland Dolphin of France, in like manner as the Offfprings of the faid House have even now lately wherein fought to attain to the like inordinate Power in the Houle France; a matter of fome Consequence for ourfelves to confider, altho' we hope the King our good Brother professing fincere Friendship tobrought it ward us, as we profess the like to him, will moderate this aspiring Greatness of that House, that neither himself nor the Princes of his Blood be over-ruled, nor we (minding to continue perfect Friendship with the King and his Blood) be by the faid House of Guise and their Faction disquieted or disturbed in our Countries. But now to return to this like Example of Scotland aforefaid, when the French had in like manner (as the Spaniards have now of long time attempted in the Low-Countries) fought by force to have fubdued the People there, and brought them into a Servitude to the Crown of France, and also by the ambitious Defires of the faid House of Guise, to have proceeded to a War by way of Scotland, for the Conquest of our Crown for their Niece the Queen of Scots (a matter most manifest to the common knowledge of the World); it pleased Almighty God, as it remaineth in good memory to our Honour and Comfort, to farther our Intention and honourable and just Actions at that time in such fort, as by out aiding them of the Nation of Scotland being fore oppressed with the French, and univerfally requiring our Aid, we procur'd to that Realm (though to our great Cost) a full deliverance of the Force of Strangers and Danger of Servitude, and restored Peace to the whole Country, which hith continud there ever fince many Years, faving that at fome time of Partialities of certain of the Noblemen, as hath been usual in that Country, in

And to our Actions only of at that time came to fo good Success by the the Q of goodness of God, as both our own Realm and England that of Scotland hath ever fince remained in better Amity and Peace than can be remember'd these many hundred Years before, and yet nothing hereby done by us, nor any cause justily given, but that also the French Kings that have fince fucceeded, which have been three in number, and all Brethren, have made and concluded divers Treaties for good Peace with us, which presently continue in force on both Parties, notwithstanding our foresaid Actions attempted for removing out of Scotland of the faid French Forces, fo transported by the only Direction of the House of Guile.

And the' our farther Intention also is or may be to take into our Guard some few Towns upon the Sea-fide next opposite to our Realm, which otherwise might be in danger to be taken by the Strangers, Enemies of the Country; yet there-Caules of in confidering we have no meaning at this time to take and reftrain the same to our own proper Use, we hope that all Persons will think it agreeable with good Reafon and princely Policy, that we should have the guard and use of some such Places for fure Access and Recess of our People and Soldiers in fafety, and for furniture of them with Victuals and other things requifite and neceffary, whilst it shall be needful for them to continue in those Countries for the aiding thereof in these their great Calamities, Miseries and eminent Danger, and until the Countries may be deliver'd of fuch strange Forces as do now oppress them, and recover their ancient lawful Liberties and manner of Government to live in Peace as they have heretofore done, and do now most earnestly in lamentable manner defire to do, which are the very only true ends of all our Actions now intended, howfoever malicious Tongues may utter their canker'd Conceits to the contrary, as at this day the World aboun-deth with fuch blafphemous Reports in Writings and infamous Libels, as in no Age the Devil hath more abounded with notable Spirits replenished with all Wickedness to utter his Rage a-gainst Professors of Christian Religion. But thereof we leave the Revenge to God the fear-cher of Hearts, hoping that he, beholding the Sincerity of our Heart, will grant good Success to our Intentions, whereby a Christian Peace may ensue to his divine Honour, and Comfort to all them that love Peace truly, and will seek it fincerely.

> An Addition to the DECLARATION, Touching the Slanders published of her Majesty.

> A Free we had united out seemed written in came to our hands a Pamphlet written in invierd Nuovo Adviso, Fter we had finish'd our Declaration, there Italian, printed at Milan, intitl'd, Nuovo Adviso, directed to the Archbishop of Milan, containing a Report of the Expugnation of Antwerp by the Prince of Parma: By the which we found our felf most maliciously charged with two notable Crimes, no less hateful to the World than most repugnant and contrary to our own natural In-clination. The one, with Ingratitude towards the King of Spain, who (as the Author faith) faved our Life, being justly, by Sentence, adjudged to Death in our Siffer's time. The other, that there were some Persons procur'd to be corrupted with great Promises, and that with our Intelligence, as the Reporter addeth in a Parenthesis in these Words (as it was said), that the Life of the Prince of Parma should be taken a-And for the better proving and countenancing of this horrible Lye, it is farther added in the faid Pamphlet, That it pleased the Lord God to discover this, and bring two of the wicked Perfons to Juftice. Now, knowing how Men are maliciously bent in this declining Age of the World, both to judge, speak and write maliciously, falfely and irreverently of Princes; and holding nothing to dear unto us, as the conservations of our Reputation and Honour to be blameless; we found it very expedient, not to suffer two such horrible Imputations to pass under Silence, lest for lack of Answer it might argue a kind of Guiltiness, and did therefore think, that what might be alledg'd by us for our Justification in that behalf, might most aprly be join'd unto this former Declaration now to be publish'd, to lay open before the World the manner and ground of our Proceeding in the Caufes of the Low-Countries.

And for answer of the first Point wherewith we are charged touching our Ingratitude towards the King of Spain, As we do most willingly acknowledge that we were beholding unto him in the time of our late Sifter, which we then did acknowledge very thankfully, and have fought many ways fince, in like fort, to requite, as in our former Declaration by our Actions may appear; fo do we utterly deny, as a most manifest untruth, that ever he was the cause of the faving of our Life,a sa Perfon by courfe of Juftice fentenced unto Death, who ever carried our felf towards our faid Sifter in dutiful fort, as our Loyalty was never called in question, much less any Sentence of Death pronounced against us: A matter fuch, as in respect of the ordinary course of Proceeding, as by process in Law, by place of Trial, by the Judge that should pro-nounce such Sentence, and other necessary Circumftances in like cases usual, especially against one of our Quality, as it could not but have been publickly known, if any fuch thing had been put in execution. This then being true, we leave to the World to judge how maliciously and injuriously the Author of the faid Pamphlet dealeth with us, in charging us by fo notable an untruth with a Vice that of all others we do most hate and abhor. And therefore by the manifest untruth of this Imputation, Men not transported with Passion may easily discern what untruth is contain'd in the second, by the which we are charged to have been acquainted with an intended attempt against the Life of the saidPrince. A matter, if any fuch thing should have been by us intended, must have proceeded either of a misliking we had of his Person, or that the profecution of the Wars in the Low-Countries was fo committed unto him, as no other might profecute the same but he.

And first for his Person: We could never learn that he hath at any time, by Act or Speech, done any thing that might justly breed a millike in us towards him, much less a hatred against his Person in so high a degree, as to be either privy or affenting to the taking away of his Life: Befides, he is one of whom we have ever had an honourable Conceit, in respect of those singular rare Parts we always have noted in him, which hath won unto him as great Reputation, as any Man this day living carrieth of his Degree and Quality; and so have we always deliver'd out by Speech unto the World, when any Occasion hath been offer'd to make mention of him. Now, touching the Profecution committed unto him of the Wars in the Low-Countries, As all Men of Judgment know that the taking away of his Life carrieth no likelihood that the fame shall work any end of the faid Profecution; fo is it manifeffly known, that no Man hath dealt more Honourably than the faid Prince, either in duly observing of his Promise, or extending Grace and Mercy where Merit and Defert hath craved

the fame; and therefore no greater Impiety by any could be wrought, nor nothing more prejudicial to our felf (16 long as the King shall continue the prosecution of the Cause in that forcible fort he now doth) than to be an Instrument to take him away from thence by such violent means, that hath dealt in a more honourable and gracious fort in the Charge committed unto him, than any other that hath ever gone before him, or is likely to succeed after him.

Now therefore, how unlikely it is, that we, having neither cause to millike of his Person, nor that the prosecution of the Wars should cease by loss of him, should be either Author, or any way assent of her her hard to cause, not with the Eyes of their Affection, but do measure and weigh things according to Honor and Reafon. Besides, it is likely if it had been true that we had been any way chargeable, (as the Author reporteth) the Consessions of the Parties executed, (importing such matter as by him is alledgd) would have been both produced and and published; for Malice leaveth nothing unfearchable, that may nourish the Venom of that Humour.

The best course therefore that both we and all other Princes can hold in this unfortunate Age, that oversloweth with numbers of malignant spirits, is, through the Grace and Goodness of Almighty God, to direct our course in such fort, as they may rather shew their Wills through Malice, than with just cause by defert to say ill, or desice Princes either by Speech or Writing; afforing ourselves, that besides the Punishment that such wicked and infamous Libellors shall receive at the hands of the Almighty for depraving of Princes and lawful Magistrates, who are God's Ministers, they both are and always shall be thought by all good Men, unworthy to live upon the face of the Earth.

The Order of the Rites and Ceremonies used at the Consecration of the most Reverend Father in Christ Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, in the Chappel at his Mannor of Lambeth, on Sunday the 17th of December, 1559.

Imprimis, THE Chappel was hung towards the Eaft with Tapeftry, the Floor cover'd with red Cloth, and a Table for the Communion-Service was plac'd in the Eaftern part of the Chappel, on which was laid a Tapettry Carpet and a Cushion.

On the South-fide of the Eaftern-part of the Chappel were placed four Chairs for the four Eishops appointed to confecrate the Archbishop.

Before these Chairs was placed a Footstool cover'd with Tapestry, and on it were laid Cushions for the Bishops to kneel on.

In like manner was a Chair and Footfool, with a Cufhion, plac'd on the North-fide of the Eaftern-part of the faid Chappel for the Archbishop.

Every thing being thus prepar'd, about five or fix of the Clock in the Morning the Archbishop came into the Chappel at the Western-Gate, in his scarlet Robes, with his Hood on; before him were carried four Tapets, and with him came the four Bishops appointed to assist at his Consecration, to wit, William Barlow late Bishop of Bath and Wells but now of Chiebser, John Scory late of Chiebser but now elect of Hereford, Miles Coverdale late Bishop of Exeter, and John Hodkinne Suffragun of Redford. Which Bishops having taken their several Scutts according to their Order: The Morning Prayer was read with a difflinct Voice by Andrew Pierson the Archbishop's Chaplain; after Prayers the aforesaid John Scory went up to the Pelpit, and made an excellent Sermon on this Text; I Fet. 5. 1. The Elders which are among you I exbort, who am also an Elder Str.

After Setmon the Archbishop and the four Bihops went out of the Chappel into the Vestry to prepare themselves for the Communion, and very foon after return'd into the Chappel again by the Western-Door thus dressed. The Archbishop had on a Linen Surplice. The Bishop of Chichester elect, who administer d the sacrament, had on a sink Cope, and he was affisted therein by two of the Archbishop's Chaplains likewise with silk Copes on, viz. Nicholan Bullingham Archdeacon of Linesla, and Edmand Gest Archdeacon of Canterbary. The elect Bishop of Hereford and the Suffragan of Bedford had Linen Surplices on.

But Miles Coverdale wore nothing over his long Cloth Gown.

Being thus cloathed and provided, they proceeded to the Communion-Table; the Archbiflop being on his Knees at the lowermost Step of the Chappel.

After the Gospel was read, the aforesaid Bi shop elect of Hereford, Suffragan of Bedford, and Miles Coverdale brought the Archbishop to the Bishop of Chichester elect, sitting near the Communion-Table in a Chair, and said thus.

Most Reverend Father in God, we present unto you this godly and well-learned Man to be Ordained and Conservated an Archbishop.

After they had thus faid, the Queen's Mandate for Confectating him Archbishop was produced and read by Thomas Tale Doctor of the Laws; then the Oath of Supremacy (appointed by Act of Parliament 1 Eliz.) was tender'd the Archbishop; which after he had solemnly taken and fworn to upon the holy Evangelists, the Bifliop of Chickefter elect mov'd the Congregation to pray, and then proceeded to fing the Litany, the Choir finging the Responses. Which being done, fome Questions were asked the Archbishop by the Bishop of Chichester elect; and after fome Prayers and Suffrages, according to the form appointed by Authority of Parliament to be used on these Occasions, the Bishops of Chi-chester, Hereford, Suffragan of Bedjord, and Miles Coverdule laying their Hands on the Archbishop's Coverdate (4) Ing their traines on the Archbidhop's Head, faid, Receive the Hdy Gloff; and remember that thou fir up the Grace of God, which is given then by this Imposition of our Hands: For God hath not given us the Spirit of Feer, but of Fourer, and Love, and soberness. When they had faid this, they delivered a Ribbi into the Archbidhop's Uned. ver'd a Bible into the Archbishop's Hands, saying thefe Words, Give heed unto Reading, Exhortation and Doctrine. Think upon the things contained tion and Doctrine. Think upon the things contained in this Book. Be diligent in them, that the Increase coming thereby may be maniful unto all Men. Take beed unto the fell, and to Doctrine, and be diligent to doing them is for by so doing them the better that the them that there there is not been that the them that there there is the solution of the solution that the so Lod. When they had faid thus, the Bishop of thichester went on to the remaining part of the Communion-Service, (without putting a Crofier Vol. II. (Q 0 0 0 2) into the Archbishop's Hand) and the Archbishop, the aforefaid Bishops and several others, receiv'd

the Communion together.

The Solemnity being thus over, the Archbi-fhop, accompanied with the four Bishops who had confecrated him, went out at the North-Door of the Eastern-part of the Chappel, and foon after return'd through the same Door, with the faid Bishops, in his Episcopal Habit, with his Rochet and other Robes, and about his Neck was a Tipper of fine Sables Furs. In the same manner were the Bishops of Chichester and Hereford cloathed in their Episcopal Habits; but Coverdale and the Suffragan of Bedford wore only their usual long Gowns. Then the Archbishop, going towards the Western-Gate of the Chappel, gave white Staves to Thomas Doyle his Steward, folin Baker his Treasurer, and John March his Comptroller; by which Ceremony he confirm'd them in their faid Employments.

All things being in the fuld manner finish'd in Order above-describ'd, the Archbishop went out of the Chappel at the Western-Door; those of his Family and Relations of better Note and Quality going before, and the rest following af-

All these things were done and perform'd in the Presence of the Reverend Fathers in Christ, Edmund Gryndal elect Bishop of London, Rich. Cox elect Bishop of Ely, Edwin Sandes elect Bishop of Worcester, Anthony Huse Esq; chief Register of the Province of Canterbury, Thomas Argal Register of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, Thomas Willet and John Incent Publick-Notaries, and several others.

The Record from which this Account is tranflated is in the Registry of the See of Canterbury, and a Copy of it (found among Archbishop Parker's MSS) is in Bennet-College-Library in Cambridge, (of which College he had been Fellow and Matter, and to which he left his Books and Papers) and the Letter, manner of Writing, and all other Circumstances, bring such Conviction that they are genuine, that the learned Univerfity of Cambridge, have given their folemn and unanimous Attestation to the Record, as the Reader may fee annex'd to Mr. Brown's Latin Sermons in Vindication of the Orders of the Church of England, Intitl'd, Concio ad Clerum ha-bita coram Academia Cantabrigiensi, Junii 11. 1687. A Thoma' Browne, &c. Printed at Cambridge 1688. And tho' this be a most evident Proof of this Confecration, since it is a Rule in the Law, Instrumenta publica potiora funt Testibus, that publick Deeds and Records are better Proof than Witnesses; yet by the Providence of God, when the Story of the Nag's-Head-Ordination was trump'd up and maintain'd, in which time Mr. Mason wrote his excellent Book De Ministerio Anglicano, the Right Honourable Charles Howard Earl of Nottingham was alive, who was present at the Confectation of Archbishop Parker at Lambeth, and bore witness to the truth of it; a Testimony worth that of an hundred Neals, on whose Report alone the Fable of the Nag's-Head-Ordination was rais'd, and whose only credit it has hitherto had for its Support.

Nor was the Ordination of Archbishop Parker regularly perform'd with respect to the Place and Ceremonies used only, but likewise with regard to the Persons consecrating him, who had been duly ordain'd Bishops themselves before: These Perions were Barlow, Scory, Coverdale and the Suffragan of Bedford. As for Barlow, we are affaired he was fuccellively Bifton of St. Afjab, St. Davids, Bath and Wells, and Chichefer, that he was acknowledg'd a Bishop by all Estates of Men did Homage to the King; that he fat in Parliament among the Spiritual Lords; that he exercis'd the Jurisdiction of a Bishop, and (what was the worst Mark of all) that he alienated some of his Mannors to the Crown, tho' there be no par- * Register ticular Register by whom he was confectated in Cramer, Henry VIII's time, * more than in general, that p. 179. he was made a Bishop in those Days. | F. The Answer of the Queen's Highness to the Petition propounded unto her by the Lower-House, concerning her Marriage. Friday, Feb. 10. 1558.

As I have good cause, so do I give you all my hearty Thanks for the good Zeal and loving Care you seem to have, as well towards me, as to the whole Estate of your Country. Your Petition, I perceive, confifteth of three Parts, and my Answer to the same shall depend of

And to the first Part, I may say unto you, That from my Years of Understanding, sith I first had confideration of myself to be born a Servant of Almighty God, I happily chose this kind of Life in the which I yer live; which, I affure you, for mine own part, hath hitherto best contented my self, and I trust hath been most acceptable unto God; from the which, if either Ambition of high Eftare offer'd to me in Marriage, by the pleafure and appointment of my Prince, (whereof I have fome Record in this Presence, as you our Treasurer well know) or if eschewing the danger of mine Enemies, or the avoiding of the peril of Death, whose Messenger, or rather a continual Watchman, the Prince's Indgnation was no little time daily before mine Eyes, (by whose means (although I know, or justly may suspect) yet I will not now utter, or if the whole cause were in my Sister herfelf, I will not now burthen her therewith, because I will not charge the dead) if any of these, I say, could have drawn or diffunded me from this kind of Life, I had not now remain'd in this Estate, wherein you see me: But so constant have I always continued in this Determination, although my Youth and Words may feem to fome hardly to agree together, yer is it most true, that at this day I stand free from any other meaning, that either I have had in Times past, or have at this present; with which Trade of Life I am so throughly acquainted, that I trust God, who hath hitherto herein preserv'd and led me by the Hand, will not of his Goodness suffer me ro go alone.

For the other part, the manner of your Petition I do well like, and take it in good part, because it is simple, and containeth no Limitation of Place or Person: If it had been otherwise, I must needs have missiked it very much, and thought it in you a very great Prefumption, being unfitting and altogether unmeet for you to require them, that may command; or those to in the Kingdom; that for his Temporalties he appoint, whose Parts are to desire; or such to bind and limit, whole Duties are to obey, or to take upon you to draw my Love to your Liking, or frame my Will according to your Fantatie : For a Guerdon constrain'd, and Gift freely given, can never agree together. Nevertheless, if any of you be insuspect, whensoever it may please God to incline my Heart to another kind of Life; you may well affure yourfelves, my Meaning is not to determine any thing, wherewith the Realm may or shall have just Cause to be discontent. And therefore put that clean out of your Heads. For I affure you (what Credit my Affurance may have with you, I cannot tell, but what Credit it shall deferve to have, the Sequel shall declare) I will never in that matter con-clude any thing, that shall be prejudicial to the Realm. For the Weal, Good and Safety whereof, I will never fhun to fpend my Life; and whomfoever it shall be my Chance to light upon, I trust he shall be such, as shall be as careful for the Realm, as you; I will not fay as myfelf, because I cannot so certainly determine of any other, but by my Defire he shall be such as shall be as careful for the Preservation of the Realm and you, as myself. And albeit it might please Almighty God to continue me still in this Mind, to live out of the State of Marriage, yet is it not to be fear'd, but he will fo work in my Heart, and in your Wifdom, as good Provision, by his Help, may be made, whereby the Realm shall not remain destitute of any Heir that may be a fit Governour, and peradventure more beneficial to the Realm, than fuch Offspring as may come of me: For though I be never to careful of your well-doing, and mind ever fo to be, yet may my Iffue grow out of kind, and become perhaps ungracious. And in the end, this shall be for me fufficient, that a Marble-Stone shall declare, that a Queen having reign'd fuch a time, lived and died a Virgin. And here I end, and take your coming to me in good part, and give unto all my hearty Thanks; more yet for your Zeal and good Meaning, than for your Petition.

And under her Majesty's Answer aforesaid, was subscribed in the same Hand, as followeth:

By which Subscription, the Authentickness of this Copy doth sufficiently appear.

At the End of the Session April 10. 1563. The Lord-Keeper faid to Mr. Speaker, — And touching your Request before this made to her (the Queen) for her Marriage and Succession, because it is of such Importance, whereby I doubted my own opening thereof; and therefore desired her Majesty, that her Meaning might be written, which she hath done and delivered to me to be read, as followeth:

Since there can be no duer Debt than Princes Words; which I would objerve, therefore I answer to the Jame; thus it is. The two Petitions, which you made unto me, do contain two things; My Marriage, and Succifion after me. For the first, if I had let slip too much time, or if my Strength had been decayd, you might the better have spoke therein; or if any think I never meant to try that Life, they be deceived: but if I may bereaster bend my Mind thereunto, the rather for fulfilling your Request, I shall be therewith very well content.

For the fecond, the Grounds thereof maketh me to fay and pray, that I may linger here in this Vale of Mifery for your Comfort, subveria I bave Witnels of My Study and Travaid, for your Servey; and I cannot with Nunc dimittis end my Life, without I fee forme Foundation of your Survey, often my Grave-Stone.

The Petition of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, to her Majesty, upon the two great Matters of Marriage and Succession, deliver'd by the Lord-Keeper, in Parliament, on November 5. 1566.

OST humbly befeecheth your excellent Majefty, your faithful, loving and obedient Subjects, all your Lords both Spiritual and Temporal, affembled in Parliament in your Upper House; to be so much their good Lady and Sovereign, as according to your accustomed Benignity, to grant a gracious and favourable Hearing to their Petitions and Suits, which with all Humbleness and Obedience, they are come hither to present to your Majesty by my Mouth, in Matters very nearly and dearly touching your most royal Person, the imperial Crown of this your Realm, and univerfal Weal of the fame; which Suits, for that they tend to the Surety and Preservation of these three things, your Person, Crown and Realm, the dearest Jewel that my Lords have in the Earth; therefore they think themselves, for divers respects, greatly bound to make these Petitions; as first by their Duty to God, then by their Allegiance to your Highnefs, and laftly by the Faith they ought to bear to their natural Country. And like as, moft gracious Sovereign, by these Bonds they should have been bound to make the like Petition, upon like occasion, to any Prince, that it should have pleas'd God to have appointed to reign over them; fo they think themselves doubly bound to make the same to your Majesty, confidering that besides the Bond before-mentioned, they ftand also bound so to do, by the great and manifold Benefits they have and do receive daily at your Highness's Hands; which, shortly to speak, be as great as the Fruits of Peace, common Quiet and Justice can give: and this with great Care and Charge to yourfelf. And thus, my Lords diversly bound, as your Majesty hath heard, are now to open to your Highners their humble Petitions and Suits, confifting in two Points chiefly; which not fundrily, or the one without the other, but both jointly they defire your Highness to affent to: The former is, that it would please your Majesty to dispote that it would pleale your Majetty to dupole yourfelf to marry, where it shall pleafe you, with whom it shall pleafe you, and as soon as it shall pleafe you. The second, that some such Limitation might be made, how the imperial Crown of this Realm should remain, if God call your Highness without Heir of your Body, (which our Lord defend) fo as these Lords and Nobles, and other your Subjects then living might fufficiently understand, to whom they should owe their Allegiance and Duty due to be done by Subjects; and that they might, by your Majesty's Licence, and with your Favour, treat and confer together this Parliament-time, for the well-doing of this. The former of these two, which is your Marriage, they do in their Hearts most ear-nestly wish and pray, as a thing that must needs breed and bring great and fingular Comfort to yourfelf, and unspeakable Joy and Gladness to all true English Hearts. But the second carrieth with it fuch Necessity, that without it they cannot fee how the Safety of your royal Person, I the Prefervation of your imperial Crown and Realm, shall be, or can be sufficiently and certainly provided for. Most gracious and sovereign Lady, the lamentable and pitiful State and Condition, wherein all your Nobles and Counsellors of late were, when it pleased God to lay his heavy Hand upon you, and the Amazedness that not Men of Understanding were by the Fruit of that Sickness brought into, is one Cause of Confideration of the fecond, the Aptnefs and Opportunity of the Time, by reafon of this Parliament, whereby both fuch Advice, Confideration tion and Confent, as is requifite in fo great and weighty a Caufe, may be better heard and ufed, than at any other time, when no Parliament is. The third, for that the affenting and performing of these Peritions, cannot, as they think, but breed great Terrour to our Enemies, and there-Perfon; and especially by Addition of such Laws, as may be join'd with this Limitation, for a certain and fure observing it, and preserving of your Majesty against all Practices and Chances. The fourth Caufe, for that the like (as it is supposed) hath been done by divers of your noble Progenitors, both of old time and of late days; and also by other Princes your Neighbors, of the greatest Estate in Europe; and for that Experience hash taught, that Good hath come of it. The fifth, for that it appeareth by Histories, how that in times past, Persons inheritable to Crowns being Votaries and Religious, to avoid fuch Dangers as might have happen'd for Want of Succesfion to Kingdoms, have left their Vows and Monafteries, and taken themselves to Marriage, as Constantia a Nun, Heir to the Kingdom of Sicily, marry'd after fifty Years of Age, to Henry VI. Emperour of that Name, and had Issue Frederick II. and likewise Peter of Arragon, being a Monk, marry'd, the better to establish and pacify that Kingdom. Again, Antonius Pius is as much commended, for that not two Days before his Death, he faid to his Council, leto animo morior, quoniam filium vobis relinquo. Pyrrhus is of all godiy Men detefted, for faying he would leave his Realm to him that had the fharpest Sword. What but Want of a Succeifor known, made an end of fo great an Empire as Alexander the Great did leave at his Death? The fixth Caufe is, for that my Lords do judg, the performing of this will breed such an universal Gladness in the Hearts of all your true and loving Subjects, that likely and probably you shall find them in all Commandments ready and glad to adventure their Goods, Lands and Lives in your Service, according to their bounden Duties; which of necessity must breed great Surety to your Majesty. The seventh Cause, because the nor doing of this (if God should call your Highness without Heir of your Body, which God grant never be feen, if it be his Will) and yet your Majesty right well knoweth, that Princes and their Offspring, be they never fo great, never fo firong, never to like to live, be yet mortal, and subject every day, yea every Hour, to God's Call; my Lords think, this happening, and no Limitation made, cannot by their Judgments, but be the Occasion of very evident and great Danger and Peril to all Estates and Sorts of Men of this Realm, by the Factions, Seditions and intestine War, that will grow through Want of understanding to whom they should yield Al-legiance and Dury; whereby much innocent Brood is most like to be shed, and many of those to lose their Lives, that now would gladly bethow them for your fake, in your Majefty's Service. The eignth, for that the not performing of this, the other happening, doth leave the

Realm without Government, which is the greatest Danger that can happen to any Kingdom; for every Prince is anima legis, and so reputed in Law; and therefore upon the Death of Princes the Law dies; all the Offices of Juffice, where-by the Laws are to be executed, do cease; all Writs and Commandments to call Parties to the Execution of Justice, do hang in suspense; all Commissions for the Peace, and for the Punishment of Offenders do determine, and lose their Force: whereby it followeth confequently, that Strangth and Will must rule, and neither Law nor Reason, during fuch a Vacation and Inter-reign; wherein fuch an Incertainty of Succession is like to last so long, as it is to be feared (if God's Mercy be not the greater) that thereby we may become a Prey to Strangers, (which our Lord defend) or at least lose the great Honour and Estimation that long time hath pertained to us. And like as, most gracious Sovereign, my Lords have been moved for the worldly respect aforesaid, to make their humble Petitions to your Majesty; fo by the Examples, Counfels, yea and Commandments, that they have heard out of the facred Scriptures, and for Confcience-fake they teel themselves constrain'd, and enforced to do the like. God, your Highness knowerh, by the Course of the Scriptures, hath declared Succesfion and having of Children to be one of the principal Benedictions in this Life; and on the contrary, he hath pronounced contrary-wife; And therefore Abraham pray'd to God for Iffue, fearing that Eliazar, his Steward, should have been his Heir; and had Promise that Kings should proceed of his Body. Hamab, the Mother of Samuel, pray'd to God with Tears for Iffue: And Elizabeth (whose Name your Maje-ity beareth) Mother to John the Baptist, was joyful when God had blessed her with Fruit, accounting herself thereby to be delivered from Reproach. And as this is a Bleffing in private Houses, so is it much more in Kingdoms, as it plainly appeareth in the two Kingdoms of Ifrael and Judab. Unto the Kingdom of Judab, containing but two Tribes or thereabouts, God gave lineal Succession by Descent of Kings; therefore they continued a long time. The Kingdom of Ifrael, containing ten Tribes or thereabouts, often destitute of lawful Heirs, the one half of the People following the one, and the other half following the other, by Wars and Seditions weaken'd, came foon to Ruin, as plainly appeareth by the third and fourth Book of Kings. And again, in the time of the Judges, because there was no ordinary Succession, the People were oftentimes overcome, and carry'd into Captivity. Besides, it is plain by the Scriptures, that godly. Governours and Princes (as Fathers of their Countries) have always been careful to avoid the great Evil that might onfue, through Want of Limitation of Succession; therefore Alfa did enjoin Joshua to be his Successor, and David his Son Solomon; whereby a Sedition was appealed, begotten by Adonijab: Of this there be many E-xamples. Farther, feeing it may be easily gather'd by Experience of all Ages path, that Civil Wars, Effusion of Christian Blood, and confequently Ruins of Kingdoms, do follow; whe e Realms be left, without a Certainty of Succession: And your Majesty is also informed of the same, and sued unto for Redress. If therefore now no fufficient Remedy should be by your Highness provided, that then it should be a dangerous Burden before God to your Majefly, and you were to yield a ftrict Account to God for the same; considering you are placed, as the Prophet Ezekiel saith, in altissimo speculo of this Common-wealth, and see the sword coming, and provide no remedy for the defence of it. Lattly, the Spirit of God pronounceth by the Mouth of St. Paul to Timothy, That, whosever maketh no due Provision for his Family, is in very great danger to Godward; and also by the Mouth of St. John, That, whosever setch hus one Brother in necessity, and doth share the Law of the Brother in necessity. up the Bowels of Pity and Compassion from him hath not the Love of God remaining in him: whereby it is plain and manifest, how fearful a thing it were, if this whole Realm, containing to many Families, were not in a perilous Case upon their Suit provided for, or if the Bowels of Mercy should be shur up from so many Thousands, which every way were like to fall into most extream Miseries, if God should call your Highnels without certainty of Succession; which we pray to God may never happen. Most Excellent Princess, the places of Scripture containing the faid Threatnings, be let forth with more sharp Words, than be here expressed. Gracious Sovereign, your Lords and Nobles, both Spiritual and Temporal, have as briefly as they can, first shew'd to your Majesty, how diversly they take themselves bound, to make these their humble Petitions unto you: and then, what their Petitions be, and after that, what Reasons for Worldly Respects, and what by the Scriptures and for Conscience sake have mov'd them thus to do, which here upon their Knees, according to their Bounden Duty, they most humbly and earnestly pray Your Majesty to have Consideration of in time; and to give them such favourable and comfortable Answer to the same, that some good Effect and Conclusion, may grow before the end of the Seffion of this Parliament, the uttermost Day of their greatest hope, whereby this Common Wealth, which your Highness found to be lateritia as Augustus did his, and by your great Providence is now come to be Marmorea, shall not for want of performing this, if God shall call your Highnels, without Heir of Your Body, be in more dangerous Estate and Condition, than ever it was that any Man can remember. True it is, that this Suit is made by my Lords, not without great this state is the cost of the state of the s and fundry ways, fince the beginning of your Reign; which they pray to God long to continue, to His Honour, with all Felicity.

Her Majesty's Answer.

Since there can be no duer than a Prince's Word, to keep that uniported, for my part, as one that would be loath that the felf fame thing than keepeth Merchants Credit from craze, should be the Cause that a Prince's Speech should merit blame, and so their Honour quail; Therefore I will an Answer give, and this it is: The two Petitions that you presented me (which must doubtless relate to the two feveral parts of one and the same Petition, viz. the Marriage and the Succession, and might not improperly be to call'd the' couch'd in one Body, and as the Words also following do in manner explain it) express'd many Words, which contain'd in Sum these two things, as of your Cares the greatest, my Marriage and my Succession. Of which two I think the last best to be touch'd, and of the other a filent Thought may ferve. For I thought it had been fo delir'd, as none other Trees Bloffom should have been minded, or ever any hope of any Fruit had been denied you. And yet by the way, if any here, doubt that I am by Vow or Determination, bent never to trade in that kind of Life, put out that kind of Heresie; for your Belief is therein a wry. For tho'l can think it best for a private Woman, yet I do strive with myself not to think it meet for a Prince, and if I can bend my liking to your need, I will not refift fuch a Mind.

But to the laft, think not that you had needed this Defire, if I had feen a time to fit, and it to ripe to be denounced. The greatness of the Cause, therefore, and need of your Returns, doth make me say that which I think the wife may eatily ghess, that as a fhort time, for so long continuance, ought not to pals by roat, as many tell their Tales, even so, as Cause by Conference with the Learned, shall shew me Matter worth the Utterance for your Behoof, so shall I more gladly purfue your Good, after my Days, thats with all my Prayers, whilft I live, be means to linger my living Thread. And thus much more than I thought, will and for your Comfort: I have good Record in this Place, that other means than you nention, have been thought of, perchance for your Good, as much as for my Surety no lefs, which if prefently and conveniently could have been executed, it had not been now deferr'd or overflipped. But I hope I shall die in quiet with Nane Dimatis; which cannot be, without that I fee fome Glimple of your following Surety, after my graved Bones.

The Queens Speech at the Diffolution of the Parliament, on Thursday the 2d. of January, 1566.

MY Lords, and others the Commons of this Affembly. Although the Tolking according to Order, very well answered in my Name, vet as a Periph alis, I have a few words farther, to speak unto you: Notwithstanding I have not been uled, not love to do it, in fuch open Affemblies ; yet now (not to the end to amend his talk) but remembring that commonly Princes own Words be better printed in the hearers M-mory, than those spoken by Her Command, I mean to say thus much unto you. I have in this Assembly found so much Dissimulation, where I always profess'd Plainness, that I marvel thereat, vea two Faces under one Hood, and the Body rotren, being covered with two Vizors, Succession and Liberty, which they derermin'd must be either presentle granted, denied or deferr'd; in granting whereof, they had their defires, and denying and deterring thereof (hote things being so plaudable, as indeed to all Men they are) they thought to work me that Mischief, which never Forein Enemy could bring to pals which is the Hatred of my Commons. But alas! they began to pierce the Veffel before the Wine was fined, and began a thing not for feeing the End, how by this means I have feen my Well-wishers from my Enemies, and can, as me feemeth, very well wide the House into four. First the Broachers and Workers thereof, who are in the greatest Faults; secondly, the Speakers, who by eloquent Tales persuaded others, are in the next Degree; Thirdly, the Agreers, who being fo light of Credit, that the Eloquence of the Tales fo overcame them, that they gave more credit thereunto, than to their own Wits; And lastly, those that sate still mute, and meddi'd not therewith, but rather wonder'd, disallowing the matter; who in my opinion are most to be excus'd. But do you think, that either I am unmindful of your Surety by Succession, wherein is all my Care, confidering I know my felt to be mortal? No, I wastans you: Or that I went about to break your Liberties? No; it never was in my Meaning, but to flav you before you fell into the Ditch. For all things have their time; and although perhaps you may have after me, one better Learned, or Wiler; yet laffue you, none more careful over you: And thereto e henceforth, whether I live to fee the like Affembly or no, or whoever it be, yet beware however vou prove your Princes Patience, as you have now done mine.

And now to conclude, all this notwithstanding (not meaning to make a Lent of Christmas) the molt part of you may assure yourselves, that you depart in your Princes grace.

Reasons to prove the Queens Majesty bound in Conscience to proceed with Severity, in the Case of the late Queen of Scots.

THE Word of GOD, which is the only Director of Conferences, and a certain Rule for all Estates and Offices, doth often and most earnestly teach, that godly Princes, or Magistrates, not only in Conscience salely may, but also in Duty towards God, ought severely and uprightly to administer Justice. For this is one of the principal Causes, for the which the Providence and Wisdom of God hath ordain'd Magistrates in Common-Wealths, that they might by Justice and Punishment, according to the greatness of the Offences, repress the Wickedness of Mankind, whereunto by Coruption of Nature they are included. The Magistrate (as St. Paul sith, Rom. 13.) is the Minister of God, and Revenger of Wrath sewards him that hath done evil, Sec. And St. Peter, 1 Peter 2. Be subject to the King as to the Chief, or to the under Rulers as sent of him ad vindictam nocentum, to the Punishment or Revengement of Offenders, and to the Praise of them that do well.

do Dull.

If the Magistrate doth not this, God threatneth heavy Punishment: When you were (saith Wisdom to Princes, Sap. 6.) the Minister of his Kingdom, you have not executed Judgement rightly, nor kept the Law, nor wasked according to his Will; herrible therefore and right som shall be appear unto you: for a hard Judge-ment shall they have that hare Rule. Potentes potenter tormenta patientur. Now then if the Magistrate be the Muniter of God, in his Name and Authority to pumfh the Wicked according to the measure of their Offences, and are threatned grievous Punishment if they do not; and on the other party, the late Scottiff Queen hath offended in two highest Degrees, both concerning God's Religion, and the definheriting and destruction of our Prince: We see not but Her Majefty must needs offend in Conscience before God, if the do not punish her according to the measure of her Offence, in the highest Degree. Small punishment for great Offences, in respect of any Person, is Partiality and slack Justice, which God, above all things, in Judgment forbiddeth; Consider not (lays God) the Person of the Poor, nor honour the Countenance of the Rich, Levit. 19.
It is not Good (lauh Solemon, Prov. 18.) to confider the Person of the Wicked, thereby to decline from the Fudgement.

And Jesu Sirach, Make no labour to be a Judge, except thou hast that Stoutness, that thou mayest mightily put down Wickedness: For if thou stand in Ame of the Mighty, thou canst not but fail in giving Sentence, Ecclus. 7.

Wherefore whether the late Queen of Scots, be Queen or Subject, be Stranger or Citizen, be Kin, or not Kin, by God's Word, for so great Offences she should have the just deferred Panishment, and that in the highest degree.

The Second Reason, when God by his just Providence doth commit any grievous Offendor into the hands of the Prince or Magistrate, as to his Minister, to be punished, he ought to fear the heavy Displeasure of God, if by any colour he do omit the same of the manns justicume of first possible of the properties of the properties of God of the brings Sinners to punishment for other Offences that those that are known and appear to the World. And therefore hath he shew'd himself grievously displeas'd, when such, by colour of Mercy and Ptry, have escaped just Judgement.

Becaufe Saul spared Agag, (1 Rg, 15) although he were a King, God took, from the same Saul, his Good Spirit, and transferrd the Kingdom of thread from him, and from his Heirs for ever.

When Achab spared Benhadad the King of Sjria, by his unreasonable Clemency, though he were a great Prince, God will'd the Prophet to say unto him, Because thou hast let escape out of thy Hands, the Manthat I would have to die, thy life shall be for his life, and thy People for his People.

In these Examples, great pretence might be made for Mercy, for sparing of them, and great reproach of Bloodiness and Cruelty in the contrary; but we see how God judged them.

The late Queen of Sects being a grievous Offendor divers ways, both before the came into this Land and afterwards also, hath been by God's special and remarkable Providence, put into the Queen's Majesties hand to be punish'd, and that, far more notably than Ageg and Benbadad were put into the hands of Saul and Aebab; Therefore it is greatly to be fear'd, if the escape as Benbadad did, under pretence of Mercy, and favourable dealing, that God's heavy Displeasure will for the same, light both upon the Prince and the Realm, as it du ppon Aebab and the Israelites shortly after. This Sentence of the Prophet (as it is for certain reported) was spoken to the Lord James, now Regent in Seculand, when with too much lently he proceeded therein; it hath followed too true in him, The Lord turn it from our Gracious Sovereign.

The Third Reafon: Every Good Prince ought, by God's Commandment, to punish even with Death; all such as do seek to seduce the People of God from his true Worthip, unto Superstition and Idolatry. For that Offence God hath always most grievously punished, as committed against the first Table, Deut. 13. His Words are these: If thy Braber the Sen of thy Mother, or thine earn Son, or thy Daughter, or thy Wife that lieth within thy Bosom, or thy Friend which is as thiy own Soul unto the, shall entice thee, saying, let us go and serve strange God, Sec. Thou shall not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; thine Eye shall not pity him, nor there shall thou bave Compassion with the same shall not consent unto him, nor bearken unto him; thine Eye shall not sense the shall be first upon him to kill him, &cc. And atterwards addeth: And all Israel shall fear to do any none any such Wickedness.

The refidue of that Chapter, afterwards containeth more grievous Matter, which we would with all them to read, that in great Offences under the colour of Pity, are losh to have sharp Punishment used. Here you may percieve that God willeth his Magistrate not to spare either Brother or Sister, Son or Daughter, Wife, or Friend be he never lo nigh, if he seek to seduce the People of God from his true Worship; much less is an Enemy and Traitor to be spared: Yea, and he addeth the Cause, why he would have such sharp Punishment used in such Cales, That If rail may fear to do the like.

But the late Queen of Scots, hath not only fought and wrought, by all means She can, to leduce the People of God in this Realm, from true Religion, but is the only hope of all the Adverfaries of God, throughout all Europe, and the Inftrument whereby they truft to overcome the Gofpel of Chrift in all Countries. And therefore if the have not that Punishment, which God in this place aforemention 'a papointen'; it is of all Christian hearts to be feared, that God's just Plague will light both apon the Magistrates and Sulpiest; but that by our slackness and remis Justice, we give occasion of the overthrow of God's Glory and Truth in his Church, mercifully restored more sin those latter Dave.

restor'd unto us in those latter Days.

Constantinus Magnus caused Licinius to be put to Eusch.

Constantinus Magnus caused Licinius to be put to Eusch.

Sea of the Subject but his Fellow Emperor, the z. De for that the laid Licinius laboured to subject Christian Visia Con-Religion And the lame Constantinus, is for the same station in all Histories highly commended. Much more shall it be lawful for the Queen's Majesty to execute this Woman, who, besides the Subversion of Religion, hash sought the Life of the same our Gra-

The

The Fourth Reason: It is dangerous for any Pofon, being a Prince, both for his own State, as allo for that Punishment which may come from God's hand, by flacknels of Justice in great Offences, to give occasion, by hope of Impunity, of the increase of like Wickedness.

Joab being spar'd of David for Murthering Abner, killed Amafa alfo. Because Amnon was winked at by his Father, for committing Rape and Incest with his own Sifter, Abfalom, under hope of like Impunity, was emholden'd to Murther his Brother Amnon.

But look, I pray you, how grievously God punish'd that flack Justice of David, coloured with a tender Heart towards his Children. Did he no: fuffer, yea and by his just Judgment raise one of his own Sons, towards whom he used that excessive Tenderness and Pity, to rebel against him, and drive him out of his own Kingdom. The late Scot rish Queen hath heap'd up together, all the Sins of the licentious Sons of David; Adulteries, Murders, Conspiracies, Treasons, and Blasphemies against God alfo; and if the efcape with fmall Punishment, Her Majesty in Conscience ought, as also good and faithful Subjects to fear that God will referve her as an Instrument to put her from the Royal Seat of this Kingdom, and to plague the unthankful and naughty Subjects: Quod omen ut Deus avertat precamur. Shall we think that God will not plague it? Surely our hearts do fear he will do it grievously.

The Fifth Reason: A Prince ought in Conscience before God, by all means he can, to fee to the Quietnels, and Safety and Good Estate of that People, over which God hath appointed him Governour.

For in the Prophets, oftentimes under the Names of Paltors and Watchmen, he threatneth great Punishment to Princes and Governours for the contrary; especially in Ezerbiel, 33, and 34. And fignifieth, that if his People perish, either in Soul or Body, by slackness in administring Justice, or by any other Milgovernment, God will require their Blood at the Prince's Hands, which Places, as they may be applied to Prophets and Teachers, fo do they not exclude, but principally comprehend Kings and Magistrates, as Hieronymus noteth in Exichiel 32. the Words of the Prophet are the war. If the Watch men fee the Sword and blow not the Trumpet, fo that the People is not warned; if the Sword come they, and take any man from among them, the same shall be taken away in his own Sin from among them, but his Blood will I require at the Watch mans hands, Ezech. 33.

And again, Woe unto the Shepherds that deftroy and featter my Flock, faith the Lord, &C. You featter and thrust out of my Flock and do not lock upon them: Therefore will I vifit this wikcedness of your Imaginations, &c. fer. 23. By these and such other Words in many Places, God fignifieth, if his People perish either in Body or Soul, by the flack or remifs Government of them that are appointed Kulers over them, and as it were Shepherds and Herdfmen to keep them from Danger, that he will require the Blood of his

People at their Hands.

But the late Scottish Queen with her Allies, by the Pretenc'd Title, and other Wicked, Divelifh, and Traiterous Devices and Workings, is like to bring Confusion to this Realm of England, and the People thereof, as evidently appeareth to all good and faithful Subjects. Therefore the Prince offendeth grievously before God, and is in danger of the Blood of Gol's People, if for the lafety of the lame the do not cut her off.

2. Reg. 2. Solomon a wife and godly Prince, spared not his own Natural, yea and his Elder Brother Adoniah; for suspicion and likelyhood of Treason, and for a Marriage purpos'd only, but put him to death for the same, and that speedily without course of Judgement, lest by delay, trouble and danger might have enfued, not only to his own Person, being Prince and Chief Minister of God in that Land, but also to that People, over which he had great Charge, and for Safety whereof in Conference he was bound to deal. He would have thought it a great Burthen to his Confeience, if by the sparing of one Man's Life, were he never to nigh of Blood to him, he would have hazarded the Scat on which God had plac'd him, and the Blood of many Thoulands of his People, which by a Rebellion might have been spent.

But this Woman and her greatly defired Huf-band, as the p etendeth, have put far more hemous matters in execution: wherefore her Cafe flanding as it do.h, there is no focuple in Conference .a procoed with feverity, but great danger in Confcience for dealing too mildly and countary to the order of Justice, making the Punishment less than the Offence, with the Danger of her Majethy's own Perlon, the hazard of the Realm, and Subvertion of God's Truth.

The Sixth Reason: It is dangerous for any Chriflian Prince, and contrary to the Word of God, with colour of Mercy and Pity, to do that, whereby shall discourage and kill the Hearts, not only of his own good Subjects and faithful Councellors, but also of all other Nations faithfully professing God's Religion and his true Worship, as may well appear in the Example of David.

David having this infirmity of too much Pity and indulgency towards Offendors, which is not of any Prince to be follow'd, did forbid that his Traiterous Son Absolom should be flain; and when he was kill'd, effeminately he bewailed the same, to the discouraging of his Feople; but he was sharply rebuked by Josh, his Counfellor, laying, Thou haft hamed this Day the Faces of thy Servants which have faved thy Lafe, and the life of thy Sons, &c. Thou loveft those that bate thee, and thou sherwest this day that thou realist not for the Captains and the Servants; and now I perceive if Abiolom bad lived and we all bad been flain, it would bave pleafed thee well.

What inconvenience was like to follow unto David by this doing, and what other good Direction may be taken out of this History well considered, for brevity's take we leave to the Confideration of Wife Princes and Governours. When David was so much moved with these Words that he was contented to take another Courfe, which turned both to the Comfort of his Subjects and his own benefit, the Application needeth not.

If David were moved thus to do to the comfort of his own Subjects only, and the abathing of his own private Rebels: how much more have we to defire God to move the Queen's Majefty, by the execution of this Lady, to glad the hearts of all true Christians in Europe; and to abash and damp the Minds of the Enemies of God, and Friends of Antichult.

Object. It may be objected, that thus to proceed is not Honourable for the Queen's Majesty.

Response. The Shadow or Honour (as may evidently appear) deceived upon the like occasion, both King Saul in sparing Agag King of Amalek, and King Achab in receiving to his Mercy King Benhadad, as it is in the Example in the fecond Reason mentioned, who did precend great Honour in faving a King, and thought Dishonour in the contrary, that one King should kill another; but Man's Judgement and God's in such Cales are far diverse: for in-deed, execution of Justice upon any Person whatsoever, is, and ever hath been accounted Honourable.

Object. It may be further objected, that the Queen's Majesty in so doing should exceed the Limits and Bounds of Mercy and Clemency.

mis and Bounds of Mercy and Clemency.

Refp. Indeed, a Prince should be merciful, but he should be just also. It is said, Mifericordia & verit a cassodium regem; but in the next Chapter it followeth, Qui sequium institution of misericordium, invenier vitam. Plov. 20.

The Prince in Government must be like unto him who is not only amiable by Mercy, but terrible also by Justice, ond therefore is call'd, Misericors & justus Dominus.

Mercy oftentimes sheweth itself in the Image of Jastice; yea, and Justice in Scriptures is by God called Mercy, Psal. 136. Who imate Egypt with their fift born, for his mercy endureth for ever. In that Psalm the Smitting of Egypt with terrible Plagues, the Destruction of Phorash, the Killing of great and mighty Kings are cilled the merciful Works of God, as indeed they were, but Mercy towards the People of God, and not towards the Enemies of God and his People.

Therefore, as the Queen's Majesty indeed is mer ciful, so we most humbly desire her, that she will open her Mercy towards God's People and her good Subjects, in dispatching those Enemies that seek the Confusion of God's Cause amongst us, and of this noble Realm.

It may also be said, that to spare one Person, b.ing an Enemy, a Stranger, a profess Member of Antichrist, and convicted of so many heinous Crimes, with the evident Peril of so many thousands of Bodies and Souls of good and faithful Subjects, may nilly be termed, Crudelis miscricordia.

Petiliano objiciente. Deum non delectari bumano fanguine: Respondet legimui multoi à famulo Dei Moise misercorditer intersection. Numquid crudelis effectus est, cum de monte descentens tot millia juberet occidi? August. contra literas Petiliani, lib. 2. c. 86.

Saul & Jebosaphat reges suerunt populi Dei, & dum misertordiam iis quos Deus oderat prassiterum, Des ossensiam in opere pietatis incurrerunt, de contrario Phinebas stilique Levi gratiam Dei humand cade & suorum parriculio merurunt. Hierom.

The same Hierom de origine anima, saith the like, sparing of evil Persons is misericors inobedientia.

St. Augustine also saith, sicuti est misericordia puni-ens, est etiam crudelitas parcens.

Objet. But haply it may be that fome may discredit these Reasons by the Persons, when they cannot by the Matter; and will put in her Majesty's mind, that we in persuading her, respect our own danger and sear of Persi coming to us, and not right and true Judgment: Yea, and that it may appear very unseemly and worthy sharp Reproof in a Bishop to excite a Prince to Cruelty and Blood, contrary to her merciful Inclination.

Resp. As touching the first Branch, surely we see not any great continuance of Danger likely to the not use us, more than to all good Subjects, while this State standeth; and the State cannot lightly alter without the certain Peril both of our Prince and Country.

Now, if our Danger be joined with the Danger of our gracious Sovereign and natural Country, we fee not how we can be accounted godly Bishops or faithful Subjects, if in common Peril we should not cry and give Warning; or on the other side, how they can be thought to have true Hearts towards God and towards their Prince and Country, that will mislike with us for so doing, and seek thereby to discredit us.

As touching the fecond Branch, God forbid that we should be Instruments to incense a merciful Prince to Cruelty and Bloodines; neither can we think well of them or judge that they have true meaning Hearts, that in the Minister of God and Officer, do term Justice and right Punishment by the Name of Bloodines and Cruelty. God, I truft, in time, shall open her Eyes to see and efpy their cruel Purposes, under the Cloak of extolling Mercy.

When the Prince or Magilfrare is flack in Punishing the finful and wicked, the Bishop and Preacher is bound in Conscience, before God, to exhort him to more diligent and severe Dealing therein, lest the Blood both of Prince and People be required at his Hands.

3. Reg 20 May the Prophet be accounted cruel to excite Achab to bloodines, which to fharply rebuted him for his Clemency flowed towards Benhadad? May Samuel justly be named cruel, because in like case he reproved Saul for sparing the Life of King Agag, and killed the same Agag with his own Hands in the fight of the Prince.

What shall we say of the Prophet Elias, shall we call him Cruel because in the Zeal of Uttice he killed all the false Prophets of Baal? Did not God approve his Fact with the miraculous sending of abuncance of Rain after three Years continual Drought? But to those Men, I think, God himself and his Angels will seem cruel, and his Justice cruelty; that they under colour of Mercy might be spared until time will serve to satisfie their own cruel Hearts.

An Argument perfuading that the Queen's Majesty ought to have in Conscience a great Care of the Sasety of her own Person.

L Very Prince being the Minister of God and a publick Person, ought by God's Word to have an especial Care of his own Sasety, more than a private Person; and chiefly when the case so standeth, that sasety of his Realm and Country, and the true Worshipping of God by God's disposition may seem to depend on him.

But now fo it is in the Queen's Majefty, therefore in Conscience ought she to have a singular Care of her safety, if not for herself sake, yet at the least for the furtherance of God's Cause and stay of her Country, to the maintenance whereof she is bound before God.

Codens and divers other Heathens gave away their Lives for the lafety of their Countries. Contrarywife we with, and are humble Suitors, that it may please her Majesty to preserve her own Life, and to cut away tha: Dangers thereof, if not for her own Cause which happily her noble Courage doth smally regard, yet, at the least wise, for God's Cause, and for her faithful and loving Subjects, whose Lite and good Estate dependent on her.

Object. It may be objected, that her Majesty reposetn her Trust and Confidence in the Providence of God, and therefore maketh light of all Attempts that her Enemies can work against her.

Resp. Surely, it must needs be confessed, that the fame proceedeth both of noble Courage, and of a strong Faith and Trust in God, and ought indeed to be the Bulwark of Help and Comfort to all good and godly Princes; yet so far as they seem not withat to tempt God by leaving that Diligence, and those ordinary Means whereby he used to save and deliver.

David knew himself to be anointed and appointed Ifrael by God himself, yet he did not rashly cast himself into the Hands of Saul his Enemy.

Jehosephat and Hexechias in their great Diffres-fes, undoubtedly had their Trust and Confidence in God, but they ceased not both to shun and cut off all those things whereby Danger might grow, and to use all means whereby their Safety might be holpen.

It is alledged by Christ, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God; but furely it might have been as fafe for Christ, without tempting God, to have cast himself down from the Pinacle of the Temple, as for the Queen's Majesty to suffer in her Bosom a poisonous Serpent, that ceaseth not concinually to thrust the Sting of her venemous Workings into her Majesty's fasety and possession of her Crown. It is well faid, Principum Securitas paucorum vitá redimenda est.

There are divers Histories, yea and Examples of late time, whereby it hath been declar'd, that the tempting Confidence of God's Providence, not shunning evident occasion of Danger, hath fell out to the extream hurt of the Parties, and on fuch as have depended on them, which we think not meet to recite, lest they should seem in this case Ominofa, as God for his great Mercies fake forbid that they should be.

Many Reafons, Authorities and Examples more besides this may be taken out of the holy Scriptures for confirmation of this Purpole; but for tediousness we thought good to omit them, and leave the residue to God.

In the 20th Chapter of Leviticus, there is much like matter, and that in as earnest manner fet forth; neither can any in Conscience think that this Punishment was here appointed by God so running was nere appointed by God lo grievous, only for those that then reduced the People of God to Gentiliß and Heatheniß Idolatry; for Idolatry and salse Worship, by whomsoever it begun, tho they bear the Name of the Charabase of the People power of the People of the People power for the the People of the People of the People power for the People of the People Church or of the People never so much, it is a direct Offence against the first Table; and therefore in God's judgment worthy no less Punishment; yea their Offence must needs be more heinous in the fight of God, for that they have had greater opportunity to understand God's true Worlhip.

Shall any Christian Man think that the Worfhip of God appointed in his Law being but the into or God appointed in the Law being but the Figure, was more acceptable and pleafant to God than this his true Worship in the faith of #ESUS, according to the Gospel of our Redemption? Or, that the violating of the same, or reducing of his People from it, is in his judgment lefs difpleafing, or not so grievoully to be punished as was the breaking of his Law or seducing from it? Shall we think that the gathering a few Sticks on the Sabbath-day is to be punished by Death in a poor simple Person? and the seeking to subvert the Gospel of Christ, and to draw the People of God to that idolatrous Doctrine that teacheth to impute the Merit of Christ's Blood and Passion to wicked Mens Devices, yea to Stocks, Stones, to Sticks, to Water, to Bells, &c. shall not be worthy the Punishment of Death in a noble Person? God direct our Judgment otherways.

By thefe Words of God before recited, Deut. 13. if it be evident that God willed his Magistrates of the be evident that God which in Maghirates, to fpare neither Brother, nor Sifter, nor Daughter, nor Wife, nor Friend, though he were never fo nigh, if he fought to feduce the People of God from his true Worthip; how much less an Enemy, a Traitor and an Adulterer to be spared?

An humble Petition to her Majesty, and the Reasons gather'd out of the Civil Law by certain appointed by Authority in Parliament, to prove that it standeth not only with Justice, but also with the Queen's Majesty's Honour and Safety to proceed criminally against the pretended Scotch

E your Majesty's most humble and faithful Subjects assembl'd in Parliament for Prefervation of your Royal Person and Estate, do highly acknowledge the great Goodness of God that hath chosen and appointed such a Sovereign to Reign over us as never Subjects by any Record ever had a better; and therefore our hearty Prayers are daily, and ever shall be, to Almighty God, long to preserve your most excellent Majesty in all and most perfect Felicity that ever Creature had or might have upon Earth. And whereas the highest and chiefest States are ever more envied of all fuch as be the worst and greatest Disturbers of God's Monarchy and his anointed Jurisdiction, we cannot but with care of Mind and force of our Bodies seek to redress whatsoever shall be thought hurtful to your Majesty's safe Quietness and most blessed Government.

A Queen of late time, and yet through her own Acts now justly no Queen, a nigh Kinswoman of your Majesty's, and yet a very unnatural Sifter, Lady Mary Stuart, late Queen of Scots, being driven through Violence and Force of others to take Harbour in your Majesty's Realm for the fafeguard of her Life, hath not only had your Majesty's most gracious Protection, but also was faved within her own Realm, by your Ma-jefty's Authority, from execution of Death for her most horrible and unnatural Doings there, known throughout Europe to her perpetual Infamy and Shame for ever. And albeit upon her first coming your Highness might both by Law and Justice have dealt with her judicially for her Attempts made by Writing and otherwise against the Crown and Dignity, and to the dishersion of your most Royal Person for ever; yet your Majesty in consideration of her long dangerous Troubles in her own Realm, and in hope that fuch great Adversiries would have been good Leffons for her Amendment hereafter, hath not used her in any such manner as she hath deserv'd; but rather forgetting or forgiving after a forther former Doings, hath dealt with her like a good and natural Sifter. All which notwithstanding, this unnatural Lady (being born out of kind as it fhould feem) hath altogether for-gotten God and all Goodness, abusing herself as it appeareth most treasonably against your Ma-jesty's Person and Stace, and seeking and devi-ting by all means possible not only to deprive your Majesty of all earthly Dignities and Livings, but also of your natural Life; which thing is found by evident Proofs, and by the Judges of your Realm declar'd to be most horrible and most wicked Treason that ever was wrought a-gainst any Prince; for which her Doings your Majesty minding to touch her in Honour, esteemeth her Person unworthy of any Hope or Title, Pre-eminence or Dignity within this your Land, and therefore not feeking to deal with her according to her defert, is only contented to have her disabled as a Person not capable of Princely Honour, And Vol. II. And thus your Majesty using this l. II. (Pppp2) course, course, thinketh it the meetest way to establish yourself and to quiet your Dominions hereaster, taking away hereby the hope of fuch as do de-pend upon the pretended Title, and weakning the whole Strength of that Faction. And for farther affurance of your Majefly's Quietness, your Highness does not mislike to have grievous Pains of High-Treason laid upon all such as shall attempt and maintain her pretended Title by any manner of way.

Thus, as evil Men shall be kept back from intermedling in the maintenance of a Title, fo may your Majesty's true and faithful Subjects be much emboldned to deal against this pretended Queen and her Adherents, when your Subjects shall fee a Law fet down for your avail, and your Enemies shall want Forces and wax weak thereby, and your true Subjects greatly hardned for all Offences. Moreover, if the faid pretended Queen shall hereafter make any attempt of Treafon, the Law fo to run, that fhe should suffer Pains of Death without farther trouble of Parlia-And if any shall enterprize to deliver her out of Prison after her Disablement, either in your Majesty's Life, or after the same, to be convicted immediately of High-Treason, herfelf affenting thereunto to be likewise adjudged as a Traitor in Law. In all which Proceedings your Majesty thinketh to deal both fafely and honourably, as well for yourfelf as for your State. For thereby it feemeth, that neither shall she, nor any for her hereaster, dare deal to do harm, but also all forein Princes and Nations will think much Honour of such your merciful Proceedings. And lastly, whereas she hash sallen into your Hands from the Violence of others, and fo as a Bird followed by a Hawk feeketh Succour at your Majesty's Feet, your Highness thinketh yourfelf bound in Honour, for that flee is your Sifter, and a Queen born, not to pro-ceed farther, only to her Difablement, counting it a strong Work for your safety. These be the the Reasons which in part may move your Majesty to take this course, as we do conceive; all which notwithstanding, if it might please your most excellent Majesty to suffer your poor and faithful Subjects to enter deeply upon good fearch of this cause, and by way of reply to make anfwer with proceeding by juft Proofs for your Majesty's safety, we doubt not but with your Highness's favourable acceptance, all that which hitherto hath been utter'd is rather a declaration of that most mild and gracious Nature of yours, than any affurance for your Perfon and Effare at all.

Reasons answering the former Arguments.

May it therefore please your Majesty,

Hereas it is faid, that it flandeth to very good Purpose to proceed only in disa-bling the Scotch Queen for any Claim or Title to the Crown; we take it, by your Majesty's Favour, that such and especially disabling of the Scottilb Queen, is in effect a special confirmation of a Right that she should have had, Quia privatio presupponit habitum. And farther, we do take it for a known truth, that by the Laws and Statutes in this Land now in force, she is already disabled. and therefore it is to fmall purpose, rem actam brand once kindled, and finding apt matter to work upon, will hardly be quenched without a great hazard. Touching the grievous Pains laid upon those that shall deal, those will be little feared by the wicked, whom hope of Gain maketh more bold than fuch Pains do appal : Befides Nature given to this Nation and all others that are under the Moon, maketh Men oftentimes flir without cause, and as Plato saith, Naturales sunt conversiones rerum pub. Yet they that heretothe Law then in force, which did as much re-ftrain them as this or any Law to be made can be able, being desperate, will fear no Laws, espe-cially such an Instrument living by whom all Actempts are to be wrought. Force overthroweth Justice till the cause of all Mischief, which is the hoped help, be clean taken away. And where it is faid, that the making of a Law for her difabling emboldneth much your Subjects to deal against her: We answer, that no new Law needeth to encourage good and loyal Subjects against such a Person, who hath broken all the Laws of God and Nature, and is worthy to be out of your Majesty's Protection, because she feeketh still the Disturbance of this noble State, and using often her own Phrase, threatneth that she will stir Coals. Touching a new Law to be made against her, if she should attempt any Evil hereafter, the experience of her former Life is fuch that no Law has any force with her, that is fully minded to take her Advantage upon any apt Occasion offer'd: And to threaten her with Death if she should feem to make an escape hereafter, is such Advice, that she nothing teareth; for besides she was told at Longh-Leaven, there was no way but Death with her if she would not take her Imprisonment quietly, and live without feeking Liberty, she notwithstanding adventur'd herfelf with a young Fellow very dishonourably to get away in a Boar. And now since her coming into England she hath wrought divers ways to make an Escape, and employ'd the Heads of the chiefest Estates of your own disloyal Sub-jects for that purpose. Therefore menacing and but threatning Words of Law shall not keep her back from her malicious intent to fubvert your Majesty, and to give a push for the Crown come of her what will. And likely it is that she may escape as well as be taken, for she neither wanteth Wit nor Cunning to make her way. And we have learned in matters of great Hazard to be well advised, and to take always that Order which may be the best. Now there will want no Traitors to be always ready to bring this her Device about, and to do what they can for her Liberty. And fuch as will not deal in fmall Matters, will adventure deep for a Kingdom, because the Reward is great when the Service is done. But your Majesty hath regard unto your Honour as much as to your Safety, and thinketh that in taking this course all Princes will speak well of your Highness. May it please your Majesty, we your good Subjects do well like of so honourable a meaning; but we would be loth to see that when you have such regard of Honour, you do thereby lose your State, and so your Life, Honour and All. For if it should fall out that the Scottish Queen escaped your Hands, (which Christ for his Mercies sake forbid) all good Princes would think great want of Judgment and Forefight, first in your Majesty, next in your Council, last of all in the whole Nation; and therefore it is to imain purpote, rem actam of confere. And for answer unto the Premiles, we fay farther, That neither shall this weaken others that are evil-minded, but rather strengthen them in their Mischief, and make them desperate where there is no other Remedie; and a Fire-where the there is no other Remedie; and a Fire-where the there is no other Remedie; and a Fire-where the there is no other Remedies, where the third the there is no other Remedies, where the the there is no other Remedies, where the there is no other Remedies, where the there is no other Remedies, where the there is no that they would account her Escape a miraculous Work of God, and that your Majesty had no Power tho' Will to keep her sase: And when that day should come, wo be to all true Christians univerfally, for upon her do depend the chiefest Enemies of Religion, and to this Kingdom: May it please you therefore, most gracious Queen, to be well advifed, and to take found Counfel when it is given, knowing this for a certain truth, That Evil foreseen and advisedly looked unto, doth ever the less harm: But still your Majesty considering the great Trouble she hath had, and forgetting, or not greatly esteeming, what Troubles she hath brought unto your Realm, doth by a merciful respect of your most gracious Nature, rather bend to do Good to her than feek Safeguard to your felf. And feeing here your Sifter, the' unnatural, and also a Queen by birth, altho' not worthy of Life, cannot but rather hazard your own Life than deal with her according to her deferts. This your Majefty's Nature Subjects, most gracious Sovereign, to call and cry to God for his heavenly Affistance, that his Power may be given to you next after the advancement of his Glory, to feek affuredly your own fafety; which your Majesty cannot fully do by this means that hath hitherto been taken, or hereafter to be used: Therefore it would please your most excellent Majesty to give ear to the found Reafons of your most faithful Subjects, and rather deal certainly than by chance; and there is no doubt but your Majesty shall avoid all apparent Dangers, and live in all fafety and honour, to God's Glory and to the Comfort of all good Christian Princes universally. Thus much against the Opinion of disabling the Scotish Queen, whereby it appeareth that it will be rather for her benefit than to her hurt. And most certain it is, that it will be dangerous for the State divers ways; whereas dealing with her in the first degree ac-cording to her deferts, the same is lawful, safe, necessary and honourable for your Majesty and all Christendom besides. And because it may appear that this Speech is grounded upon Law and Reason, there shall be Arguments in Law alledged fufficiently for this matter, as the shortness of time may ferve.

Civil Reasons for doubt of Answer.

A Confederate being in the Country of his Confederate, is to be punish'd as though he were a Subject. Every Person offending, is to be tried in the place where he committeeth the Crime, without exception of A King passing through another Privilege. King's Realm, or there resident, is but a private Person. The Dignity of the Person offending increaseth the Offence. Reatus omnem honorem excludit; a King deposed is not to be taken for a King; and therefore Frederick King of Naples being deprived by the King of Spain, was after-ward judged to be no King by Sentence. A King, tho' not deposed, may commit Treason. Deiotarus, a King confederated with the Romans, was criminally judged by Cajus Julius Celar, for that he conspir'd to have flain the faid Julius Celar at a Banquet. Joan Queen of Naples was put to Death for that the gave her content to the Murder of her Husband, and caused him to be hang'd out at a Window. Henry the Seventh Emperor did give a folemn Judgment of Death at Pifa 1311, against Robert King of Sicily, for that the some King had entred into Conspiracy with the Subjects of the Emperor; and yet was not King Robert within the Jurisdiction of the Emperor at the time of the Conspiracy, neither at the time of the Judgment.

It flandeth with the Law of Nature, which is immutable, for any Person to proceed for the fafety of himfelf and his Charge. Great Offences in the highest degree ought not to be punished for any Affection of Kindred. Justice, Equity and Commonwealth, are to be prefer'd before the Affection of Kindred; Quia artitora funt vincula virtuiti quam Sanguinis. An Offence of the highest degree against the Prince, being the Head of the Political Body, is an Offence the trace of the fame, and requireth fharp Punishment for the Preservation of the whole. The intent of Offences in the highest degree, is punished with Death, although the execution of the Intent doth not follow. benefit and privilege of fafe Conduct is loft by any Crime committed after the grant made thereof. Administration of Justice cannot but be ho-nourable. All just and honourable Dealings are pleafing to God and profitable to the Prince and State. Execution of Justice is void of all Inju-ry. It is dangerous for the State to swerve from the Ministration of Justice, and the due Execution of Law. To spare Offenders in the highest degree, is an Injury to the Prince and State of the Realm; Pena unius falus multorum. Her Majesty's Speech at the Conclusion of the Parliament, on Monday, March 29.

My Lords; and you of the Lower House;

Y Silence must not injure the Owner, so much as to suppose a Subditute sufficient to render you the Thanks that my Heart yieldeth you; not so much for the safe keeping of my Life, for which your Care appears so manifest, as for the neglecting your private future Peril, not regarding other way than my present State.

No Prince herein, I confess, can be furer ty'd or faster bound than I am, with the Link of your Good-will; and can for that but yield a Heart and Head to feek for ever all your best : yet one Matter toucheth me so near, as I may not over-skip; Religion, the Ground on which all other Matters ought to take root; and being corrupted, may mar all the Tree. And that there be fome Fault-finders with the Order of the Clergy, which fo make a Slander to myfelf and the Church, whose Over-ruler God hath made me; whose Negligence cannot be excused, if any schiffer or Errors heretical were suffered. Thus much I must say, that some Faults and Negligences may grow and be, as in all other great Charges it happeneth; and what Vocation without? All which, if you, my Lords of the Clergy, do not amend, I mean to depose you. Look ye there-fore well to your Charges. This may be amended, without heedless or open Exclamations. I am fupposed to have many Studies, but most philo-sophical. I must yield this to be true, that I suppose few (that be no Professors) have read more. And I need not tell you, that I am so simple, that I understand not, nor so forgetful, that I remember not; and yet amidft my many Volumes, I hope, God's Book hath not been my feldomest Lectures; in which we find that which, by Reafon (for my part) we ought to believe; that feeing fo great Wickedness and Griefs in the World, in which we live, but as way-faring Pilgrims; we must suppose, that God would never have made us, but for a better Place, and of much more Comfort, than we find here. no Creature that breatheth, whose Life standeth hourly in more Peril for it, than mine own, who entred not into my State, without fight of manifold Dangers of Life and Crown; as one that had the greatest and mightiest to wrestle with. Then it followeth, that I regarded it so much, as I lest my Life behind my Care; and so you see that you wrong me too much (if any such there be) as doubt my Coldness in that behalf: For if I were not perfuaded that mine were the true way of God's Will, God forbid that I should live to prescribe it to you. Take you heed, lest Ecclesiasses say not too true, they that fear the hoary frost, the fnow shall fall upon them. I fee many overbold with God Almighty, making too many subtile Scannings of his blessed Will, as Lawyers do with humane Testaments. The Presumption is fo great, as I may not fuffer it, (yet mind I not hereby to animate Romanifts, which what Adverfaries they be to mine Effate, is fufficiently known) nor tolerate Newfangledness. guide them both by God's holy true Rule. In both Parts be Perils, and of the latter I must pronounce them dangerous to a kingly Rule, to have every Man, according to his own Cenfure, to make a Doom of the Validity and Privity of his Prince's Government, with a common Veil and Cover of God's God's Word; whose Followers must not be judged, but by private Mens Exposition. God defend you from such a Ruler, that so evil will guide you. Now I conclude, that your Love and Care neither is nor shall be bestowed upon a careless Prince; but such as but for your Goodwill passet as little for this World, as who carethe least; with Thanks for your free Subsidy, a manifest Show of the Abundance of your Goodwills; the which, I assure you, but to be employ'd to your Weal, I could be better pleas'd to return than receive.

The Petition of the Lords and Commons to the Queen, for the due and deferved Punishment of Death, to be executed on Mary, commonly called Queen of Scots; for her most execrable Treasons and Offences.

May it please your most excellent Majesty, our most gracious Sovereign;

VVE your humble, loving and faithful Sub-jects, the Lords and Commons in this present Parliament affembled, having of long time, to our intolerable Grief, seen by how manifold, most dangerous and execrable Practices, Mary, the Daughter and Heir of James V. late King of Scots, Dowager of France, commonly call'd the Queen of Scots, hath compassed the Destruction of your Majesty's most facred and royal Person; in whose Safety (next under God) our chief and only Felicity doth consist: And thereby not only to bereave us of the fincere and true Religion of Almighty God, bringing us and this noble Crown back again into the Thraldom of the Romish Tyranny; but also utterly to ruinate and overthrow the happy State and Common-Weal of this most noble Realm. Which being, from time to time, by the great Mercy and Providence of God, and your Highness's singular Wisdom, foreseen and prevented; your Majesty, of your exceeding great Clemency, and princely Mag-nanimity, hath either most graciously passed o-ver, or with singular Favour tolerated, (although often and instantly moved by your most loving and faithful Subjects, to the contrary, in times in your Parliaments, and at many other times) and hath also protected and defended the said Scottish Queen from those great Dangers, which her own People, for certain detestable Crimes and Offences to her imputed, hath determined against her. All which notwithstanding, the said Queen was nothing moved with these and many other your Majesty's most gracious Favours toward her; but rather obdurate in Malice, and by Hope of continual Impunity imbolden'd to profecute her cruel and mischievous Determinarion, by fome fpeedy and violent Course; and now lately a very dangerous Plot being conceiv'd and fet down by Anthony Babington and others, That fix desperate and wicked Persons should undertake that wicked and most horrible Enterprize, to take away your Majesty's Life, (whom God, of his infinite Mercy, long preserve) she did not only give her Advice and Direction upon every Point, and all Circumstances concerning the same, make earnest Request to have it perform'd with all Diligence; but did also promife Affurance of large Reward and Recompence to the Doers thereof. Which being inform'd to your Majesty, it pleased your Highness upon the earnest Suit of such as tendred the Sasety of your royal Person, and the good and quier State of this Realm; to direct your Commission, under the great Seal of England, to the Lords and others of your Highness's Privy-Council. and certain other Lords of Parliament, of the greatest and most ancient Degree, with some of your principal Judges, to examine, hear and de-termine the same Cause; and thereupon to give Sentence or Judgment, according to a Statute in that behalf made, in the twenty feventh Year of your most gracious Reign. By Vertue whereof, the more part of the fame Commissioners being in Number thirty fix, having at fundry times fully heard what was alledged and proved against the faid Scottish Queen, in her own Prefence, touching the faid Crimes and Offences, and what fhe could fay for her Defence and Excuse therein; did, after long Deliberation, give their Sentence and Judgment with one Confent. That the Death and Destruction of your royal Person was imagined and compassed by the said Anthony Babington, with the Privity of the same Scottish Queen; and that she did also compass and imagine the Death and Destruction of your most royal Perfon. Now, forafmuch as we, your Majetty's most humble, loyal and duriful Subjects, representing unto your most excellent Majetty, the universal State of your whole People of all degrees in this your Realm; do well perceive, and are fully fatisfy'd, that the fame Sentence and Judgment is in all things most honourable, just and lawful; and having carefully and effectually according to our most bounden Duties and confidered, upon what Ground and Canfe, fo many traiterous Complots and dangerous Practices, against your most royal Person and Eftate, and for the invading of this Realm, have, for the space of many Years past, grown and proceeded; do certainly find, and are undoubtedly perfuaded, that all the fame have been, from time to time, attempted and practifed by and from the Scottish Queen, and by her Confederates, Minifters and Favourers, who conceive an affured Hope to achieve speedily, by your Majesty's untimely Death, that which they have long expe-cted, and whereof, during your Life, (which God long preferve, to our ineftimable Comfort) they despair; to wit, to place her the faid Scottish Queen in the imperial and kingly Seat of this Realm, and by her to banish and destroy the Professors and Professing of the true Religion of Jefus Christ, and the antient Nobility of this Land; and to bring this whole State and Common-Weal to forein Subjection, and utter Ruin and Confusion: which their malicious and traisterous Purpose they will never cease to prosecute, by all possible means they can, so long as they may have their Eyes and Imaginations fixed upon that Lady, the only Ground of their treasonable Hope and Conceirs, and the only Seed-plot of all dangerous and traiterous Devices and Practices againft your facred Perfon. And feeing alfo what infolent Boldness is grown in the Heart of the same Queen, through your Majesty's former exceeding Favours and Clemencies towards her and thereupon weighing with heavy and forrow-ful Hearts, in what continual Peril, in fuch like desperate Conspiracies and Practices, your Majefty's most royal and sacred Person and Life (more dear unto us than our own) is and shall be still, without any possible means to prevent it, fo long as the faid Scottish Queen shall be suffered to continue, and shall not receive that due Punishment which, by Justice and the Laws of this your Realm, she hath so often, and so many ways, for her most wicked and derestable Offences, deserved: Therefore, and for that we find, that if the faid Lady shall now escape the due and deferved Punishment of Death, for these her moth execrable Treafons and Offences; your Highness's royal Person shall be exposed unto many more, and those more secret and dangerous Conspiracies, than before; and such as shall not or cannot te foreseen or discovered, as these her late Attempts have been; and shall not hereaster be fo well able to remove or take away the Ground and Occasion of the same, as now by Justice may and ought to be done: We do most humbly befeech your most excellent Majesty, that, as well in respect of the Continuance of the true Religion now professed amongst us, and of the Safety of your most royal Person and E-state, as in regard of the Preservation and Defence of us Your most Loving, Dutiful and Faithful Subjects, and the whole Common-weal of this Realm, it may please Your Highness to take speedy order, That Declaration of the same Sentence and judgement be made and publish'd by Proclamation, and that thereupon direction be given for further Proceedings against the said Scott fo Queen, according to the Effect and true meaning of the faid Scatte: Because upon advifed and great Confultation, we cannot find that Majefties Safety, but by the juft and speedy Execution of the faid Queen, the Neglecting whereof may procure the heavy Displeasure and Punishment of Almighty God, as by fundry severe Examples of his great Juffice in that behalf, left us in the Sacred Scriptures, doth appear. And if in the Sacred Scriptures, doth appear. the fame be not put in prefent Execution, we your mon loving and dutiful Subjects shall thereby (fo far as Man's Reafon can reach) be brought into utter Defpair of the Continuance amongst us of the true Religion of Almighty God, and of your Majesty's Life, and the Sasety of all your faithful Subjects, and the good Estate of this most flourishing Common-Weal.

Vid. p. 531. A Memorial written by the Speaker's own Hand, containing Reasons to move her Majesty to consent to the Execution of the Sentence against Mary late Queen of

Nless Execution of this just Sentence be done: Your Majesty's Person cannot any while be

fafe. II. The Religion cannot long continue among

III. The most flourishing present State of this Realm must shortly receive a woful Fall.

IV. And confequently, in fparing her, Majesty shall not only give Courage and Hardiness to the Enemies of God, of your Majesty's Self, and of your Kingdom; but shall discomfort and daunt with Despair the Hearts of your loving People: and fo defervedly provoke the heavy Hand and Wrath of God.

And that fummarily for the Reafons enfuing: 1. For as much as concerns the Danger of your Majesty; Both fhe and her Favourers think fhe hath Right, not to fucceed, but to enjoy your Crown in Polletion; and therefore as she is a most impatient Competitor, (acquainted with Blood) for will the not foare any means that may take you from us, being the only Lett that the enjoyeth not her Defire.

She is hardned in Malice against your royal Perfon, notwithstanding that you have done her all Favour, Mercy and Kindness; as west in preferving her Kingdom, as faving her Life and Honour.

And therefore there is no Place for Mcrcy, where there is no Hope of Amendment, or that the will defift from most wicked Attempts.

The rather, for that her Malice appeareth fuch, as that the maketh, as it were, her Testament of the fame, to be executed after her Death, and appointeth her Executors to perform the fame.

She affirmeth it lawful to move Invalion: therefore, as of Invalion Victory may enfue, and of Victory the Death of the Vanguished; fo doth the not obfcurely profess it lawful to deffroy you.

She holds it not only lawful, but honourable alfo and meritorious, to take your Life, &c. being deprived of your Crown by her holy Father; and therefore the will (as the hath continually done) feek it by all means whatfoever.

She is greedy of your Death, and preferreth it before her own Life: For in her late Direction to tome of her Complices, the willed, Whatfoever became of her, the tragical Execution should be perform'd on you. There is by fo much the more Danger to your Person, since the Sentence than before, by how much it behoveth them that would preferve her or advance her, to haften your Death now or never, before Execution done upon her; as knowing that you, and none elfe, can give Direction for her Death, and that by your Death the Sentence hath loft the Force of Execution, and otherwise they should come too late, if they take not the prefent Opportunity to help her.

Her Friends hold Invasion unprofitable while you live, and therefore in their opinion your Death is first and principally to be fought, as the most compendious way to ruin the Realm by Invation.

Some of the eldest and wifest Papists set it down for a special good Drift, to occupy you with Conceit, that the Prefervation of her Life is the Safety of your own; and therefore you may be affured, that they verily think that her Life will be your Death and Destruction.

ÍI. For as much as concerns Religion:

It is most perillous to spare her, who hath continually breathed the Overthrow and Suppression of the fame; being poisoned with Popery from her tender Youth, and at her Age joining in that fulfe-term'd Holy League, and ever fince and now a profess'd Enemy of the Truth.

She resteth wholly upon Popish Hopes to be delivered and advanced, and is fo devoted and doted in that Profession, that she will (as well for Satisfaction of others, as feeding her own Humor) Supplant the Gospel, where and whensoever she may. Which Evil is fo much the greater, and the more to be avoided, as that it flayeth the Soul, and will fpread itfelf not only over England and Scotland, but also into all Parts beyond the Seas, where the Gospel of God is maintained: which cannot but be exceedingly weakened, if Defection should be in these two most valiant Kingdoms.

III. For as much as concerns the happy Estate of this Realm:

The Lydians fay, Unum Regem agnofount Lydii, duos autem tolerare non possium; so we fay, Unam Regimam Elizabetham agnoscunt Angli, duas autem to-lerare non possunt. And therefore, ince she suith, that the is Queen here, and we neither can nor will acknowledge any other but you to be our Queen. It will follow, if the prevail, the will rather make us Slaves, than take us for her Children; and therefore the Realm figheth and groaneth under fear of such a Step-Mother.

She hath already provided us a Foster-sather and a Nurse, the Pope and the King of Spain; into whose Hands if it should mis-happen us to fall, what can we elfe look for, but Ruin, Destru-Aion and utter Extirpation of Goods, Lands, Lives, Honour and all.

Whilft she shall live, the Enemies of the State will hope and gape after your Death. Death they truft to make Invalion profitable for them; which cannot be, but the fame should be most lamentable for us: and therefore it is meet to cut off the Head of that Hope.

As fine hath already, by her poissoned Baits, brought to Destruction more Noblemen and their Houses, and a great multitude of Subjects, during her being here, than she would have done, if the had been in Possession of her own Country, and armed in the Field against us; so will she shill be continually Cause of the like Spoil, to the greater Lofs and Peril of this Estate: And therefore this Realm neither can or may endure her.

Her Secretaries do write and print, that we be at our Wits end, Worlds end, if the overlive your Majesty; meaning thereby, that the End of our World is the Beginning of theirs: and therefore, take her away, and their World will be at an end, before it begin.

Since the sparing of her in the 14th Year of your Reign, Popish Traitors and Recusants have multiplied exceedingly; and if you fpare her now again, they will grow both innumerable and invincible also.

IV. And therefore now in the fourth place :

Mercy in this case would in the end prove Cruelty against us all. Nim off quadim crudelis miseriordia. And therefore to spare her is to spill us.

She is only a Cousin to you in a remote degree, but we be the Sons and Children of this Land; whereof you be not only the natural Mother, but also the wedded Spouse. And therefore much more is due from you to us all, than alone to her. It would exceedingly grieve and wound the Hearts of your loving Subjects, if they should see so horrible Vice not condignly punished: If any be wavering, it will win them to the worfer Part, and many will feek to make their own Peace. Wherefore, as well for the Comfort of the one, as Stay of the other, and Retaining of all, it is most needful that Justice be done upon her.

Thousands of your loving Subjects of all degrees, which have for special Zeal of your Safety, made Oath, before God, to purfue to Death by all forcible and possible means, such as she is, by just Sentence, found to be; cannot fave their Oaths, if you keep her alive: for then either we must take her Life from her without Direction, which will be to our extreme Danger by the Offence of your Law; or elfe we must suffer her to live against our express Oath, which will be to the uttermost Peril of our own Souls; wherewith no Act of Parliament, nor Power of Man whatfoever, can in any wife dispense. And therefore, feeing it refleth wholly in you, by a most worthy and just Execution of this Sentence, to keep us upright, and free us in both, we most humbly and earnestly beseech you, &c. that speedy Justice be done upon her, whereby yourself may be fafe, the State of your Realm preferved, and we not only delivered from this Trouble of Confcience; but also recomforted to endeavour ouselves, and all ours, into whatsoever other Pe-

it, for the Prefervation and Safety of you.

Lafth, God's Vengeance against Saul for sparing Agag, against Abab for sparing the Life of Benbadad, is apparent; for they were both by the just Judgment of God deprived of their Kingdom for sparing those wicked Princes whom G. d had deliver'd into their Hands of purpose to be flain to death by them, as by the Ministers of his eternal and divine Justice.

How much those Magistrares were commended that put to death those mischievous and wicked Queens, Jezebel and zithelish!

How wifely proceeded Solomen to Punishment, in putting to death his own natural and elder Brother Adonias, for the only intention of a Marriage, which gave fulpicion of Treason! whereas there is no more defir'd of your Majoffy than the very Pope (now your fworn Enemy) fome of these late Conspirators, and this wicked Lady herfelf have thought fit to fall upon her. He in like cafe gave Sentence, vita Corradini, mors Carrolo, mors Corradini, vita Carolo. They in their bett Minds and remorfe of Confeience fetting down the beft means of your Safety, faid, Ho that hath no Arms cannot fight, and he that hath no Legs cannot run away, but he that bath no Head can do no horm. Pifees primum a c. pite fætent. She by her voluntary subscribing to the late Association, &c gave this Sentence against herself.

And after in her Letters of these Treasons to Babington, wrote, That if she were discover'd, is muld give sufficient cause to you to keep her in continual close Prison. By which Words she could mean nothing else but Pains of Death.

Therefore we feeing on the one fide how you have, so the Offence of mighty Princes, advanced Religion; with what tender Care, and more than motherly Piety, you have always cherifid us the Children of this Land, with what Honour and Renown you have restored the ancient Rights of the Crown, with what Peace and Justice you have Governd, and with what Store and Pienty you have Reigned over us.

On the other fide, feeing that this Enemy of our Felicity feeks to undermine the Religion, &c. to supplant us, and plant Strangers in the Place, to transfer the Rights of the Crown to that Italian Priest, and the Crown to herself, or to some other, from you; and therefore lieth in continual Wait, for to take away your Life, 🕉 c.

Therefore we pray you, &c. for the Cause of God, his Church, this Realm, ourfelves and yourfelf; that you will no longer be careless of your Life, our foverein Safety; nor longer fuffer Re-ligion to be threatned, the Realm to faind in Danger, nor us to dwell in Fear: but as Justice hath given rightful Sentence, &c. fo you will grant Execution. That as her Life threatneth your Death, fo her Death may, by God's Favor, prolong your Life; and that this Evil being ta-ken away from the Earth, we may praise God for our Deliverance, and pray him for our Con-tinuance; and, with the Psalmist, say, Dominus fecit judicium, and The ungodly is trapped in the works of her own hand.

And so pray God to incline your Heart to our just Defires, &c.

But it hath not been the Hardness to obtain, or Doubt how to keep the things to obtained, that only hath with-held me from these Attempts: My Mind was never to invade my Neighbours, or to usur over any. I am contented to reign over my own, and to rule as a just Prince. Yet the King of Spain doth challenge me to be the Qarreller, and the Beginchainenge me to be the Qarrener, and the Degin-ner of all thefe Wars. He doth me the greatest Wrong that can be; for my Conscience doth not accuse my Thoughts, wherein I have done him the least Injury; so that I am persuaded in my Conscience, if he knew what I know, he would be forry himself for the Wrong he hath done me. I fear not all his Threatnings: His great Preparations and mighty Forces do not ftir me; for though he come against me with a greater Power, than ever was his invincible Navy, I doubt not, but (God affiffing me, upon whom I always truft) I shall be able to defeat and overthrow him. For my Cause is just. I heard say, when he attempted his last Invasion, fome upon the Sea-Coafts forfook their Towns, and fled up higher into the Country, and left all naked and exposed to his Entrance. The Subfidy you give me I accept thankfully, if you give me your Good-will with it: But if the Necessity of the Time and your Preservations did not require it, I would refuse it. But let me tell you, the Sum is not fo much, but that it is needful for a Prince to have fo much always lying in her Coffers, for your Defence in time of need; and not that are Lieutenants and Gentlemen of Command in your Countries, I require you to take Care and special Order, that the People be well-armed, and in Readings man, all Occasions. armed, and in Readiness upon all Occasions. The Speaker's Speech to the Queen, in the Council-Chamber, on Monday, the 30th of November, 1601. and the Queen's Answer.

Most sacred and most gracious Sovereign,

E your faithful, loyal and obedient Subjects, and Commons here prefent, vouchfafed of your especial Goodness (to our unspeakable Comfort) Acces to your facred Presence, do in all Duty and Humbleness come to present that which no Words can express, most humble and thankful Acknowledgment of your most gracious Message; and most bounden and humble Thanks for your Majesty's most abundant Goodness, extended and performed to us. We cannot say, most gracious Sovereign, we have called and been heard, we have complained and been helped; though in all Duty and Thankfulness we acknowledge, your facred Ears are ever open and ever bowed down to hear us, and your blessed Hands ever stretched out to relieve us: We acknowledge, (facred Sovereign) in all Duty and Thankfulness we acknowledge, That, before we call, your preventing Grace and all-deferving Goodness doth watch over us for our Good; more ready to give, than we can defire, much lefs deferve. That Attribute which is most proper unto God, to perform all he promiferh, appertaineth alfo unto you our most gracious Sovereign Queen of all Truth, of all Constancy, of all Goodness, never wearied in doing good unto us (the Deeds themselves do speak) most careful to provide all good things for us; most gracious, most tender to remove all Grievances from us; which all your princely Actions have ever shewed, and even now your most gracious published Proclamation, of your own only meer Motion and special Grace, for the Good of all your People, doth witness to us. We come not, sacred Sovereign, one of ten to render Thanks, and the rest to go away unthankful; but all of us, in all Duty and Thankfulness, do throw down ourselves at the Feet of your Majesty, do praise God and bless your Majesty. Neither do we present our Thanks in Words or any outward thing, which can be no fufficient Retribution for fo great Goodness: But in all Duty and Thankfulness, prostrate at your Feet, we prefent our most loyal and thankful Hearts, even the last Drop of Blood in our Hearts, and the last Spirit of Breath in our Nostrils, to be poured out, to be breathed up for your Safety.

And after three low Reverences made, he with the rest kneeled down; and her Magesty began thus to answer herself, viz.

Mr. Speaker,

WE have heard your Declaration, and per-ceive your Care of our State, by falling into the Confiderations of a grateful Acknowledgment of fuch Benefits as you have received : and that your Coming is to present Thanks un-to us, which I accept with no less Joy, than your Loves can have Desire to offer such a Present. I do affure you, that there is no Prince that loveth his Subjects better, or whose Love can countervail our Love: There is no Jewel, be it of never fo rich a Price, which I prefer before this Jewel, I mean your Love; for I do more effeem it than any Treasure or Riches: for that we know how to prize, but Love and Thanks I count inestimable. And though God hath raifed me high, yet this I count the Glory of my Crown, That I have reigned with your Loves. This makes that I do not so much rejoice, that God hath made me to be Queen, as to be a Queen over so thankful a People. Therefore I have Caufe to wish nothing more than to content the Subject, and that is a Duty which I owe. Neither do I desire to live longer Days, than that I may fee your Prosperity; and that is my only Defire. And as I am that Person, that still (yet under God) hath deliver'd you; fo I trust, by the almighty Power of God, that I still shall be his Instrument to preferve you from Envy, Peril, Dishonour, Shame, Tyranny and Oppression, partly by means of your intended Helps, which we take very acceptably, because it manifesteth the Greatness of your Loves, and Loyalties unto your Sovereign. Of myself I must say this, I never was any greedy, scraping Grasper, nor a strait, fast-holding Prince, nor yet a Watter. My Heart was never fet on worldly Goods, but only for my Subjects Good. What you do bestow on me, I will nor hoard it up, but receive it to bestow on you again. Yea mine own Properties I count yours, to be expended for your Good. Therefore render unto them for me, I befeech you, Mr. Speaker, fuch my Iongue cannot exprets.

Note, that all this while they kneeled: Wherewoon her Majefty faid, 'Mr. Speaker, I would wish 'you and the rest to stand up, for I shall yet trouble you with longer Speech. So they all shood up, and she went on in her Speech, spring, Mr. Speaker, You give me Thanks, but I doubt me I have more cause to thank you all than you me; and I charge you to thank them of the House of Commons from me; for had I not receiv'd a knowledge from you, I might have fallen into the Lap of an Error, only for lack of true Information. Since I was Queen, yet did I never put my Pen to any Grant but that upon pretext and femblance made unto me, that it was both good and beneficial to the Subjects in general, tho' a private Profit to some of my ancient Servants who had deferv'd well: But the contrary being found by Experience, I am exceedingly beholden to fuch Subjects as would move the fame at first. And I am not fo fimple to suppose, but that there be some of the Lower-House whom these Grievances never touch'd; and for them I think they speak out of Zeal to their Countries, and not out of Spleen or Malevolent Affection, as being Parties grieved; and I take it exceeding grateful from them, because it gives us to know, that no Respects nor Intereffes have moved them, other than the Minds they bear to fuffer no diminution of our Honour, and our Subjects Love unto us. The Zeal of which Affection tending to ease my People and knit their Hearts unto me, I imbrace with a princely Care; far above all earthly Treasure I esteem my Peoples Love, more than which I desire not to merit. That my Grants fhould be grievous to my People, and Oppressions to be privileg'd under colour of our Patents, our kingly Dignity shall not suffer it; yea, when I heard it, I could give no rest to my Thoughts until I had reform'd it. Shall they think to escape unpunished that have thus oppressed you, and have been respectless of their Duty and regardless of our Honour? No, Mr. Speaker, I affure you, were it not more for Conscience sake than any Glory or increase of Love, that I de-fire these Errors, Troubles, Vexations and Op-pressions, done by these Varlets and lewd Perfons, not worthy the Name of Subjects, should not escape without condign Punishment. But I perceive they dealt with me like Physicians, who ministring a Drug, make it more acceptable by giving it a good Aromatical savour; or when they give Pills, do gild them all over. I have ever used to set the Last Judgment-Day before my Eyes, and fo to Rule as I shall be judged to Answer before a higher Judge. To whose Judgment-Seat I do appeal, that never Thought was cherissi'd in my Heart that tended not to my Peoples Good. And now, if my kingly Bounty have been abufed, and my Grants turned to the hurt of my People, contrary to my will and meaning; or if any in Authority under me, have neglected or perverted what I have committed to then, I hope God will not lay their Culps and Offences to my Charge; and tho' there were Danger in repealing our Grants, yet what Danger would not I rather incur for your Good, than I would fuffer them ftill to continue? I know the Title of a King is a glorious Title; but affure your-felves, that the fhining Glory of princely Authority hath not fo dazled the Eyes of our Understanding, but that we will, know and remember, that we also are to yield an Account of our Actions before the great Judge. To be a King and wear a Crown is more glorious to them that fee it, than it is pleafure to them that bear it. For my felf, I was never fo much inticed with Thanks as you imagine my Heart yieldeth, but the glorious Name of a King, or royal Authority my Tongue cannot express. me this Instrument to maintain his Truth and Glory, and to defend this Kingdom (as I faid) from Peril, Dilhonour, Tyranny and Oppref-fion. There will never Queen fit in my Sear with more Zeal to my Country, Care to my Subjects, and that will fooner, with willingness; yield and venture her Life for your Good and Safety than myfelf. And tho' you have had and may have many Princes more Mighty and Wife fitting in this Section 1999. fitting in this Seat, yet you never had or shall have any that will be more Careful and Loving. Should I afcribe any thing to my felf and my Sexly Weakness, I were not worthy to live then, and of all most unworthy of the Mercies I have had from God, who hath ever yet given me an Heart which never yet feared forcin or home Enemies. I speak it to give God the Praise as a Testimony before you, and not to attribute any thing to my self: For I, O Lord, what am I, whom Practices and Perils past should not sear! O what can I do (thefe she spake with a great Emphasts) that I should speak for any Glory! God forbid. This, Mr. Speaker, I pray you, deliver unto the House, to whom heartily recommend me; and fo I commit you all ro your best For-tunes and farther Counfels. I pray you, Mr. Comptroller, Mr. Secretary, and you of my Council, that before these Gentlemen depart into their Countries, you bring them all to Kifs my Hand.

> Vid. p. 637. The Execution of the Earl of Essex in the Tower of London, the 25th of February, Anno 1600.

N Wednesday, commonly call'd Ash-Wednesday, in the Morning, about One of the Clock, the Lieutenant of the Tower gave warning to the Earl of Effex, who was condemn'd the Thursday before of High-Treason, to prepare himself for Death, which should be the same Day following. He, being then in Bed, prefently upon notice thereof arose; Dr. Montford, Dr. Barley, and Mr. Ashton, his Chaplain, being with him; and therewithal defir'd them to join with him in those Exercises that might best benefit him for his Death, fo near approaching. Thereunto they most willingly condescended being of purpose appointed to be with him, to prepare and make him ready to tast of that his most bitter Cup. The Exercises that were used, were hearty Prayers, penitent Confessions, and comfortable Preachings. The latter was perform'd by Mr. Albrou, at the request of the other And thus was the Morning spent, until the Hour drew near to finish his Course. Against which time all things were prepared for the Execution to be done within the Tower. And between the Hours of Seven and Eight of the Clock in the Morning, the Earl was brought by the Lieutenant of the Tower to the Scaifold, which was fer up in the high Court where the Church stands, having on him a black Velvet-Gown, and a Sute of black Sattin; who coming thereunto, ascended the Stairs, which were about four Foot high and three Yards fquare, with Rails round about; the three Divines going up with him. At his coming upon the Scaffold he carried a most constant and settled Countenance, neither high nor dejected: And stepping into the midit of the Scaffold, where the Block lay, with a little motion of Body faluted all the Nobles. Knights and Gentlemen, who fate on Forms near unto the Stage; viz. the Earls of Comber-land and Hartford, Lord Vilconne Bindon, Lord Thomas Howard, Lord Morky, Lord Compton, and others that were there prefent. And hereupon, with a diffinct and ferious Duty, he fram'd his Speech to this or fuch like effect: I defire your Lordships, and you, my Christian Brethren, here present to see my just Punishment; to be a Witness that I con-fis to the Glory of God and the beating down of mine own Flesh, that I am a gricuous Sinner, yea the most gricuous of all Sinners; and that the number of my Sins gravius of att Simers; and that the number of my sim-ove more than the Hirs on my Hoad. I have leved in Wantowess, in the Lusts of the Flesh, all vain nuclean-ness: I have been full of Pride, Venity and Ambition: I do acknowledge this Sin og sinst my Sovereign, this bloody Sin, this crying Sin, for which I am now come to die; protesting, that I never meent to burt my Soveto die; protessing, that I never meent to burt my Sovereign, her Person or Dignity. And therefore I desire you to bear Winnst of these my Protessians. I never was, I think God, Atheist, to deny God, or to hold any Harely against the Godbead; nor Papis, to seribe any thing to my own Works; but hope to be saved by the Alexies of God, and the Merits of Festin shift, my only Saviour, and so sorward. I believe all the Articles of that Religion and Faith in which was to priced, and which I have been because. believe all the Articles of that Religion and Faith in oxbibl I was beprized, and which I have been brought up in, and which I have been brought up in, and which I have per to continue to my laft gafp. I was never guilty of Hyperify in Religion, but always subject to all Imperfections and Corruptions of the Field. I acknowledge on felf a most imperfect Creature. And now I crave Pardon of all the World: First of my Sourceign, next of the State, of the Nobles and People, and especially of the Nobles and Gentlemen that for the love of me are fullen into this Action against their Sourceign and Anointed of God. I beartly frogive all M.n. and desire that they will have a charitable concit of me and my Proceedings. I do beseed God to give her Majety a religious and wise Heart, and, if it Majefy a religious and wife Heart, and, if it please him, a long Reign and a prosperous. And now I presse time, a tong Keigu and a prosperous. And now I beleech your Lordships, and you, my Christian Brethren here present, to join with me in Prayer to God, that he will dissip the west of my Field I am not able to endure of my felf, without his especial Grace, this last condition and with the head of my felf and met able to endure of my felf, without his especial Grace, this last condition and with the finite in a destination. Conflict; and yet the Spirit is most willing to undergo this heavy Cross, to drink of the bitter Cup of Death. And here the Ministers put him in mind to make Confession of his Faith in saying the Creed; the which he did; giving them most hearty Thanks therefore; for now, faith he, Satan is most busy. And then putting off his Gown, he kneeled down with his Hands lifted up and closed together, and his Funness faith. together, and his Eyes most firmly fixed in the Heavens: He defir'd, in most effectual Phrases, that God would give him power to Pray, not with his Tongue and Understanding only, but with Faith, Zeal, firm Conscience and full As-For he acknowledg'd, that through furance. his own Ignorance and Dulnels he could not of fer up his Prayers to God as he ought, but he prayed that he might perform that Christian Duty, and he affuredly hoped that God would accept his Willingness for the Action; and in most effectual manner he craved Strength and Conflancy of the Almighty, that without all dcubring or wavering he might have Confidence and full Affurance of all the Mercies promifed and made in Chriff Jefus, even unto the laft gafe of Breath: That Chrift ought to be the only object of the Even of the Might, they be More than the Mercies and the Confidence of the Even of the Might, they be More than the More than the Mercies of the Even of the Might, they be More than the Mercies of the Even of the Might, they be More than the Mercies of the Even of the Might, they be More than the Mercies of the Even of the Might, they be Mercies of the Might when the Might when the Might was the Might when the Might was the Might when the Might was the Mig of the Eye of the Mind; that his Heart might not be carried away with any worldly Thoughts, but that in his Diffolution, at his laft gafp, he might have God only before him; and fuch-like most heavenly Prayers. He continu'd most fervently until he concluded with the Prayer of all Prayers, which is the Lord's Prayer, which he pronounced with a most constant Resolution, all the Affembly joining with him in Tongue and Voice as they before had done in Heart; all the whole Affembly pouring down most wonderful Floods of Tears, with loud Crying and hearty Sobs. making great Lamentation. His Prayers Sobs, making great Lamentation. His Prayers being ended, he desir'd the Executioner to tell him how he should fit himself for the Block. Then the Executioner ask'd him Forgiveness; and he anfwer'd him and forgave him, faying, Spare not, nor be afraid, for thou art the Minifer of Justice. Then he pull'd off his Doublet, under which he had a Wastcoat of Scarlet embroider'd with Gold; and then he proftrated himfelf faying, I prostrate myself before thee, O Lord my God, be-seeching thee that thy blessed Angels may be ready to recire my Soul so sound is it is departed from my Body; and I pray you all to join with my Spirit when my Arms are spretched out in Prayer mato God. Thus, without mustle, laying his Head on the Block, his Eyes lifted up towards Heaven, his Arms stretched abroad, he faid, Lord, into thy Hands I commend my Spirit; Lord Jesus receive my Soul: Whereat the Executioner doing his Office very ill, took three Stroaks before he cut off the Head; and yet neither Arms, nor Body, nor Head stirr'd; which the Executioner took up, and said, God fave the

which the Londoners, especially, took in ill part, who had sitted out 18 Vessels for this Whalefishing; and so much the more, because a Report went up and down, that the English had also been oppress'd in the Islands of the East-

The English and Dutch had a long time contended about the Greenland Fishery, as did also the French and Spaniards, pretending the Law of Nations, fince the Seas were free to them. The English claim'd the Propriety, because Sir Hugh Willoughby, an Englishman, in the Year 1553, first found it out. The Danes, because it is under their Dominion by the Confession of the English themselves, who pay them Duty, or Toll, for Fishing, (which they did after the Death of Queen Elizabeth.) The Hollanders affirm, that William Bernardson and Jo. Cornelison, Hollanders, Anno 1596. did first discover this; that the Greenland discover'd by Willoughby was at long diffance, this last being under the Latitude of 52 Degrees; the first is extended as far as 75 and 82 Degrees: That the English came not thither till the Year 1608. They urge, that the Sea is free; that the English, contrary to the Right of Nations and the Laws of Humanity, forbid others to Fish there; whereas the Kings of France hinder none to fish in New France; neither do the Kings of England forbid fishing in the Bays of Ireland: And they com-plain, that the English threw down the Marks which William Bernardson had set up in memory of the first Discovery; and that they had taken away the Oyl by force of Arms the Year before.

The Rioters at the Spanish Ambassador's House tried at Guildball: The Father of the little Boy that was hurt, and others, Fined 1000 l. each, and Imprison'd during the King's Pleafure.

King 3omes He was Thirty fix Years of Age when he came to the Crown. How dangerous the Paffage had been from his very Infancy to his Middle Age, is not only written in many Histories, but the untamed and untractable Spirits of most of that Nation are a sufficient Witness and Record. The wife Queen found many Petty Titles, but trone of that Power: Any other Hand that should have reach'd for the Crown, might a caught a Cloud of Confusion; and those Supporters, and Props, that held up her Greatness, (loth to fubmit to Equals) made Scaffolds to his Triumphs. And now 1 have ftirr'd the Ashes of great Essen, I must revive his Memory with this short Character; for Reports flying upon the airy wing of the Times, have variously exalted or depressed him, as the ferene for him, or the cloudy fancy against him, waved up and down. He had a gallant and noble Spirit, full of Urbanity and innate Courtese, which too much took the popular Eye; and being a great ingroffer of Fame, it procured him many Enemies, which made his Spirit boil into Paffion, and that was more fuitable to his Enemies Defigns than his own; for they lighted their Can-dle by his Fire, and this Heat being blown by fome fiery Spirits about him, gave to the goodness of his Nature a tincture of Revenge, which his Enemies made reflect upon the Queen; fo that the Coal he strove to bring to burn his Enemies Nests, kindled his own Funeral Pile.

But our King coming through the North, (Banquetting and Feafting by the way) the Applause of the People in so obsequious and submissive a manner (still admiring Change) was check'd by an honest plain Scotlman, (unused to hear such humble Accianations) with a Prophetical Expression; This People will spoil a gud King. The King as unused, so tired with Multi-tudes, especially in his Hunting, (which he did as he went) caused an Inhibition to be published, to reftrain the People from Hunting him. Hap-pily being fearful of fo great a Concourfe, as this Novelty produced, the old Hatred betwixt the Borderers not yet forgotten, might make him apprehend it to be of a greater extent; though it was generally imputed to a defire of enjoying his Recreations without interruption.

This our Author was thus well furnished with what was necessary towards writing the History of King James's Regin, in mult be own'd, he has done it with an Air of Prejudice, if not in some Places of Rancour; which may in part be attributed to his Friendlisp to his Patron the Earl of Essay, and his Restments of the Injuries done to the Nobleman by King James and his Favouriets; and more particularly by Somester in the Affair of his Lady, which its no wender the Earl nor his Friends could never forget.

which its no wonder the Lert nor his Friends could never lorget.

As to the Style of this History, it's harft and broken, the Periods often obfcure, and fometimes without just Consexion, Faults that were frequent in most of the Writers of that time.

Tho's he finish'd this History about the Year 1652, when both the Monnetby and Hierarchy were overturn'd, it does not appear he was Enemy to either: On the contrary, In the Fisture he draws of himselfs before the Book, he is to fast from pertending Merit for his Activeness in these Matters, a thing dutal in Writers of that time, that he values himself for having no hand in pulling down the Mitre and the Crown; which was not the way to make his Court to the Power them is helder.

hes himself for having no hand in pulling down the Aires and the Crossn; which was not the way to make his Court to the Powers then in being.

But nothing could inhance the Value of this History more, than a most wretched one published in Answer to it, by one William Sanderson, Initiated, [A Complean History of Queen Mary of Scotland, and her San King James of Great Birtain.] This Man pretends in leveral Places to some Secret Memoria or Discourses with great Man, too side Great Birtain.] This Man pretends in leveral Places to some Secret Memoria or Discourses with great Man, too make good the Passages of his History. But the Truth is, the whole is nothing else but an ill compil'd Caldetino out of other Authors; wherein he for the most part mislakes or perverts their Meaning. In cursorily reading this History, I have sometimes taken notice of above Four or Five groß Errors, either in Names, Things, or Chronology, in one single Page. And for one Instance among many thoustand others, he commist swo remarkable Bursten in the compass of a few Lines in his Introduction, saying, That Queen Many Stuart had Two Brothers that ded Gweral Years before their Father, whereas they died but a few Days: And then faying, That upon her Arrival from France Be found her State mightily Distemper'd under the Protection of the Bashard James, and afterwards East of Marray; the this last Title was not conferred upon him till some Years after.

To return to our Author Wilfor: He died at the Earl of Marriek's Seat in Essa about the Year 1632. Those whose Hopes were almost quenched, like Water cast upon Lime, burn inward, till it breaks out into Flame; fo hard it is for uncomposed Spirits (miffing their Aims) to fettle upon the Basis of solid Reason. The Earl of Southampton, covered long with the Ashes of great Effer's Ruins, was fent for from the Tower; and the King look'd upon him with a fmiling Countenance, though diplending happily to the new Baron of Effingdon, Sir Robert Cecil; yet it was much more to the Lords, Cobham and Grey, and Sir Walter Raleigh, who were forbidden their Attendance. But their Pardon carried them to the Tower, where the Lord Gray some Years after died, and in his Death extinguished his Family. The Lord Cobbam, Sir Griffin Markham, and others, discharged of Imprisonment, lived miscrable and poor, Cobbam at home, and the rest abroad. And Raleigh, while he was a Prifoner, having the Idea of the World in his Contemplation, brought it to some Perfection, in his excellent and incomparable Hiftory; but when Liberty turned it to Action, it taught him to roam, io, as the Event proved fatal to him.

I have seen mode of the Account that have been published on this Subject; and from them, and from some sheets of Geal Earl of Satishey, and a Manuscript of one Enck, who it seems was Secretary to Chancellor Egerien, I take the Case to have been this:

The Earl of Satishey and Sit Watter Raleigh lad been open and declar'd Enemies of the unhappy Earl of Egers, and the chief Promoters of his Run: Tho King James could easily digest the Death of Queen Mary Susan. Mother; it is notoriously known he never heartily forgave any of Eger's Enemies; which both Card and Raleigh were aware of, but took contrary measures to avoid his Refentment. On the contrary, Card, by the Medias too of Hume, that was afterwards Earl of Dambar, had been long before entirely reconciled to King James, had done him important Services, and kept a Correspondence with him, while Queen Elizai the was sive.

When King James came into England, Card was not only continued in his Places, but, centrary to all Men's Expediations, was indeed made the Fifth Mirifier of State, and Raleigh negleded. The latter knowing the former to be at least equally concernal with him in the Fall of Egirs, his great Mind could not bear the Distinction made between them by their new Mafter; and the rather, that Gerl asked the Courter, in frowing upon his define

The Scots naturally, by long Converse, affecting the French Vanity, drew on a Garb of Gallantry, (meeting with a plentiful Soil, and an open-handed Prince.) The English, excellent for Initation, loth to be exceeded in their own Country, maintained their Follies at their own Charge. All this came accompanied with a great Plague, which happened this Year in London, whereof above Thirty thousand died: Yet who will not venture for a Crown; for in the Heat of it, on the 25th of July, being the The King Day dedicated to St. James, the King, with his and Wife Queen Jame, were both Crown d at Weff-Queen July 10 July

Fate hath defign'd, That wherefoe'er this Stone The Scots shall find, There they shall hold the Throne.

But how the Stream of Time runs through the Chanel of these Prophetical Fancies, Experience shews: For, its true, if the Scots came to near the Throne, as to enjoy the Stone or Chair where the English Kings are Inaugurated, they may hold the Crown: But being only grounded upon Conjecture, these Conceits are commonly made up before they are half moulded, or, like Abortives, are shaped after they are born.

When these Ceremonies were past, the King retir'd from this Croud of Infection, gave fome Admission to Ambassadors, that from all the neighbouring Princes and States came to congratulate this happy Inauguration: For, befides the ordinary Ceremony among Princes, their Reason might tell them, That if his Predeceffors were able to grapple with the growing Monarchy of him that coveted to be Universal, and to affift and relieve her Neighbours and Confederates from his Oppression, he would be and most of them he placed as Jewels about his

And now the old Irifh Rebel Tirone coming Tirone over, (led by his Conqueror the Lord Monitor) comes had not only Pardon, but Civilities, and all over outward Expreffions to gain him; the Edge of the People's Harred being abated by a Proclamation, that no Man should shew him the least Disrespect. The Lord Montjoy, as a Reward for his good Service, was created Earl of Devonflive: And having given way to Creations, they brake in upon us like a Deluge. As the Papist was different from the Proteflant Religion on one fide, so was the Puritan (as they then called pious and good Men) on the other; both which were active to attain their own Ends: And the King had the Command of himself, not bitterly to oppose, but gently to sweeten their Hopes for his; thinking himfelf unfecure betwixt them. The latter were now follicitous for a more clear Reformation. This the Bishops opposed, as trenching too much upon them; and the King listen'd to see Experience of it in Seesland) how much it had encroach'd upon him. For he had the see that the sees of the sees of the seesland of the seesland in the seesland the seesla thought their diffenting from the Established Government of the Church, was but to get Government of the Church, was but to get that Power into a great many Men's Hands, which was now but in one; and that one had Dependance upon him, with whom he might better grapple. The Prelates diffilling this Maxim into the King, No Bilhop no Monarch; fo strengthening the Mitre by the same Power that upholds the Crown: Yet, to satisfy the Importunity, a Conference is appointed at Hampton-Court, where the Bishops Opponents, Dr. Reynolds, Dr. Sparks, Mr. Knewshuh, and Mr. Chadderton, Men eminent in Learning and Mr. Chadderton, Men eminent in Learning and Piety in themselves, as well as in the Opinion of the People, did desire, in the Name of the or the reopie, and defire, in the Name of the rest of their Party, That the Destribute of the Church might be preserved in Purity; That good and faithful Pastors might be planted in all Churches; That Church-Government might be sincerely administred; That the Book of Common-Prayer might be stitled to more Encrease of Godlinds. Out of some of these Particulars, they institude more that Book of the Statement of t more Entrage of Gontings. Out of Notice of Interest Particulars, they infilted upon the Bifhops Power of Confirmation; which they would have every Minister capable of in his own Parish. They disputed against the Cross in Baptism, the Ring in Marriage, the Surplice, the Onthe No Officio, and other things that fluck with them; which they hoped to get all purged away, because the King was of a Northern Conflitution, where no such things were practised, not yet having felt the King's Pulse, whom the Southern Air of the Bishops Breaths had fo wrought upon, that he himfelf answers most of their Demands, fometimes gently, applying Lenitives, where he found Ingenuity, (for he was Learned and Eloquent,) other times Corrolives, telling them these Oppositions proceeded more from Stubborness in Opinion, than Tenderness of Conscience; and so, betwixt his Arguments and Kingly Authority menaced them to a Conformity, which provid a way of filencing them for the prefent, (and fome of them were content to acquielce for the future; and the King manag'd this Dif-courfe with fuch Power, (which they expected not from him, and therefore more danted at,)

They prevail'd not only for themselves here, but by their Means (not long after) the King look'd their Means (not long arter) the King look of back into Scotland, and put the Keys there again into the Bishops Hands, unlocking the Passage to the Enjoyment of their Temporal Estates; which swell'd them to high, that in his Son's Time the Women of Scotland pull'd them out of their tottering Seats.

On the other fide, the late Conspiracy of Cobham and Grey had so chilled the King's Blood, that he begins to take notice of the Swarms of Priests that slock'd into the Kingdom: For though the Conspirators were of several Religions, yet in their Correspondence with Forcign Princes, Religion was the Pretence. For in every Alteration of Kingdoms, few are fo modelf but they will throw in the Hook of their vain Hopes, thinking to get something in the troubled Stream. The Jesuits were not flack (coming with the Seal of the Fisher) in spread-(coming with the Scal of the Filher) in preading their Nets; but a Proclamation broke through them. The King being contented to let them alone, till they came too near him, willing to comply rather than exafperate; the Safety of his own Person made him look to the Safety of Religion; and to secure both, he found this the best Remedy, declaring to all the World the Cause of this Restriction.

† This feeming or real Severity of King James against the Jesuits and other Seminary Priests of the Romisth Church, feems to me to have been in a great part owing to the frequent Representations made to him by Humy IV. of France, and his First Minister Monseur de Rom, afterwards made Duke of Sady; for in the Memoires of the latter, there is Mention made of several Intimations given by him to King James and his Ministers, of the Designs of the Missioners in England to disturb the Quiet of his Reign.

Bellermane, in his Answer to a Book of King James, took the Freedom to accuse him of Inconstancy, and reproach'd him with a Letter of his to Pope Clement VIII, from Scalland, wherein he had recommended to his Holines the Bishop of Fassian for a Cardinal's Hat; that so he might be better able to advance his Affairs in the Court of Rome.

Queen Elizabeth had got Notice of this Letter the very Year it was fent, and had exposulated with King James above it in Terms bitter enough. King James utterly deny'd it, and sent one Drammond to her, that was said to have earry'd it, who deny'd his Knowledge of any such Letter with the solemnest Oaths. The Matter lay sfleep ever siter, it this Book of Cardinal Bellamine's came our; and poor Balmerine was oblig'd either to take the whole Blame of it upon himself, upon Hopes, or rather Assurance, of a Pardon, or else to lose his Head fresh High Treason, which the Country. It was pietry comical to see King James express his Abhorrence of corresponding with the Pope, or of giving him the Title of Holmels, and that both at the Council Board in England, and in his Letter to the South Council, when some Versa after he made no struple about it, on the Bulmels of the Sponsyl Match. It's likewise remarkable, that Balmerine liv'd to his dying Day in an easy Retreat, possessing the short of the Pope, and had the Honour of several Council.

This

This did fomething allay the Heat and Hopes of the Jesuits, and their Correspondents; but it made way for dark, and more secret Contrivances, which afterwards they put in Practice.

On the contrary, another Proclamation came out for Uniformity in Religion according to the mation out for Uniformity in Kengion according for Unifor Unifor Uniformity in Kengion according to the feet of Conformity and Conformity in Kengion at the last that had not received Satisfaction at the last Conference. The Bishops thought themselves unfecure, while fo many Opposites (unblamea-ble in their Conversations) by their Pens and Preaching gain'd upon the People, striking at the very Root of Hierarchy, that it was a hard Question, Whether the Jessits, whose Principles would advance their Greatness, or these that would pluck it down, were most Odious to them? And now Proclamations are the activest Agents; some go abroad to please the People, some the King. All Monopolies (like Diseases) that crept in, when the good old Queen had not Strength enough to keep them out, must be purged away; and such Protections as Licentious Liberty had granted to hinder Proceedings in Law, must be taken off: Saltpetre-men, that will dig up any Man's House by Authority, (where they are not well fee'd) must be restrain'd; and Purveyors, Cart-takers, and such insolent Officers as were Grievances to the People, must be cried down by Proclamation. A Prince that is invited, or comes new-ly to a Kingdom, must have his Chariot-Wheels smooth shod. And yet the Liberty of Hunting must be forbidden, the King's Game preserv'd and a strict Proclamation threatens the Disobeyers. Indeed, take this King's Reign from the beginning to the end, and you shall find Proclamations current Coin; and the People took them for good Payment a great while, till the Multitude of them lessened their Valuation.

A Scr. The Bishops could not be so wary, but some Courtier or other would commend a Preacher gainst Ce-to the King, if they knew any of excellent remonies Parts; so that some Preached before him that were averfe to the Bishops ways. Among the rest, one Mr. Burges, an excellent Preacher, and a pious Man, moderately touching upon the Ceremonies, faid, 'They were like the Roman 'Senators Glaffes, which were not worth a Man's Life or Livelihood: For (faith he) this Senator invited Augustus Casar to a Dinner; and as he was coming to the Featt, he heard a horrid Outcry, and faw fome Company drawing a Man after them, that made that Noife: The Emperor demanded the Caufe of that Violence; it was answer'd, Their Master had condemned this Man to the Fish-ponds for breaking a Glass, which he fet a high Va-'lue and Esteem upon. Casar commanded a the House, he sked the Senator, Whether he had Glasses worth a Man's Life? Who answerd, being a great Lover of such Things) That he had Glasses he valued at the Price of a Province of the American Senator of the Price of a Province of the American Senator of the Price of the Pr vince. Let me fee them (faith Augustus), and he brought him up to a Room well furnish'd. The Emperor faw them Beautiful to the Eye. but knew withal they might be the Cause of much Mischief: Therefore he broke them all, fome other things against lim by the end, and Antegr. silene'd him for venting any more such Comparitions. So that for many Years after he practifed Physick, and grew an excellent Physician. But upon second Considerations he was admitted again to Preach, retaining both his Piety and Integrity, (tho' he writ a Book for the moderate Use of the Ceremonies) ending his Days in a good old Age, at Sutton-Cofeld in Warnick-fire, after a Journey into the Palatinate, as shall be express'd in its time.

The 5th of August this Year had a new Title The 5th given to it. The King's Deliveries in the North of August nuft resound here. || Whether the Goveries at made Hotempted upon the King's Person, or the King tempted upon the King's reported. It may be be on theirs, is variously reported. It may be, he retain'd something of his Predecessor, and great Parent, Henry the Seventh, that made Religion give way to Policy, oftentimes curfing and thundering out the Church's Fulminations against his own Ministers, that they might be receiv'd with the more intimate Familiarity with his Foreign Enemies, for the better Discovery of their Defigns. I will not fay the Celebration of this Holiday had so much Prophaneness, for Fame may be a Slanderer. But where there is a Strength of Policy, there is often a Power of Worldly Wisdom that manages, and sways it. The King forgot not the Services there done him, or the fecret Contrivances acted for him; for Erskin and Ramsey, Two of his then Deliverers, were not long after rewarded with Wealth and Honour, the one made Earl of Kellie, the other Earl of Holderness; the first Prime Gentleman of the Bedchamber to the King; the second got to his Bedfellow one of the prime Beauties of the Kingdom, Daughter to Robert Earl of Suffex; and both of them had their Mafter's Purie at command; yet in our time the one died poor with many Children, and the other poor and childless.

The King's first going abroad was privately to visit some of his Houses; for naturally he to viit fome or his Houles; for naturally he did not love to be looked on; and those Formalicies of State, which for a Lustre upon Princes in the People's Eyes, were but so many Burthens to him; for his private Recreations at home, and his Hunting Exercises abroad, both with the least Disturbance, were his Delights. While he remained in the Tower, he took Pleasting in highing I long, but when he game abroad him in height game abroad here. fure in baiting Lions; but when he came abroad, he was fo troubled with Swarms, that he fear'd to be baited by the People. And the Parliament now drawing on, which was fummoned to be the 19th of March, the King, with the Queen The King and Prince, Four Days before, rode from the and Tower to Whitehall; the City and Suburbs be- Queen ing one great Pageant, wherein he must give the City.

It is no wonder the Author should call in Question the Truth of this Conspiracy so many Years after, since it was not believ'd in Statland the time it was said to have happen'd: For King James having immediately thereupon issued our a Presidentiate store a Day of Publick Thanksgiving, several Ministers, and some of them his own Chaplains, refused shatly to observe it, and chose trather to lost their Livings, and be sent to Prison, than to make God, (to use their own Words) in tendring him Thanks for what they believ'd never was.

for a good Prince.

The Speech he made to the Parliament, both Houfes being met, and the first, cannot be waved, tho it be somewhat long, and printed in his own Works: By the Crisis and Conflitution of it, the Temper of his Mind may be discovered; for if ever he spake really to his Parliament, it was then; and I shall not comment upon it: For I know Princes are made of those strail Elements that other Men are; but this much I will say, He had strong Abilities in some things, that did dignify the Doer of them; and in other things such Weaknesses, as would have much advanced his Wisdom to have left undone. But if Worldly Greatness, and Glory, may well make Princes more loth to leave them, than they that have lefs, we must give them some Allowance of Fear to lose them. The Speech was to this effect:

The King's C Speech to C the Par- C hament C

'It did no fooner pleafe God to lighten his Hand, and relent the Violence of his devouring Angel against the poor People of this City, but as foon I did refolve to call this Parliament, and that for Three Chief and Principal Rea-The First whereof is, (and which of it 'felf, altho' there were no more, is not only a fufficient, but a most full and necessary Ground and Reason for convening of this Assembly) the First Reason, I say, is, That you who are here present assembled to represent the Body of this whole Kingdom, and of all forts of ' People within the fame, may with your own Ears hear, and that I out of my own Mouth may deliver unto you, the Affurance of My due Thankfulness for your so joyful and general Applaufe, to the declaring and receiving of Me in this Seat, (which God, by My Birth-right, and Lineal Defeent, had in the fulness of time provided for Me) and that immediately after it pleafed God to call your late Sovereign, of famous Memory, full of Days, but fuller of immortal Trophies of Honour, out of this transitory Life. Not that I am able to express by Words, or utter by Eloquence, the vive Image of My own inward Thankfulness, but only that out of My own Mouth, you may rest assured to expect that Measure of Thankfulness at My Hands, which is according to the Infiniteness of your Deferts, and to My Inclination, and Ability, for Requital of the same. Shall I ever? nay, can I ever be able, or rather so unable in Memory, as to forget your unexpected Readiness and Alacrity, your ever memorable Refolution, and your most wonderful Conjunction, and Harmony of your Hearts, in declaring and embracing Me as your undoubted and lawful King and Governour? Or shall it ever be blotted out of My Mind, how at My first Entry into this Kingdom, the People of all forts rid and ran; nay, rather flew to meet Me? Their Eyes flaming nothing but Sparkles of Affection; their Mouths and Tongues uttering nothing but Sounds of Joy; their Hands, Feet, and all the reft of their Members, in their Gestures, difcovering a passionate Longing and Earnestness to meet, and embrace their new Sovereign. Quid ergo retribuam? Shall I allow in My Self that which I could never bear with in another? No. I must plainly and freely confess here, in all your Audiences, that I did ever naturally To far mission a Tongue too smooth, and diliment, and Verbal Thanks, as I ever fuspected that fort of People meant not to pay their Debtors in more fubfitantial fort of Coin. And therefore fore exprefling of My Thankfulneß, I must refort unto the other Two Reasons of My convening of this Parliament, by them in Action to utter My Thankfulnes: Both the faid Reasons having but one Ground, which is the Deeds, whereby all the Days of My Life I am by God's Grace to express My faid Thankfulnes unto you, but divided in this, That in the First of these Two, Mine Actions of Thanks are so inseparably conjoined with My Person, as they are in a manner become individually annexed to the same. In the other Reason, Mine Actions are fuch, as I may either do them, or leave them undone, altho' by God's Grace I hope never to be weary of the doing them.

As to the First, it is the Bleffings which God hath in My Person bestowed upon you all, wherein I protest, I do more glory at the same for your Weal, than for any particular Respect of My own Reputation, or Advance-

The First then of these Blessings, which God hath jointly with My Person sent unto you, is, Outward Peace; that is, Peace abroad with all Foreign Neighbours: For I thank God, I may juftly fay, That never fince I was a King, I either receiv'd Wrong of any other Christian Prince or State, or did Wrong to any: I have ever, I praise God, yet kept Peace and Amity with all, which hath been fo far tied to My Person, as at my coming here, you are Witneffes, I found the State embarked in a great and tedious War; and only by Mine Arrival here, and by the Peace in My Person, is now Amity kept, where War was before, which is no finall Bleffing to a Christian Commonwealth: For by Peace abroad with their Neighbours, the Towns flourish, the Merchants become rich, the Trade doth encrease, and the People of all forts in the Land enjoy free Liberty to exercise themselves in their several Vocations, without Peril or Disturbance. Not that I think this Outward Peace fo infeparably tied to My Person, as I dare assuredbaraof feet of My Self, and to you, the certain Continuance thereof: But thus far I can very well affure you, and in the Word of a King promise unto you, That I shall never give the first Occasion of the Breach thereof; neither fhall I ever be moved for any particular, or private Paffion of Mind, to interrupt your Publick Peace, except I be forced thereunto, either for Reparation of the Honour of the Kingdom, or elfe by Necessity for the Weal and Prefervation of the same : In which Case, a fecure and honourable War must be preferred before an unfecure and dishonourable Peace. Yet do I hope, by My Experience of the by-past Bleflings of Peace, which God hath so long, ever since My Birth, bestowed upon Me, that He will not be weary to continue the fame, nor repent Him of His Grace towards Me; transferring that Sentence of King David's, upon his by-paft Victories of War, to mine of Peace; That that God who preferv d Me from the devouring Jaws of the Bear, and of the Lion, and deliver'd them into My Hand, shall now also grant Me Victory over that uncircumcis'd Philiftine.

'But altho' Outward Peace be a great Blef-'fing, yet it is as far inferiour to Peace within, 'as Civil Wars are more cruel and unnatural sa 8 z t than Wars abroad. And therefore the second the Kigm and The or Both He My Ferfon a great Bleffing that God hath with My Perfon | like lineally defended of both the Crowns, factorfit fort unro you, is Peace within, and that in a whereby it is now become a little World with double Form: First, by My Defent lineally in it fell, being intrenched and fortified round out of the Loins of Henry the Seventh, is re ' united and confirmed in Me the Union of the 'Two Princely Rofes of the Two Houses of Lancefer and York, whereof that King, of hapalso the first Ground-layer of the other Peace. (The lamentable and miferable Events, by the civil and bloody Diffention betwixt these Two Houses, was so great, and so late, as it need not be renewed unto your Memories) which as it was first settled and united in Him, so it is now re-united and confirm'd in Me; being justly and lineally descended, not only of that happy Conjunction, but of both the Branches thereof in any Times before. But the Union of these Two Princely Houses is nothing comparable to the Union of the Two ancient and famous Kingdoms, which is the other inward Peace annexed to My Person.

'And here I must crave your Patience for a little space, to give Me Leave to discourse more particularly of the Benefits that do arise of that Union which is made in My Blood, being a Matter that belongeth most properly to Me to speak of, as the Head, wherein that great Body is united. And First, If We were to look no higher than to Natural and Physical Reasons, We may easily be persuraded of the great Benefits that by this Union do redound to the whole Island: For if Twenty Thousand Men be a firong Army, is not the double thereof, Forty Thousand, a fironger Army? If a Baron enricheth himself with double as many Lands as he had before, is he not dou-ble the greater? Nature teacheth Us, That Mountains are made of Motes; and that at first, Kingdoms being divided, and every par-ticular Town, or little Country, (as Tyrants or Usurpers could obtain the Possession of a Signory apart) many of these little Kingdoms are now in Process of Time, by the Ordinance of God, join'd into great Monarchies, whereby they are become Powerful within themselves, to defend themselves from all Outward Invasions,and their Head and Governour thereby enabled to redeem them from Foreign Affaults, and punish private Transgressions within. Do We not yet remember, that this Kingdom was divided into Seven little Kingdoms, besides Wales? And is it not now the stronger by their Union? And hath not the Union of Wales to England added a greater Strength thereto? Which, tho' it was a great Principality, was nothing comparable, in Greatness and Power, to the ancient and famous Kingdom of Scotland. But what shall We stick upon any Natural Appearance, when it is manifeft, that God by his Almighty Providence hath pre-ordain'd it so to be? Hath not God first united these Two Kingdoms, both in Language and Religion, and Similitude of Manners? Yea, hath He not made Us all in one Island, compassed with one Sea, and of it felf by Nature fo indivisible, as almost those that were Borderers themselves on the late Borders, cannot diftinguish, nor know or difcern their own Limits? Thefe Two Countries being separated neither by Sea, nor great River, Mountain, nor other Strength of Nature, but only by little finall Brooks, or demolished little Walls, so as rather they were and Reg. 1. than Wars abroad. And therefore the Second I the Right and Title of both in My Person a An Reg. 1. about with a natural, and yet admirable firong Pond or Diech, whereby all the former Fears of this Nation are quite cut off: The other part of the Island being ever before now, not only the Place of Landing to all Strangers that were to make Invasion here, but likewise moved by the Enemies of this State, by untimely Incurtions to make inforced Divertion from their Conquests, for defending themfelves at home, and keeping fure their Back-door, as then it was called, which was the greatest Hindrance and Let My Predecessors of this Nation ever had, in diffurbing them from their many famous and glorious Conquefts abroad: What God hath conjoin'd then, let no Man separate. I am the Husband, and all the whole Island is My lawful Wife; I am the Head, and it is My Body; I am the Shepherd, and it is My Flock: I hope therefore no Man will be so unreasonable as to think, that I, that am a Christian King, under the Gospel, should be a Polygamist, and Husband to Two Wives; that I being the Head, should have a divided and monftrous Body; or that being the Shepherd of fo fair a Flock, (whose Fold hath no Wall to fence it, but the Four Seas) fhould have My Flock parted in Two. But as I am affur'd, that no honest Subject, of whatfoever degree, within My whole Dominions, is less glad of this joyful Union, than I am; fo may the frivolous Objection of any that would be hinderers of this Work (which God hath in My Person already established) be easily answerd; which can be none, except fuch as are either blinded with Ignorance, or else transported with Malice, being unable to live in a well-govern'd Commonwealth, and only delighting to fish in troubled Waters: For if they would stand upon their Reputation, and Privileges of any of the Kingdoms, I pray you, were not both the Kingdoms Monarchies from the beginning? And confequently, could ever the Body be counted without the Head, which was ever unseparably join'd thereunto: So that as the Honour and Privi-leges of any of the Kingdoms could not be divided from their Sovereign; so are they now confounded and join'd in My Person, who am equal and alike kindly Head to both. When this Kingdom of England was divided into fo many petty Kingdoms, (as I told you before) one of them eat up another, till they were all united into one. And yet, can Wilifine of Devonshire, which were of the West-Saxons, (altho' their Kingdom was of longest durance; and did by Conquest overcome divers of the rest of the little Kingdoms) make Claim to Priority of Place or Honour before Suffex, Effex, or other Shires, which were Conquer'd by them? And have We not the like Experience in the Kingdom of France, being composed of divers Dutchies, and one after another Conquer'd by the Sword? For even as little Brooks lose their Names by running and falling into great Rivers, and the very Name and Memory of great Rivers (wallow'd up in the Ocean; fo by the Conjunction of divers little Kingdom, into one, are all these private Differences and Questions swallow'd up. And fince the Success, was happy of the Saxon King-'demolished little Walls, so as rather they were a divided in Apprehension; than in Effect; and much greater Reason have We to expect a now in the end and fulness of Time entired; happy filter of this greater Union, which is one for dom's Conquer'd by the Spear of Beliena; how

An. Christic (the one half of this Island) to enjoy My 'Birth, and the first and most imperfect half of My Life, and you here to enjoy the perfect and last half thereof; so can I not think, that any would be so injurious to Me, no not in their Thoughts and Wishes, as to cut asunder the one half of Me from the other. But in this Matter I have far enough infitted, refting affured, That in your Hearts and Minds you ' all applaud this My Discourse.

' Now altho' these Blessings (before rehearsed) of inward and outward Peace be great; yet feeing that in all good things, a great part of their Goodness and Estimation is lost, if they have not Appearance of Perpetuity or long Continuance; fo hath it pleafed Almighty God to accompany My Person also with that Favour, having healthful and hopeful Issue of My Body (whereof fome are here prefent) for Continuance and Propagation of that undoubted Right which is in My Person; under whom I doubt not but it will please God to prosper and continue for many Years this "Union, and all other Bleffings of inward and outward Peace, which I have brought with " Mc.

But neither Peace outward, nor Peace inward, nor any other Bleffing that can follow thereupon, nor Appearance of the Perpetuity thereof, by Propagation in Posterity, are but weak Pillars, and rotten Reeds to lead unto, of his Bleffing make them durable; for in vain doth the Watchman watch the City, if the Lord be not the principal Defence thereof; in vain doth the Builder build the House, if God give not the Success; and in vain (as St. Paul faith) doth Paul plant, and Apollo water, if God give not the Increase: For all World-Iy Bleffings are but like fwift paffing Shadows, fading Flowers, or Chaff blown before the Wind, if by the Profession of true Religion, and Works according thereunto, God be not moved to maintain and fettle the Thrones of Princes. And altho' fince Mine Entry into divers of the Ecclefiastical State, and likewise by divers Proclamations clearly declared My 'Mind in Points of Religion; yet do I not think it amifs in this fo Solemn an Audience to take Occasion to discover somewhat of the Secrets of My Heart in that Matter: For I fhall never (with God's Grace) be ashamed to make publick Profession thereof upon all Occasions, left God should be ashamed of Me before Men and Angels; especially lest at this time, Men might prefume further upon the Miskowledge of My Meaning to trouble this Parliament than were convenient.

At My first coming, altho' I found but one Religion, and that which by My Self is profeffed, publickly allowed, and by the Law maintain'd; yet found I another fort of Religion, befides a private Seet, lurking within the Bowels of this Nation. The first is, the True Bowers of this cardon. Religion, which by Me is professed, and by Law is established: The second is, the Falsly called Catholicks, but truly Papiths: The third, which I call a Sect rather than a Religion, is the Puritans and Novelits, who do not fo far differ from us in Points of Religion, as in their confused Form of Policy and Parity, being ever discontented with the present Government, and impatient to suffer any Super-in any well-govern'd Commonwealth. But as An. Reg. 1. for My Course towards them, I remit it to An Christi My Proclamations made upon that Subject. And now for the Papills, I must put a Difference betwixt Mine own Private Profession of My Salvation, and My Politick Government of the Realm for the Weal and Quietness thereof. As for My own Profession, you have Me your Head now among you, of the same Religion that the Body is of: As I am no Stranger to you in Blood, no more am I a Stranger to you in Faith, or in Matters con-cerning the House of God. And altho' this 'My Profession be according to My Education, wherein (I thank God) I fuck'd the Milk of God's Truth, with the Milk of My Nurse; yet I do here proteft unto you, That I would never (for fuch a Conceit of Conftancy, or other Prejudicate Opinion) have fo firmly c kept My first Profession, if I had not found it agreeable to all Reason, and to the Rule of My Conscience. But I was never violent, nor unreasonable in My Profession: I acknowledge unreasonable in My Profession: Mother Church, the Roman Church to be our Mother Church, altho' defiled with some Infirmities and Corruptions, as the fews were, before they Crucified Christ. And as I am no Enemy to the Life of a fick Man, because I would have his Body purged of ill Humours; no more am I an Enemy to their Church, because I would have them reform their Errors, not wishing the down-throwing of the Temple, but that it might be purged, and cleanfed from Corruption; otherwise how can they wish us to enter, if their House be not first made clean? But as I would be loather to dispense in the least Point of Mine own Conscience, for any Worldly Respect, than the foolishest Precisian of them all; so would I be as forry to streighten the Politick Government of the Bodies and Minds of all My Subjects to My Private Opi-nions: Nay, My Mind was ever fo free from Perfecution, or Indiralling of My Subjects in Matters of Confeience, as I hope those of that Profession within this Kingdom have a Proof fince My coming, that I was fo far from increasing their Burthens with Rehoboam, as I have so much as either Time, Occasion, or Law could permit, lightend them. And even now at this time, have I been careful to revife and confider deeply upon the Laws made against them, that some Overture might be made to the present Parliament for clearing these Laws by Reason, (which is the Soul of the Law) in case they have been in times past further, or more rigorously extended by Judges, than the Meaning of the Law was, or might tend to the Hurt, as well of the innocent as of the guilty Persons. And as to the Persons of My Subjects which are of that Profession, I must divide them into two Ranks, Clericks and Laicks; For the Laicks, I ever thought them far more excufable than the other fort, because their Religion containeth such an ig norant, doubtful, and implicite kind of Faith, grounded upon their Church, that except they do generally believe whatfoever their Teachers please to affirm, they cannot be thought guilty of these particular Points of Heresies and Corruptions, which their Teachers fo wilfully profels. And again, I must subdivide the Laicks 'into two Ranks; which are, either quiet and 'well-minded Men, peaceable Subjects, who ' cither being old, retain their first drunk-in Liquor, upon a certain Shamefacedness to be ing ever diffcontented with the prefent Go-vernment, and impatient to fuffer any Super-thought curious, or changeable: Or being triority, which maketh their Seeks infufferable young Men, through evil Education, have own Confeience, and this whole Island, as an Reg. I. initead of wholfome Nutriment: And this fort initead of wholfome Nutriment: And this fort of People, I would be forry to punish their remain in, in betraying their Liberties, and formulation whereof must only come of God, and the true Spirit. But the other Rank of Laicks, who either through Curiofity, Affe-day and Reg. I. which both had call off before I came among them; as also the Liberty of the Crown in My Posterity, which of I should leave again under the spirit of the Rank of the Rank of Spirits of Novelly or Pilicentestment have deep an an angle of the Rank of the ' ctation of Novelty, or Discontentment, have changed their Coats, only to be Factious, Stirrers of Sedition, and Perturbers of the Commonwealth; this giveth a Ground to Me (the Magistrate) to take better Heed to their Pro-

But for the Clericks, I must directly say and faffirm, That as long as they maintain one spe-ficial Point of their Doctrine, and another of their Practice, they are no way fufferable to remain in this Kingdom. The Point of Doctrine is, that arrogant and ambitious Supre-macy of their Head, the Pope, whereby he not only claims to be Spiritual Head of all 'Christians, but also to have an Imperial Civil Power over all Kings and Emperors, Dethroning and Decrowning Princes with his Foot as pleafeth him, and dispensing and disposing of all Kingdoms and Empires at his Appetite. The other Point which they observe, in conrinual Practice, is, the Alfaifinates and Murthers of Kings; thinking it no Sin, but rather a Matter of Salvation, to do all Actions of Paballing and Modification of the Actions of the Action of the Actions of the Actions of the Action of Rebellion and Hoffility against their Natural Sovereign Lord, if he be once curfed, his Subjects dicharged of their Fidelity, and his Kingdom given a Prey, by that Three-Crown'd Monarch, or rather Monster, their Head. And in this Point I have no occasion to speak further here, saving, That I could wish from My Heart it would please God to make Mc one of the Members of such a general Christian Union in Religion, as (laying Wilfulness aside on both hands) we might meet in the midft, which is the Centre, and Per-fection of all Things. For if they would leave, and be assumed of such new and groß Corruptions of theirs, as themselves cannot maintain, nor deny to be worthy of Reforma-' tion, I would for My own part be content to meet them in the Mid-way, fo that all Novelties might be renounced on either fide. For ' as My Faith is the True, Ancient, Catholick and Apostolick Faith, grounded upon the express Word of God; so will I ever yield all Reverence to Antiquity, in the Points of Ecclefiaftical Polity: And by that Means shall I every with God's Grace, keep My Self from either being an Heretick in Faith, or Schifmatick in Matters of Policy

But of one thing would I have the Papifts ' of this Land to be admonished, That they prefume not so much upon My Lenity, (because I would be loth to be thought a Persecutor) " as thereupon to think it lawful for them daily to increase their Number and Strength in this Kingdom; whereby, if not in My Time, at least in the Time of My Posterity, they may be in hope to erect their Religion again. No, let them affure themselves, That as I am a Friend to their Persons, if they be good Subjects; fo I am a vowed Enemy, and do de-nounce Mortal War to their Errors. And as I would be forry to be driven, by their ill Behaviour, from the Protection and Conferva-tion of their Bodies and Lives; fo will I ne-Ever ceafe, as far as I can, to tread down their Errors, and wrong Opinions. For I could not permit the Increale and Growing of their Religion, without betraying My Self, and My My Pofferity, which I should leave again un-der a new Slavery, being left free to Me by My Predecessors. And therefore I would wish all good Subjects that are deceived with this Corruption, if they find any Beginnings in themselves of Knowledge, and Love to the Truth, to foster the same by all lawful Means, and to beware of quenching the Spirit that worketh within them. And if they can find as yet no Motion tending that way, to be fludious to read and confer with Learned Men, and to use all such Means as may further their Refolution; affuring them, That as long as they are disconformable in Religion to us, they cannot be but half My Subjects, be able to do but half Service, and I shall want the best half of them, which is their Souls. And here I have Occasion to speak to you my Lords the Bishops; for as you my Lord of Durham said very Learnedly to Day in your Sermon, Correction without Instruction is but Ty-Tobic Mare ranny : So ought you, and all the Clergy un-them. der you, to be more careful, vigilant and diligent, than you have been, to win Souls to God, as well by your Exemplary Life, as Doctrine. as well by your Exemplary Life, as Doctrine.

And fince you fee how careful they are, fparing neither Labour, Pains, nor extreme Peril of their Perfons, to pervert, (the Devil is fo bufy a Bifnop;) ye fhould be the more careful, and wakeful in your Charges. Follow the Rule preferibed you by St. Paul, Be careful to exbort and infruit, in Scafon, and out of Scafon: And where you have been any way fluggiff. before, now waken your felves up again with a new Diligence, remitting the Success to God, who calling them either at the second, third, tenth or twelfth Hour, as they are alike welcome to Him, fo shall they be to Me his Lieutenant here.

'The third Reason of My Convening you at this time, which containeth fuch Actions of My Thankfulness towards you, as I may either do, or leave undone, yet shall, with God's Grace, ever press to perform all the Days of My Life. It consists in these two Points; in making of Laws at certain Times, which is only at fuch Times as this, in Parliament; or in the careful Execution of the Laws at other Times. As for the Making of them, I will thus far faithfully promife unto you, That I will ever prefer the Weal of the Body above any particular or private Ends of My own, thinking ever the Weal of the Commonwealth to be the greatest Weal, and Worldly Felicity: A Point wherein a lawful King doth directly differ from a Tyrant. But at this time I am only thus far to forewarn you in that Point, That you beware to feek the making of too many Laws, for two especial Reasons: First, because In corruptissima Republica plurima leges: And the Execution of some good Laws is far more profitable in a Commonwealth, than to burthen Men's Memories with making too many of them. And next, because the making of them. And next, becaute the making of too many Laws in one Parliament will bring in Confusion, for want of Leisure wilely to deliberate before you conclude:
For the Bishop faid well to Day, That to Deliberation a large Time would be given; but to Execution a greater Promptness was required. As for the Execution of good Laws, it hath

An. Reg. 1. hath been very wilely and honourably fore-feen, and ordered by My Predeceffors in this Kingdom, in planning fuch a number of 1665; Judges, and all forts of Magiltrates, in con-venient Places, for Execution of the fance. And therefore must I now turn to you that are Judges, and Magistrates under Me, as Mine Eyes and Ears in this Case: I can say no otherwise to you, than as Ezekias the good 'King of Juda faid to their Judges, Remember that the Thrones you sit on are Gods, and neither yours nor mine. And as you must be answerable to Me, so must both you and I be answerable to God, for the due Execution of our Offices. That Place is no Place for you to utter your Affections in; you must not there hate your Free, nor love your Friend; fear the Offending of the greater Party, or pity the Mifery of the Meaner; ye must be Blind, and not fee Diffinctions of Persons; Handless, not to receive Bribes; but keep that 'just Temper and Medium in all your Pro-ceedings, that, like a just Ballance, ye may 'neither Iway to the Right hand, nor to the Left. Three principal Qualities are required in you, Knowledge, Courage, and Sincerity; that you may differn with Knowledge, execute with Courage, and do both in up-right Sincerity. And for My part, I do Vow and Protest here in the Presence of God, and of this honourable Audience, I never shall be weary, nor omit occasion wherein I may shew 'My Carefulness of the Execution of good Laws: And as I wish you that are Judges, not to be weary in your Office, in doing of it; fo 'fhall I never be weary, with God's Grace, to take Account of you, which is properly

6 My Calling. And thus having told you the Three Causes of My Convening of this Parliament, all Three tending only to utter My Thankfulness, but in divers Forms; the first by Word, the other two by Action; I do confess, that when I have done, and performed all that in this Speech I have promifed, Inutilis ferous sum. When I have done all that I can for you, I do no-That dolle at that the thing but that which I am bound to do, and am accountable to God for the contrary. For the Difference betwixt a Rightful King, and an Usurping Tyrant, is this; That the proud and ambitious Tyrant doth think his Kingdom and People are Ordained for fatisfaction of his Defires and unreasonable Appetite; The righteous and just King doth Appetite; The nghteous and just King dorn by the contrary, acknowledge himlelf to be Ordained for procuring the Wealth and Profperity of his People, and that his greatest and principal worldly Felicity must consist in their Profperity: If you be Rich, I cannot be Poor; if you be Happy, I cannot but be Tortunate; and I protest, that your Welfare shall give he My greatest Care and Content. ' shall ever be My greatest Care and Contentment. And that I am a Servant, is most most true; that as I am a Head and Governour of all the People in My Dominions, who are My Natural Vassals and Subjects, considering them in Numbers, and diffinct Ranks: So if we will take the People as one Body and Mass, then as the Head is Ordained ' for the Body, and not the Body for the Head; formula a righteous King know himfelf to be Ordained for his People, and not his People for him: For although a King and his People be Relata, yet can he be no King if he want principal Honour, to be the great Servant of An. Reg. 1. the Commonwealth; and ever think the An. Christian Prosperity thereof to be My greatest Felicity, 1603. as I have already faid.

But as it was the whole Body of this Kingdom (with uniform Affent and Harmony) which did fo far oblige me, so is My Thankwhich the to the whole State. For even as in Matter of Faults, 2mod à multis peccatur, impunè peccatur, even fo in the Matter of virtuous and good Deeds, which are done by the willing Confent and Harmony of the whole Bubble per persistence. whole Body, no particular Person can justly claim Thanks, as proper to him, for the fame: And therefore I must here make a little Apology for My self, in that I could not fatisfie the particular Humours of every Person that looked for fome Advancement or Reward at My Hand, fince My entry into this King-dom. Three Kinds of Things were craved of Me, Advancement to Honour, Preferment to Place of Credit about My Person, and Reward in Matters of Land or Profit. If I had beftow'd Honour upon all, no Man could have been advanced to Honour; for the Degrees of Honour do confift in preferring fome above their Fellows: If every Man had the like Accels to My Person, then no Man could have it: And if I had bestowed Lands and Rewards upon every Man, the Fountain of My Liberality would have been fo Exhausted, as I should want Means to be I iberal to any Man. Yet was I not so sparing, but I may without vaunting affirm, That 'I have enlarged My Favour in all the Three Degrees, towards as many and more than ever King of England did, in so short a space. No, I rather crave your Pardon, that I have been so Bountiful: For, if the Means of the Crown be wafted, whither fhould I have Recourse but to you My Subjects, and be Burthensome to you? Which I should be lothest to do of any King alive. Two special Causes moved Me to be so open-handed, whereof the one was Reasonable and Honourable, but the one was Keatonable and Honourable, but the other (I will not be alhamed to confest unto you) proceeded of My own Infirmity. That which was Just and Honourable was. That being fo far beholden to the Body of the whole State, I thought I could not refuse to let fome fmall Brooks run out of the Fountain of My Thankfulness to the whole, for re-freshing of particular Persons that were Mem-bers of that Multitude. The other which proceeded out of mine own Infirmity was, The Mulritude and Importunity of Suiters. But altho Reason comes by Insusion in a manner, yet Experience groweth with Time and Labour: And therefore do I not doubt, but Experience will reach the particular Subjects of this Kingdom, nor to be fo importune and undifereet in Craving; and Me not to be so easily and lightly moved in Granting that, which may be harmful to My Estate, and consequently

to the whole Kingdom.
And thus at length having declared unto you My Mind, My Conclusion shall only now be, to Excuse My Self, in case you have not found such Eloquence in My Speech, as peradventure you might have look d for at My Hands. I might alledge the great Weight of My Affairs, and My continual Business, and for him: For although a King and his People for Relata, yet can he be no King if he want People and Subjects. But there be many Peofle he world that lack a Head; wherefore I will never be aftanged to coulcy it My might likewife breed fome Impediment: But increase and incompany to the state of this for famous and honourable an Affembly, force I will never be aftanged to coulcy it My Rig. 1. ' leaving these Excuses, I will plainly and free- Power to Dethrone Princes. 'ly, in My manner, tell you the true Cause of An Clrifficit; which is, That it becometh a King, in 'si; which is, That it becometh a King, in My Opinion, to use no other Eloquence than Plainness and Sincerity. By Plainness, I mean, That his Speeches should be so clear, and void of all Ambiguity, that they may not be thrown, nor rent in funder, in contrary Senses, like the old Oracles of the Pagan Gods: And by Sincerity, I understand, That Uprightness and Honesty which ought to be in a kings whole Speeches and Actions; that as far as a King is in Honour erected above as far as a King is in Honour erected above any of his Subjects, fo far should he strive in Sincerity to be above them all, and that his Tongus should be ever the true Messenger of his Heart. And this fort of Eloquence you " may ever affuredly look for at My Hands.

Thus the Beams of Majesty had an Influence upon every Branch and Leaf of the Kingdom, by reflecting upon the Root, their Reprefuna-tive Body; every Particular expecting what Fruit this Sun-fhine would produce; ftriving as much to Infinuate into him, as he did into the general; fo that there was a reciprocal Harmony between the King and the People, because they Courted one another. But when the King's Bounty contracted it felf into private Favourites, (as it did afterwards) beftowing the Affection he promifed the whole People, upon one Man; when the golden Showers they gaped for dropt into some few. Chanels, their Paffions slew higher than their Hopes. The King's Aims were, to Unite the two Kingdoms, so that the one might corrobo rate the other, to make good that part of his Speech (by this intermixtion) wherein he divides England and Scotland into halves: But the English stumbled at that Partition, thinking it an unequal Division, and fearing that the Scots (creeping into English Lordships, and English Ladies Beds, in both which already they began to be active) might quickly make their least Half the predominant Part.

But he was Proclaim'd King of Great Britain: England must be no more a Name; the Scotish Coins are made current; and our Ships must The King have St. George's and St. Andrew's Croffes quarnave St. George's and St. America's Chrise quar-tered together in their Flags; all outward En-figns of Amity. But those English that had suck'd in none of the Sweets of this pleasant Stream of Bounty, repined to see the Scots ad-vanced from Blue Bonnets to costly Beavers, wearing instead of Wadmeal, Velver and Satin, wearing infect of wadiness, verve and sain, as divers Pafquils written in that Age Satyrically taunted at. Which is not fet down here, to vilifie the Scots, (being most of them Gentlemen that had deferved well of their Master) tlemen that had delerved wen or the but to shew, how cross to the publick Appetite but to shew, how cross to the publick Appetite but to sher another Man eats. But the Hony-comb is, that another Man eats. the King (like a wife Pilot) guided the Helm with fo even an hand, that these small Gusts were not felt. It behoved him to play his Master-Prize in the beginning, which he did to the Life; for he had divers Opinions, Humours and Affections to grapple with, as well as Nations, and 'tis a very calm Sea when no Bil-low rifes. The Romanists boggled, that he said in his Speech, They were unfufferable in the Monteagle; Ralph Lord Eure; Edmund Lord Kingdom, as long as they maintain'd the Pope to be their Spiritual Head, and he to have North, Lords of the Higher House of Parliament.

So that every one grounded his Hopes, or his Fears, upon the Shallows of his own Fancy, not knowing yet what courfe the King would Steer. But thele Sores being tenderly dealt, with, did not fuddenly Fester, but were Skinn'd over. The King desirous of the Title, Pacificus, did not only close with his own Subjects, but heal'd up also that old Wound that had bled long in the Sides of England and Spain, both being weary of the Pain, both willing to be Cured. The King of Spain sent the Constable of Cafile with a mighty Train of smooth-handed prie with a mighty Irain of Imooth-handed of Spaniards to close up the Wound on this fide, where (the old Enmity being well mortified) they were received with fingular Refpect and Civiliry. The King of England fent his High-Admiral, the Earl of Nottingham, with as fplendid a Retinue of English, to close it on that: Who being Personages of Quality, accounted with all Ornaments fuitable, were the more admired by the Spaniards for Beauty and Excellency, by how much the † Jesuits had made Impressions in the Vulgar Opinion, That since the English left the Roman Religion, they were transform'd into strange horrid Shapes, with Heads and Tails like Beasts and Monsters. So casie it is for those Juglers, when they have once bound up the Conscience, to tie up the Understanding also.

But the Parliament highly admiring the King's The King Abilities, made a Recognition thereof with and Parlimany Elogies, as the prime Act of their hum-amentin ble Submission to his Government, wherein good acthey yield their most humble Thanks to the cord. Divine Majesty for his Access to the Crown; and they desire from their Hearts, that as a Memorial to all Posterity, (among the Records of the High Court of Parliament for ever to endure) it may be published and declared, that they acknowledge his Right of Succession to the Crown of England, and the Empire thereoblige themselves, their Heirs, and Pofferities for ever, until the last drop of their Bloods be spent. So high mounted was the Affection of the People to the North Agreement of the People to the King! And horsily with the People to the King! And happily might have continued fo, if fome After-Jealoufies had not intervened, that like Clouds hindred the Influence of their more intimate Correspondence.

And to fatisfie the King's Desires about an Commis-Union betwixt England and Scotland, the Par-sioners liament made an Act to Authorize certain for an Union liament made an Act to Authorize certain Commissioners; viz. Thomas Lord Ellesnere, Lord Chancellor of England; Thomas Earl of Dorset, Lord Treasurer of England; Charles Earl of Nottingham, Lord High Admiral of England; Henry Earl of Southampton, William Earl of Pembroke, Henry Earl of Northampton, Richard Bishop of London, Toby Bishop of Dursylms, Anthony Bishop of St. Doesid's; Robert Lord Ceeil, Principal Secretary; Edward Lord Zouch, Lord President of Wales; William Lord Monteaple: Rash Lord Eure: Edward Lord Monteaple.

quenched with the Blood Royal, but the Nobility and Gentry, the Representative Body of the whole Kingdom, united at Wifminster, must be shatter'd in pieces, and disinember'd, by the Blast of Six and Thirty Barrels of Gun-powder, which those dark Contrivers had hid in a Cellar under the Parliament House, being discover'd by a Light from Heaven, and a Letter from one of the Conspirators, when the Fire was already in their Hands, as well as Rage in their Hearts, to put to the Train. The Principal of these Contrivers, was Robert Principal Catesby, a Gentleman of a good plentiful Estate, who first Hatch'd and Brooded the Plot, and

promifed to himfelf the Glory of an Eternal Name by the Propagation of it; making choice of Thomas Percy, Robert Winter, Thomas Wright, Fronts Triflam, Sir Everard Digby, and others, Gentlemen of good Effacts (for the most part) and Spirits as Implacable and Furi-ous as his own; who, like Combustible Matter, took Fire at the first Motion, their Zeal to the Roman Caufe burning within them, which nothing but the Blood of Innocents can quench. The Defign thus fet afoot, they bind themfelves to Secrefy, by those Sacraments which are the greatest Ties upon the Soul; and Saint Garnet the Jesuit was their Confessor. The Foundation being laid, every Man betakes himfelf to his Work, fome to provide Money, fome Ma-Parliament House, ro lay Wood and Coal in for his Winter Provision: Guido Faux, a desperate Ruffian (who was to give fire to the Train) was appointed to be his Man to bring in the Wood and Coal. The Gunpowder provided in Wood and Coal. The Gunpoweer provided in Flander, is brought from Lambeibin the Night, and covertly laid under the Wood. Thus they prepare all things ready for a Burne-Offering againft the Day the Parliament should meet, which was to be upon the Seventh of February. But the King, for fome Reasons of State, (which at that time the Dictates of Providence did much approve of) Proregu'd the Parliament to the Fifth of November following, which featter'd the Contrivers at present, and they were at their Wits end; and fome of them went beyond Seas, because they would not beat too much about the Covert, their Materials being fitted; others that staid here persisted with Patience (made a Vice by them) and met often to confult how they should Manage their great Business, if it took effect. They look'd upon the King and Prince, as already Sacrificed to their Cruelty: And Percy undertook to dispatch the Duke of Turk. But because they must have one of the Blood Royal, that must serve as a Center to adhere to, to keep all from Confusion, they meant to preserve the Lady Elizabeth, and make her Queen, that, under her Minority and though folic of them went to high as to make her Queen, that under her Minority and Counterfieit the King's Privy Seal, and make Addreffes thereby to Forcian Princes, for which one Thomas Dorngha, taken in the Lack, was excluded at Smithfeld. Others were to Infolent, as to quip and jear the English Nobility; and other Missenaours, which caused forces Hunting-match at Dunhauer-Haab in Wanwick-Iscare-burnings and Jealousies berwive the Nathern the Lord Harington's House, where tiens. A Letter on Lord, out of the love I bear to some of your to my Ld. If Friends, I have a cure of your Preferention; however, therefore I would wife you (in you tender your Life) to forbear your Attendance at this Parliament; for God and Mon have concurred to punish the Wickedmist of the Time. And think not slightly of this Advertisement; for though there be no appearance of any site, yet, I say, they shall receive a terrible Blow this Parliament, and yet they shall not see who hart them. This Counsel is not to be contemmed, because it may do you Good, and can do you no Harms; if or the Darial. do you Good, and can do you no Harm: for the Dan-ger is past as soon as you have burnt this Letter. I hope God will give you Grace to make use of it, to whose Holy Protection I commend you. |

> Here is the Protection of the Holy God defir'd, a strange Expression in so unholy an Action, which is like their Zeal that made their Children pass through Fire to Moloch; what horrid Madness kindles such Sacrifices? The Lord Monteagle aftonished at the Letter (though he understood it not) thinking there might be fomething in it of dangerous Concernment, communicated the Contents of it to the Earl of Salubury, and some others of the King's Council. Salubury could not find out the Riddle; he concluded him either a Fool or a Madman that wrote it, by this Expression, The Danger is past as seen as the Letter is burnt: If the Danger be past when the Letter is burnt, what needeth any warning? But he did not reach the Meaning; for the Writer's defire was to have the Letter burned, and then the Dan-ger would be Paft, both to the Writer and Receiver, if he had Grace to make use of the Warning. The King was hunting the Fearful Hare at Royslam, while they laid this Snare for him at Westminster. As soon as he came to White-ball, the Earl of Salisbury being of his intimate ball, the Earl of Salusmy being of his intimate Councils, and Principal Secretary, flow'd him the Letter. The King confidering it Circumfpectly (as Cieero faid of the Sibyls Works, Id majus eff attenti animi quam furentii) faid, This in obladman's Writing. There is a great Blow to be given; they shall not fee it that feel it; which is some secret Mischief. Many times Fear is a Profitable and an Active Servant, if it do not Domineer and grow Mafterly. He

the Earl of Suffolk, Lord Chamberlain to make a ftrict Search about the Parliament House; An. Christi who, accompanied with the Lord Monteagle, who, accompanied with the Lora numerage, entred the Cellar under the Houle, which he found fluffed with Billet, Faggot, and Coal; and asking Whinyard of the Wardrobe (who was Houle-keeper) what Provifions they were? he faid, He had let the Cellar to Mr. The mas Percy, (who was one of the Gentlemen Pensioners to the King) and close by in a corner of the Cellar stood Faux, in a Gastly Condition (being a Raw-bon'd tall Man) who being question'd, said, He was Percy's Servant.

The Lord Chamberlain, that would make no Noise and Bustle at that time, left both the Engine and Engineer as he found them, ta-king no further notice, but apprehended Just Cause to have the Cellars further search'd; the Lord Monteagle affuring himself, it was Percy that writ the Letter to him as foon as he heard him Nam'd, for there were little Intimacies betwixt them. The King with his Council adviling what to do, resolved of a surther Search that Night, committing the Trust to Sir Thomas Record, one of the Gentlemen of his Privy-Chamber, a Man of approvd Fidelity; who, with a Retinue fuitable to fuch an Enterprize, coming to the Cellar about Midnight, he met the watchful Minister of Impiety, Finx, at the Door, on whom he presently seiz'd; and making further Search, pulled out the Core of all that horrid Contrivance. Finx, his Under-ground Works being digged out, and seeing all unkennelds are self-series as the principal of the series o works being digged out, and reeing an annean-nel'd, confest d the Intention, and was only forry it came not to Perfection, faying, God would have concealed it, and the Devil only discover'd it. In his Pockets they found a Watch (which were not common then) and a Tinderbox, the Engines to minute out his Time to ftrike the Stroke; fo punctual was he in his Wicked-ness! This tough Piece, upon Examination by the Lords of the Council, could have little drawn from him, only he faid again, He was fory it was not done. But the Confpirators reveal'd themfelves; for finding, all Difcover'd, they pack to Dunsmore to the Hunting-meeting, breaking open some Stables in London, and taking out divers Horses of Noblemens, that were put into Riders Hands to manage, thinking to make a great Party: But the High Sheriffs of Warwickshire and Worcesfershire hunted these Firebrand Foxes so, that they were forced (most of them) to Earth themselves at Littleton's House at Halbach, and there Percy and Catesby desperately sallying out, were both slain, so were John Wright and Christopher Wright : Thomas Winter, Francis Tresham, and the rest, were taken; Treshim died of the Strangury in the Tower; Thomas Winter, Guido Faux, Robert Keyt, Thomas Traytors Bates, Robert Winter, late of Hoodington in Worcester- excused.

If Who it was that wrote this Letter to the Lord Monteagle was never known, or how it came that King James fulpeched its Meaning to be what is really was, is in a great part a Myflery to this Day. Yet I cannot give my felf leave to doubt, but King James had fome light given him from Humy IV. of the Deligns of the Papill's against him; for in the Duke of Sady's Monney, there is more than once mention made of Some James is defired to take warning from the Face of Hony III. I am the more confirmd in this Opinion, that in the Hampsup pronounced at Rome in praise of Rawill. as the Alfasm of Humy IV. which has since been 16 often quoted by leveral Authors, both Papill and Printslant, as an Argument that the Jelius's approved the Murder: It is there faid, That Henry IV. This prodigious Contrivance did not only flupifie the whole Kingdom with Amazement, but Foreign Princes made their Wonderment alfo. And though, for the Propagation of the Catholick Caufe, they might have Confcience enough to wish it had taken Effect, yet they had Policy enough to Congratulate the Discovery; and fome of them, to take off the Afperity of the Sufpect, fweetned their Expressions with many rich Gifts and Prefents to the King But this bloody Design, found in and Queen. the Hand of the Malefactors, grasping the Mil-chief, and confirm'd by their own Confessions, (being such Spirits as were fit Boutefeus for so desperate an Enterprize) was, notwithstanding, fatherd upon the Puritans (as Nero did the Burning of Rome upon the Christians) by some Impudent and Cunning Jesuits, whose Practice is to deceive, if not quite to clear their Party, yet, by ftirring this muddy Water, to make that which is in it to appear the less Perspicuous; and it is like the reft of their Figments, fit Baits for Ignorance to nibble on: Which some Years after I had Opportunity at Bruges in Flanders to make Weston, an old Jesuit, active in the Powder-plot, ingenuously to confess.

The King was not unmindful of the Lord Monteagle, the First Discoverer of this Treason, for he gave to him and his Heirs for ever, Two hundred Pounds a Year in Fee-farm Rents; and Five hundred Pounds a Year besides, during his Life, as a Reward for this good Service. In the midft of the Parliament's Activity, a Rumour was fpread (by what strange Means unknown) that the King was stabb'd at Okingham (Twenty Miles from London, where he was Hunting) with a Poyfon'd Knife. The Court at Whitehall, the Parliament and City, took the Alarm, mustering up their old Fears, every Man standing at Gaze, as if some new Prodigy had seized them; such a Terror had this late Monstrous intended Mischief imprinted in the Spirits of the People, that they took Fire from every little Train of Rumour, and were ready to grapple with their own Deltruction before it came. In the midft of this Agony, there came Affurance of the King's fafety, which he was enforced to divulge by Proclamation, to re-establish the People. The Spamation, to re-cstablish the People. nish Ambassador gave Sir Lewis Lewknor, Master of the Ceremonies, a Chain of Gold of good Value, for bringing him the News of the King's Safety, which prefently refounded in the Court; and it was thought, he was fo Bountiful, either out of Terror, being afraid of the People in this Confusion, because it was Rumour'd, that the King of Spain was a Fomenter of the Plot; or out of a Defire to Vindicate his Master's Hoor out of a Defire to Vindicate his Mafter's Ho-mour, and take the Odium from him; for he had been follicited by divers Jefuits, together with these Conspirators, to invade England. The Principal of which Jesuits, call'd Henry Garnet (Provincial of the Order in England) was Atraign'd at Guildhall the Twentieth of Mirch 1605, and Executed at the West-end of St. P. M. Stonasher.

The two Barons (after some Imprisonment) were redeem'd by Fine in the Star-Chamber, but the Earl continued a Prisoner there for many Years after.

In July this Year, the King of Denmark (Bro- The King of Denmark) the rothe Queen) came in Person as a Visitor, of Deswhere he found their Shakings somewhat set-first co-tled, their Terrors abated, and met with not only ming. all those Varieties, that Riches, Power and Plenty are capable to produce for Satisfaction, where Will and Affection are the Dispensers; but he beheld with Admiration the Stately Theatre, whereon the Danes for many Hundred of Years had acted their Bloody Parts: But how he refented their Exit, or the last Act of that black Tragedy, wherein his Country lost their Intereft, some Divine Power, that searches the Capacious Hearts of Princes can only discover. This short Month of his stay, carried with it as pleafing a Countenance on every fide, and of their Recreations and Pastimes, slew as high a Flight, as Love mounted upon the Wings of ATT and Fancy, the fuitable Nature of the Sea-fon, or Time's fwift Foot could poffibly arrive at. The Court, City, and fome Parts of the Country, with Banquetings, Masks, Dancings, Tiking, Barriers, and other Gallantry (befides the Manly Sports of Wreftling, and the Brutish Sports of baiting wild Beafts) swelled to such a Greatness, as if there were an Intention in every particular Man, this Way to have blown up himself.

The Seven and twentieth of May last, the The Fifth Parliament was Prorogu'd to the Eighteenth of of Novem-November following; but before they parted ber made (having Hearts full of Affection for God's Holy day.

great Deliverance of the whole Kingdom from Ruine and Destruction) they made an Act to have the Fifth of November for ever Solemnized with publick Thankfgiving: Imputing the Dif-covery of the Treason to God, inspiring the King with a Divine Spirit to Interpret some dark Phrases of the Letter, above and beyond all ordinary Construction. They attainted the Blood of those Traytors that were Executed; Blood of those Traytors that were Executed; as allo, those that were flain in the Field, or died in the Prifon. They made many good Laws for the Discovering and Suppressing of Popish Reculants: And gave the King Three entire Subsidies, and Six Fitteens. Besides, Four Subsidies of Even Schilder in the David and Super Schilder in the David and Six Fitteens. Subfides of Four Shillings in the Pound granted by the Clergy. But they put off the Treatty of Union, by an Act that referred it to done as well any other Sefficiant of Parliament. fo willing they were to keep close to the King's Affections, and not to flart from him. But the next Seffion (the King being loth to be longer delay'd) the Bufiness of the Union was much pressed again, by some that knew the King's Mind; among whom, Sir Francis Bacon (now the King's Sollicitor) was a principal Infrument, who came prepar'd for it, and fifth mov'd the House of Commons, that the Seast might be Naturalized by Act of Parliament; which was opposed by divers strong and modeft Arguments. Among which, they brought ments as in the Comparison of Abraham and Lot, whose bout a Families joining, they grew to Difference, and Union to those Words, Vade to ad destram, & ego ad

Rumours of the King's Death.

The Parliament meet the oth of

A1. Reg. 4. An. Christi 1606

It was answer'd, That Speech brought the Captivity of the One, they having disjoind the their Strength. The Party oppoing faid, If we admit them into our Liberries, we shall be over-run with them, as Cattle (naturally) pent up by a flight Hedge, will over it into a bet-ter Soil; and a Tree taken from a barren Place, will thrive to excessive and exuberant Branches in a Better; witness the Multiplicity of the Scots in Polonia.

To which it was answer'd, That if they had not Means, Place, Custom and Employment, (not like Beasts but Men) they would starve in a plentiful Soil, though they came into it; and what Spring-tide and Confluence of that Nation have Housed and Familied themselves among us these Four Years of the King's Reign? And they will never live fo meanly here as they do in Polonia; for they had rather discover their Poverty Abroad than at Home. Befides, there is a Question, whether England be fully Peopled? Winnis the Drown'd Grounds and Common Wasts; the Ruines and Decays of ancient Towns in this Realm; Witness how many serve in the Parliament for defolate Boroughs; Witness our Wasts by Sea, as well as by Land; sufthe Sinews of our Industry being slackned, we want active Spirits to Corroborate them by their Example: Besides the Planting Beland, fully abounding with Rivers, Havens, Woods, Quarries, Good Soil, and Temperate Climate. No surcharge of People have been prejudicial to Countries; the worst will be an Honourable War, to Recover our ancient Rights, or Revenge our Injuries, or to attain to the Honour of our Ancestors. We should not forget the Consideration of Amplitude and Greatness, and fall at variance about Profit and Reckonings, fitter for private Perfons than Kingdoms.

The other fide objected, That the Fundamental Laws of both Kingdoms are divers; and it is declar'd, they fhall so continue; and there-fore it would not be reasonable to proceed to this Naturalization, whereby to endow them with our Rights, except they should receive and submit to our Laws.

It was answered, That in the Administration of the World under God, the great Monarch, his Laws are divers; one Law in Spirits, ano-ther in Bodies; one Law in Regions Celeftial, another in Elementary; and yet the Creatures are all one Mass or Lump. That in the State of the Church, among People of feveral Languages and Lineages, there is a Communion of Saints, and we are all Fellow-Citizens, and Naturalizants of the Heavenly Jerusalem, and yet divers Ecclesiastical Laws, Policies, and Hierarchies; for the Laws are rather Figura Reipublice, than Forma; rather Bonds of Perfection, than Entireness. That in Ireland, Fersey, Guernfey and the Isle of Man, our Common Laws are not in force, and yet they have the Benefit of Naturalization.

To which it was reply'd, That these are only Flourishes of Rhetorick; for God (who is the only Disposer of all his Creatures) keeps them in Order and Obedience to Him, by a Law which they cannot deviate from, unless he withdraws his preferving Hand from them: But betwixt Man and Man, or Realm and Realm, there can be no fuch Tie or Obligation to hold an Unity, where they have various Laws and various Privileges. And for the Immunities gi-

Blood and Stock, with whom we are ingrafted An Reg 4 by Time, and made (as it were) one Body, the better to fecure their Obedience, and hinder any League or Amity with a Foreign Nation. But Scotland hath an entire Union with the French, continu'd for some Hundreds of Years, that is indissolvable, and therefore incompetent yet to the Freedoms of England. When we have had as much Experience of the Friendship of Scotland, as of them, we shall incline to a more intimate Union. Besides, there is an Inequality in the Fortunes of the Two Nations; and by this Commixture, there may enfue Advantage to them, and Loss to us.

To the latter part was answer'd, Beatins est dare quam accipere : And Edward the First, among other Commendations of War and Policy, none was more celebrated than his Purpose and Enterprize for the Conquest of Scotland; as not bending his Defigns to glorious Acquests Abroad, but solid Strength at Home; which, if it had succeeded, could not but have brought in those Inconveniencies of the Commixture of a more opulent Kingdom with a less; for it is not the Yoke, either of Laws or Arms, that can alter the Nature of the Climate, or the Nature of the Soil; neither is it the Manner of the Commixture, that can alter the Nature of the Commixture; and therefore if it were good for us then, it is good for us now; and not to be priz'd the lefs, because we paid not so dear

They strive further to prove, That the Benefit of Naturalization is, by Law, to as many as have been, or shall be born, fince the King's coming to the Crown; for there is no more than to bring the Ante-Nati unto the Degree of Poff-Nati, that Men grown may be in no work Cafe than Children, and Elder Brothers in no worfe Condition than Younger Brothers. That if any object the Law is not fo, but that the Poft-Nati are Aliens as the reft, it is contrary to the Reason of Law. The Wisdom of the Common Laws of England is admirable, in distribution of the Benefit and Protection of the Law, according to the feveral Conditions of Perfons. The Degrees are Four, Two of Ali-ens, and Two of Subjects: The First Degree is an Alien born under a King or State that is an Enemy; if fuch an one come into the Kingdom without safe Conduct, it is at his Peril; the Law giveth him no Protection, neither of Body, Lands, nor Goods; so as if he be flain, there is no remedy by any Appeal at the Parthere is no remedy by any Appeal at the Party's Suit, though the were an Englift Woman; though at the King's Suit the Cafe may be otherwife, in regard of the Offence to the Peace and Crown. The Second Degree is of an Allien that is born under Faith and Allegiance of a King or State that is a Friend; unto fuch a Person the Law doth impart a greater Benefit and Protection concerning things Perfonal, Transitory and Moveable, as Goods and Chattels, Contracts, and the like, but not concerning Free-hold, and Inheritance; and the Reafon is, because he may be an Enemy, though he be not; for the State where he was born, may enter into Hostility; and therefore as the Law hath but a Transitory Assurance of hing fo it Rewards him with Transitory Benefits The Third Degree is of a Subject, who having been an Alien, is made Free by Charter and Denization. To fuch a one the Law doth impart yet a more ample Benefit; for it gives him a Power to purchase Freehold and Inheritance ven to the hish (for some Ages past) they were a Power to purchase Freehold and Inheritance English Colonies sent there to Plant, being a to his own Use, and likewise enables his Chilgreat Part of them Natives with us, of the same dren (born after his Denization) to Inherit :

on chrift the Law thinks not good to make him in the 1666. fame Degree with a Subject born, because he was once an Alien, and fo might have been an Enemy; and Affections cannot be fo fettled by any Benefit, as when from their Nativity they are inbred, and inherent. The Fourth Degree, and the perfect Degree, is of fuch a Perfon, as neither is Enemy, nor can be Enemy in time to come, nor would have been Enemy at any time past; and therefore the Law gives unto him the full Benefit of Naturalization. Now if these be the true Steps and Paces of the Law, no Man can deny, but whofoever is born under the King's Obedience, never could, in aliquo puncto temporis, be an Enemy; and therefore in Reason of Law is Naturalized. So tho' the Scots feem to be in Reason Naturales ipso jure, yet it is not superfluous to have it done by Parliament; for it will shew the World our Love to them, and good Agreement with them.

Then they shewed by Authority of History and Experience, the Inconveniencies that may grow, if this Union of Naturalization doth not close, and bind up the Veins, so as to make it one perfect Body; for elfe it may be apt to open, and break out again upon all Occasions, and relapfe to the Detriment of both; ripping up ancient Stories of the Romans and Latins, and the Wars they had, meerly for want of this Union, and never were at Quiet till they enjoy'd it. Then between the Peloponnesians and the Spartans the like. And from ancient Stories to the Kingdom of Arragon and Caffile, united in the Persons of Ferdinando and Isabella, severed and divided from the rest of Spain in Privileges, and directly in this Point of Naturalization, or Capacity of Inheritance. But what came of this? A Rebellion grew among them, which a Royal Army with Difficulty suppressed, and (they being made one incorporated Body with the rest of Spain) perpetuated Peace to Posterity.
The like Example was betwixt Florence and Pi-

And whatfoever Kingdoms and States have been United, and that Union corroborated by the Bonds of Naturalization, you shall never observe them afterward, upon any Occasion, to break or fever again: Whereof divers Provinces in France, by time annex'd to that Crown, are further Witnesses. So that except they proceed to this Naturalization, these Realms will be in continual Danger to divide and break

Next, they shew the Benefits to be Security and Greatness. Surery, by stopping up the Postern-Gates of our Enemies; to that we shall not be so much a Temptation to the Ambition of Foreigners, when their Approaches and Avenucs are taken away: For having fo little Succels when they had thele Advantages, they will have lef- Comfort when they want them. And Greatness by this Union must needs follow: for having fo many Iron-handed Men in thefe Three Kingdoms, we shall not only pluck Gold from the (once poor) Spaniards Indian Mines, but by our Arms keep in Awe the whole Chriftian World.

These Arguments, press d with gilded Oratory by the Solicitor and his Partakers, could not prevail, tho' urged with all the Power Wit could invent, or Hope aim at: For being new budded in Court, he was one of those that imooth'd his way to a full Ripeners, by liquo-rish and pleasing Passages, which he at last at-tain'd to, being made Lord Chancellor of England. But fuch Sweets, tho' delightful at prefhall be express'd.

But the King (like a great Sea) being trou-bled when such cross Winds are boisterous, sent for both Houses of Parliament to Whitehall the last of March, 1607. to calm them; where, betwixt a Sun-fhine of fair Words, and a Cloud of Anger, he colours over fome of the Argu-ments that had been used, and urges others for his best Advantage, with a plain natural Blunt-ness fit for Kings. He tells them, the Union he The defires, is of Laws and Perfons, fuch a Natura-King's lizing as may make one Body of both King doms; that as there is but Unus Rex, to there may be but Unus Grex, & Una Lex. His Intention is not, as fome idly alledge, to give Eng-Union. land the Labour and Sweat, and Scotland the Fruit and Sweet, vainly talking of transplanting Trees out of barren Ground into better, and lean Cattle out of a bad Pasture into more fertile Soil. Can any Man displant them unless they will? Or is Scotland fo strong, to pull them out of their Houses? Whereas the waste Grounds in Scotland would rather be planted by Swarms of People that cumber the Streets here.

First, He desires that all Hostile Laws should cease, being the King of England cannot make War with the King of Scotland.

Secondly, That there should be Community of Commerce, he being no Stranger, but defeended of their ancient Kings: And how can he be Natural Liege Lord to both, and they Strangers to one another? And shall they that be under the same Allegiance be no freer, nor have no better Respect, than Frenchmen and Spaniards?

Thirdly, They all agree they are no Aliens, and yet will not allow them to be Natural That he was informed by their own Judges and Lawyers, at his first Access to the Crown, that there was a difference between the Aute and Post-nati of each Kingdom; which caused him to publish a Proclamation, That the Post-nati were Naturaliz'd by his Accession; but he confesses, Judges may err; so may the Lawyers on their side: Therefore he admonishes them to beware to Difgrace either his Proclamations or the Judges, for fo they may difgrace both their King and Laws; who have Power, when the Parliament is ended, to try them both for Lands and Lives.

And for fome of them, who with their flattering Speeches would have the Ante-nati preferr'd, alledging their Merits in My Service, such Discouries have mel in ore, & fel in corde; carrying an outward Appearance of Love to the Union, but a contrary Resolution in their Hearts. For the King would have them know, it lies within the Compass of his Prerogative to prefer whom he pleases to any Dignity, Civil or Ecclesiastical. But he is fo far from prejudicing the English, that he is willing to bind himself to reasonable Reftrictions. Befides, it is a special Point of the King's Prerogative, to make Aliens, Ci-tizens; and in any Cafe wherein the Law is thought not to be clear, Res eff Judes; for he is Lex loquens, supplying the Law where it wants. But this he speaks, as knowing what belongs to a King, not intending to press it further than may agree with their Loves, and stand with the Conveniency of both Nations.

The Inconveniencies supposed to arise from Scotland, are pretended to be,

1. An evil Affection in the Scots to the Union.
2. That the Union is incompatible.

That the Union is incompatible.
 That the Gain is finall, or none.

An Rog. 5. If this be fo, why is there Talk of an Union? tween the Kings, not the People: For Scalland of Rog. 5, for the First, they alledge the Averseness of being follicited by England and Force at one time, for a League Offenive and Defenive, and Defenive, and Act; where they declare, they will remain an abiculture and free Monarchy, and not alter the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom. And yet that they being our N. ighbours, joyned in one in the beginning of this Session of Parliament. the Opinion was current, that Scotland was greedy of this Union, and purfu'd it with so much Violence that they can'd not for the Strictnels of the Conditions, so they might attain the Substance, and End. And yet they now say, they are backwards, which is a Contradiction; for how can they both beg and deny the fame thing at one and the fame time? And by preferving their Fundamental Laws, they mean, those Laws by which Confusion is avoided, and their King's Succession and Monarchy maintain'd. To which he declares, That he is in Descent Three hundred Years before Christ, not meaning (as they do) their Common Law for the Scots have no Law but that which is Fus Regis. And for their Defire of continuing a free Monarchy, he hopes they mean not he should fet Garifons over them, as the Spaniards do over Sicily and Naples.

And then he tells them, That he governs Seetland with his Pen: He writes, and doth more by a Clerk of the Council, than others could do by the Sword. And tho' he knows there are many Seditious Persons in that Kingdom, that may talk lewdly enough, yet none of them ever fpake difinonourably of England, as they have done of Sectland: For if any Man fpeaks any thing uncomely there, the Chancellor by his Authority interrupts him; but here they have Freedom to speak what they list, and, as long as they list, without Contradiction. Then the King shews what the Laws of Scotland are. First, Those which concern Tenures, Wards, Liveries, Signiories, and Lands, are drawn our of the Chancery of England, brought by James the First, (who was bred up here) and differ only in Terms.

The Second are Statute Laws, to which he hopes they will be no Strangers.

The Third is the Civil Law, brought out of France by James the Fifth, and ferve only to fupply in fuch Cases where the Municipal Laws are defective: So that he hopes it is no hard Matter to unite the People together, who are in effect already subject to the same Law. And whereas it is objected, That the King of Scotland hath not a Negative Voice in Parliament, but must pass the Laws agreed on by the Lords and Commons; he affures them, That the Form of Parliament there is nothing enclin'd to Popularity: For about Twenty Days before the Parliament begins, Proclamation is made throughout the Kingdom, That all Bills to be exhibited that Seffion, be delivered to the Mafter of the Rolls by a certain Day: Then they are brought to the King, peruled and confider d by him; and only fuch as he allows are put into the Chancellor's Hand to be propounded that Parliament, and no other. if any Man speak of any other Matter than is in this Form first allowed by him, the Chancellor tells him, That there is no fuch Bill allowed And when they are pass'd for by the King: by the Ring. The wind they are pend to be Laws, he ratifies and confirms them, first racing out what he doth not approve of. And if this be to be call'd a Negative Voice in Parliament, then he hath one.

that they being our Naighbours, joyned in one Continent a strong and powerful Nation, it would be more security to the State of Sectland to joyn in Amity with England, than with France divided by the Sea, where they must abide the hazard of Wind and Weather, and other Accidents that might hinder Relief.

But on the contrary, it was alledged in the Favour of France, That England ever fought to Conquer Scotland, and therefore there would never be kept any found Amity: Whereas France, lying more remote, claim'd no Interest, and therefore would be found a more constant and faithful Friend; fo it was concluded on their Part. But by the Tenour it was order'd to be renew'd, and confirm'd from Hing to King fucceffively, by the Mediation of their Ambaffadors, and therefore metrly Perfonal. And fo it was renew'd in the Queen his Mother's time. but not by Affent in Parliament; which it could not have wanted, if it had been a League of the People: And in the King's time, when it came to be ratified, because it appear'd to be in Odium Tortii, it was by him left unrenew'd, in Consideration of his Title to the Crown.

For the Profit and Commodity that shall arise to England by this Union; who is so ignorant that doth not know the Gain will be great? Do they not gain by the Union of Wales? And is not Scotland greater than Wales? Shall not Lands, Seas, and Person, be added to their Greatness? Two Snow-balls put together grow greater; two Houses join'd make one the larger; and two Castle-Walls made into one, makes one as thick and strong as both. And he professes, he seeks this Union only to advance the Greatness of their Empire here in England; yet with fuch Caution, as may ftand with the Weal of both States. What is now defir'd, hath oft been fought, and not obtain'd : to refuse it then now, were double Iniquity: And for their Security in such reasonable Points of Restriction which he shall agree to, they need not doubt his Inclination: For he will never fay any thing he will not promife, nor pro-mife any thing which he will not fwear, nor fwear any thing which he will not perform. This urg'd with Affeveration, might have wrought much with the Parliament; but that they apprehended a great Inconvenience in fuch an Union, where the Laws and Government are of different Natures. All were not Romans that were born Subjects to the Roman Empire; tho' St. Paul was born one, the Centurion was a Purchaser. For notwithstanding all The Parthe former Arguments by the King, and his liament Ministers, the Parliament knew that it is true, declined That if Scotland had been Conquer'd, the only the U way to tie them to Obedience, were to let them nion tast the Sweets of English Liberties. But to let And them fit Triumphing upon their own Privileges, and roam about among the English Freedoms, were to make them straggle too much. The Scots would not lessen, nor in the least derogate from the Dignity of their long continued Monarchy; and the English thought they had no Reason to come to them to derogate from them-selves. The Parliament only sear'd, the King's Power would have such an Instuence upon the For the Union betwixt the French and the Judges of the Kingdom, that the Sens would Sens, which makes this Union to incompatible, be Naturalized too foon, they were refolved not have filtered they be the August and the Sens that the Sens th he affures them, it was a League only made be- to be accessary to it; which indeed some two

An. Reg. 6. Years after was confirmed in Calvin's Case of Post-nati, reported by the Lord Chief Justice 16-8, who was fit Metal for any Stamp Royal, and adjudged by him, the Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, and most of the Judges of the King-

Euginere, and most of the Judges of the Amg-dom, in the Exchequer Chamber, though many strong and valid Arguments were brought against it; such Power is in the Breath of Kings, and such fost Stuff are Judges made of, that they can vary their Precedents, and model them into as many Shapes as they please. And thus this Case stood like a Statue cloath'd by the Lord chief Inflice, in the vulgar I anguage the Lord chief Juftice, in the vulgar Language, (when the reit of his Reports fpoke an unknown Tongue,) that the Kingdom might take more particular Notice, that the Scots were as free in England as themselves; yet it fell not out to their Wishes. But all that could be gotten from the Parliament, was, That the Laws of Hostility that were anciently made betwixt England and Scotland were repeal'd, that the old Grudges which caused the Dif-union (the War in the Members) might be taken away. And in the faid Act they provided, That if a natural born Subject of England did com-That if a natural bern Subject of England and eigenition and Middemensors in Scotland, and file into England, he should be tried where he was taken, and not carried into Scotland to receive his Judgment there; till such Time (which are the very Words of the Act) as both Kingdoms shall be made one in Laws and Government, which is the Thing so much defired, as that wherein the full Perfection of the bleffed Union (already begun in the King's Royal Person) consistest. And further they went not: For they found and fear'd the old Enmity would yet a while continue; for fince the King's coming into England, the loofe and uncomposed Borderers, that liv'd upon Rapine and Spoil, (feeking new Benefits from new Changes) had broke out and committed many Infolencies; who, though they were suppressed by the Forces of Berwick and Carlifle, and many of them fuffer'd in it, yet Custom and Habit had bred in them a Natural Ferity; which could only be restrain'd by giving Freedom to the Laws, that within a short time gave bound to that barbarous Animofity. The Laws made in Scotland to the Prejudice of the English, were likewife repealed there; so that all Passages were made fmooth on both fides. This Seffion also produc'd divers good Laws for the Benefit of the Common-wealth.

But this Seffion brought in no Money, that is as the Blood of the Subject, which he (as a wife Physician) would not strain from them the ordinary way, left the Sense of it should bring the more Fears and Faintings with it; but by laying on little Burthens at first, he not only inured them to bear greater, but made them fweat out fome of that Humour infenfibly, though they felt it afterward, when they found the Weight laid upon their Shoulders, only (as they conceived) to daub other Mens with Bravery. For the King's Bounty was feen by the vulgar Eye to overflow in many little Rivulets, who knew the golden Streams that out-faced the Sun, came not from the North's cold Climate, but were drain'd out of the Fountains of their Labour. They could not endure to fee their Fellow Subjects grow by what should be their Nourishment. Collecting that the King had receiv'd Three hundred and fifteen thouland Pounds Subfidies due to the late Queen, befides what the Par-liament had given him. Not long after this, the Earl of Dorfet, Lord The High Treafurer, died fuddenly, as he fare at Doath of the Council Table; which gave Occasion to the Earl fome Persons disaffected to him, (as what emi-of Dorfe nent Officer that hath the Management of fuddenly. But they confidered not, that, befides the black Worm and the white, (Day and Night, as the Riddle is) that are gnawing conftantly at the Root of this Tree of Life, there are many infenfible Difeafes, as Apoplexies, whose Vapours suddenly extinction and Adams and State an guish the Animal Spirits; and Apostems, both in the upper and middle Region of Man, that often drown and fuffocate both Animal and Vital; who are like imbodied Twins, the one cannot live without the other: If the Animal Spirits fail, the Vital cannot fubfift; if the Vitals perifh, the Animal give over their Operations. And he that judges ill of fuch an Act of Providence, may have the fame Hand, at the fame time, writing within the Palace Walls of his own Body, the fame Period to his Life's

This Man the King found Secretary, and Mafter of the Wards; and to these he added the Treasu-rer's Staff, knowing him to be the Staff of his Treasury: For he had Knowledge enough to pry into other Mens Offices as well as his own, and knew the Ways of disburging the King's Moneys. The Earl of Northampton he made Lord Privy Seal; and thefe were the two prime Wheels of his Triumphant Chariot. The Earl of Suffolk was made Lord Chamberlain before; but he came far behind in the Management of the King's Affairs, being a Spirit of a more groffer Temper, fitter to part a Fray, and com-pose the Differences of a disordered Court, than a Kingdom. Upon the Shoulders of the two first, the King laid the Burthen of his Business: For though he had many Lords his Creatures, fome by Creation, and fome by In-finuation, (for Kings will never want supplehand Courtiers) and the Bishops, being his Dependents, the most of them tending by direct Lines towards him, as the Center of their Advancement; fo that he (like the Supreme Power) mov'd this upper Region, for the most part, and that had an Influence upon the lower, the inferiour Orbs: Yet these two Noblemen the incroal of the two great Lights that were to difcover the King's Mind to the Parliament, and by whole Heat and Vigour the blefted Fruits of Peace and Plenty flouid be produc'd.

Wants, and the King's Wants are the Peoples Grisvances; How can they be separated? If the King will always want, the People will always suffer: For Kings, when they do want, lay commonly lawless Impositions on the People, which they must take off again with a Sum of Money, and then they want again to a conti-nued Vicifitude.

These two Propositions are fweeten'd by him with a third; which is, to make the Parliament Witnesses of those great Favours and Honours that his Majesty intended his Royal Son, Prince Henry, in creating him Prince of Wales: Which Harry, in creating nim Prince or wrate: winten though the King might do without a Parliament, and that divers Kings his Predeceffors had done fo, (as by many Precedents was manifefted) yet being defirous to have a happy Union betwirt him and his People, he would have nothing refound ill in their Ears from fo eminent an Instrument to the Kingdom's Good as his Son. Then they excuse the King's Necefficies, proceeding from his great Disburfe-ments: For the Three hundred and fifty thoufand Pounds Subfidies, due in the late Queen's time, he receiv'd with one Hand, and paid her Debts with another, redeeming the Crown Lands which she had mortgag'd to the City. He kept an Army of Nineteen thousand Men in heland for some time afoot; wherein a great many of the Nobility were Commanders, and other deserving Soldiers that would have been exposed to Want and Penury, if not supplied: And it was not fafe for the King to trust the inveterate Malice of a new reconciled Enemy, without the Sword in his Hand. || The late Queen's Funeral Charges were reckon'd up, which they hoped the Parliament would not repine at: Nor was it fit the King should come in as a private Person, bringing in one Crown on his Head, and finding another here; or his Royal Confort, with our future Hopes (like fo many precious jewels) exposed to Robbers, with-out a Guard and Retinue? How fit was the Mag-nificence at the King of Denmark's being here? And how just that Ambassadors from Foreign Princes (more than ever this Crown received) should find those Entertainments and Gratuities, the want whereof would put a dim Lustre abroad on the most sparkling Jewels of the Crown; Besides, the necessary Charge of sending Ambassadors to others, being concurrent and mutual Civilities among Princes

That these are the Causes of the King's Wants, and not his irregular Bounty, though a Magnificent Mind is infeparable from the Majeffy of a King. If he did not give, his Subjects and Servants would live in a Milerable Climate; and for his Bounty to those that were not born among us, it must be remember'd he was born among them; and not to have them tafte of the among them; and not to have them tatte of the Bleffing he hath attain'd, were to have him change his Virtue with his Fortune. Therefore they defire the King's Wants may be fupplied; a Thing casie to be granted, and not to be valued by Wise Men, nor spoken of without Contempt. Philosophy saith, that all Riches are but Food and Raiment, the rest is Nugato-lold in Opinion or Safety. That Court was rium quiddam: And that it is but Purior pars terræ, An-Reg.7. and rherefore but Crassier pars aguæ, a thing unworthy the Denial to such a King who is not 1609. only the Wifeft of Kings, but the very Image of an Angel, that hath brought good Tidings, and fertled us in the Fruition of all good Things. He whose depth of Knowledge, as well as Con-science, deserves the Title of Fidei Descript, whose Numerous Issue makes Foreign Princes fludy to keep their own, not look abroad. He that hath flut the Back-door of the Kingdom, and placed Two Lions, a Red and a Yellow to fecure it; who would have us live under our own Olive, that we may Lætari & benefacere. That none will wonder at the Want, or startle at the Supply, but fuch as fludy to ferve their own Turns, and believe nothing but what they find written in the Stories of their own Ignorance. Among which those are to be reckon'd, who (hearing of an Order to bind up the Printed Proclamations in a Book, that the better Notice may be taken of the things contain'd in them) have raised a Bruit, that it was intended this Parliament to make Proclamations equal to the Laws, which never entred into the King's Heart; who is fo far from governing by Will and Power, that he will yield to any Mo-tion from them, wherein they shall hold a juft Diameter and Proportion among themselves, and observe those Duties due to a Great and Gracious King.

Thus these Lords did please themselves and the King, by firriving to keep the People in the milky way of Obedience, which they had long fuck'd in, and found the Sweet of it tending to Nourifhment, not yet meeting any Callous or Brawny Conflictution, (which multiharden them by Degrees) nor yet finding their own Tempers grown Robust enough, by so harsh a Diet as afterwards they met with. They therefore are willing to go on in the Way pointed out to them, as Pupils follow their Mafters, minding rather the Smoothness of the Tract they saw, than the Roughness of the End. Yet some of them, whose Hopes were not so high Mounted, and their Spirits more floke plainly, That the whole Wealth of England would not ferve the King's vaft Bounty; therefore it was a vain thing to give him that would give it away again: That Gold and Silver in Edinburgh now in our Solomon's time are like the Stones in the Streets, never so much glittering there, like a perpetual Spring-time. Befides they look upon the King's Encroachments upon the Publick Liberty, by undermining the Laws, taking notice of fome Expreffions that fell from him publickly at his Dinner, in derogation of the Common-Law, excolling highly the Civil Law before it; and approving a Book lately written by Dr. Cowell, a Civilian, against it: Which nettled our great fed fo high, that they could not with that Court gag look downwards, it had bred a Contell.

^{||} Queen Elizabeth's Funeral was nothing extraordinary, and could hardly fwell up any great Article of his Debts.

King James was so very glad to have it over, that as he went not into Close Mourning before her Interrment, so he gave positive Orders the Saure-Mourning should be lest off in less than Two Months after it.

To take such Impressions as were 1699. put upon them, they were made Malleable there, or elfe they could not pass current. This was the beginning of that Mischief, which, when it came to a full Ripeness, made fuch a little of the country of the coun bloody Tincture in both Kingdoms, as never will be got out of the Bishops Lawn-sleeves. And though these Apples of strife thrown in the Way did a little retard the Course in Hand, yet they carried not the Prize : For the King, according to his old wont, (like a cunning Hunter) when they began to run counter, call'd them off, and at Whitehall by one of ter, call d them off, and at woiteful by one of his Lectures he fittives to bring them into the Way again; by laying himself open as in a Glass, wherein, if they could not See his Heart, they might Scent out his Meaning, and so fol-low the Chace which was to be pursued.

The K's Speech to both Houses,

He tells them, Though the King's Heart be in the Hands of the Lord, yet he will fet it before the Eyes of the People; affuring them, That he never meant to govern by any Law, That he never meant to govern by any Law, but the Law of the Land; though it be difputed among them, as if he had an Intention to alter the Law, and govern by the abfolute Power of a King. He knew, he faid, the Power of Kings, refembling it to the Power Divine: For as God can create and deftroy, make and unmake at his Pleafure, fo Kings can circuit if and Doreh index all and be indeed of give Life and Death, judge All, and be judged of None. They can exalt low Things, and abase None. They can exalt low Things, and abase high Things, making the Subjects like Men at Chess, a Pawn to take a Bishop or a Knight. (But he left out the Power of a Pawn to take a Queen, or check a King.) And when he had raifed the King's Power to the Height, with Vos dii eftis, he brings them down again, with, They shall die like Men: And that all Kings, who are not Tyrants or Perjur'd, will bound themselves within the Limits of their Laws, and they that perfwade them the contrary, are Vipers and Pests both against them and the Commonwealth. Yet as it is Blasphemy ro dispute what God may do, so it is Sedition in Subjects to dispute what a King may do in the height of his Power. And as he will not have his Subjects difcourfe of what he may, so he will do nothing but what shall be consonant to Law and Reason. Then he strives to mitigate the Sharpness of the Words drop'd from him at his Table to the Disparagement of the Common Law; and affures them, Though he likes the Civil Law very well, as being Lex Gentium, which maintains intercourse with Foreign Nations, and is fitted to the Ecclesiastical Courts, Court of Admiralty, and Courts of Request; yet he is so far from disavowing the Common Law, that he protests, If he were to chife a new Law for this Kingdom, he would prefer it before any other National Law, yea, the Law of Moles, nay, without Blafphemy, the very Law of God. Then he recalls himself, and tells them, That though for this Nation he had preferr'd the Common Law to the Law of God, yet it is Inferiour to the Judicial Law: For no Book or Law is free from Corruption, but the Book and Law of God.

And therefore he could wish that Three things specially were purged out of the Common Law.

First, That it were written in the Vulgar Tongue, and made plain to the Peoples Underple in Ignorance.

Secondly, That the Common Law might Ax. Reg. 7. have a fettled Text in all Cafes, for being grounded upon old Customs, Reports, and Cases of former Judges, called Responsa prudentum, which are not binding (for divers times below the state of the st Judges disclaim them, and recede from the Judgment of their Predeceffors) it were good upon mature deliberation, that the Exposition of the Law were set down by Act of Parliament. that the People might know what to depend Thirdly, There is in the Common Laws divers contrary Reports and Precedents, and divers Statutes and Acts of Parliament, that do erofs one another, being fo pen'd, that they may be taken in divers Senses; therefore he could wish, they might be review'd, and reconcil'd. And whereas he is thought an Enemy to Prohibitions, he faith, He is not ignorant of the Necessity of them, if every Stream might run in its own Chanel; but the Overslowing and Super-abundance of them in every Court, firving to bring more grift to their Mill, was a Diftemper fit to be Cured; therefore he did not difallow the Ufe, but the Abuse.

Then he closes with the House of Commons, and not only thanks them for the Bonfire they made of certain Papers which were presented Grievances from some discontented Murmuring Spirits; but he instructs them how to receive Grievances hereafter: In which, he would have them careful to avoid Three things. The First, That they meddle not with the main Points of Government, that is his Craft, Tractent fabrilia fabri. To meddle with that were to lessen him, who hath been Thirty Years at the Trade in Scotland, and served an Apprentiship of Seven Years here; therefore here needs no Phormios to teach Hannibal.

Secondly, He would not have fuch ancient Rights as he hath received from his Predeceffors accounted Grievances; that were to judge him unworthy to enjoy what they left him.

And Laftly, That they should be careful not to prefent that for a Grievance, which is establish'd by a Law; for it is very undutiful in Subjects, to press their King wherein they are fure to be deny'd. Complaints may be made unto them of the High Commissioners, let the Abuse appear then, and spare not, there may be Errors among them; but to take away the Commission, is to derogate from him; and it is now in his Thoughts to rectifie it in a good Proportion.

Then he shews the emergent Cause of his great Expences, fince his coming to the Crown, which makes him defire a Supply from them, confirming what the Lords formerly deliver'd; wherein he faid, When they open'd his Ne-ceffities unto them, his Purie only Labour'd, now his Defires are taken notice of both at Home and Abroad, his Reputation Labours as well as his Purfe; for the World will think it want of Love in them, or Merit in him, that both lessen'd their Hearts, and tied up their Hands towards him.

Thus the King expressed himself to the Parliament, defiring their Affiftance, affuring them, He had no Intention to alter the Government, though he wish'd the Laws might be rectified. But his King-crast (ashe calls it) fail'd in striking at the Common Law; and he was convinced in it, how dangerous it was to give too much knowledge to the People: The Two flanding, that they might know what to obey, frank the Lawyers in the Law, like the Romith and Lawyer, that work the People to Obedi-Priefls in the Goffel, might not keep the People upon the Two Anvils of Confcience and fo that ever after he join'd with them, and that An. Christian Three-fold Cord was not easily diffoly d. But 1609. the times not being ripe yet to produce any thing but the Fruits of Obedience, they after this Leffon fettled themselves to make divers good Laws, which they purchased at the rate of a Subfidy and a Fifteen.

About this time, the Suburbs betwixt London mation a- and Westminster had many ruinous Piles of Builgaint ding, which Age had worn out, and Induftry new Buil and Riches (the two great Supporters of this Momentary Eternity) did firive to renew.

Among the reft, the Lord Treaturer creeked out of the Rubbish of the old Stables of Dmburboufe, a goodly Fabrick, to be Rival to the Old Exchange, which the King by his Pre-fence dignified with the Name of Britain's Burfe. But he took notice of the fwelling Buildings upon the new Foundations, which he look'd upon as a Rickety Constitution in the Head of the Kingdom, being Inviters of a Flux of Humours and Diseases to be near the Court; befides, he fear'd the Plague would come too near Whiteball, if that Distemper encreased. † And of his Council, forbids all New Buildings to be fet up, for the future, within Two Miles of the City; and by Proclamation strictly commands, if any be, they shall be pulled down, tho' not taken notice of till Seven Years after. Whereby many Men, that did not fo well heed the Proclamation)

laid out their whole Effates upon little Hovels, and building fair Houses upon New Foundations (though it were but two Yards from the Old)

they became Trepassers, and must either purchafe their Houses again at a dear rate, or pull them down, both ways tending to their Ruine.

Thus falling under the Stroke of the Time's rough Hand, without a Providential Care of

And this Severity had a Second Consideration, which was, to prevent the great-ness of the Body of the Kingdom from swelling to be all Head, when the Head it felf wanted fo much increase of Building, as to plump, and make those thin Parts appear more round and beautiful, which was then a Difgrace, but is now an Ornament to both Cities. So that what the Wisdom of one time doth decry, the Experience of another may advance: Such is the World's career! And they are only Miserable, whose imprudence, or ill luck, puts them in the way to be over-run by it.

 This Year 1609, begot a Truce betwixt The Siege

the King of Spain, and the Low-Countries; yet of Juliers, by the Death of the Duke of Cleve, the War was like to revive again: For while two petty was like to revive again: For while two petty Princes, Brandenburgh and Newburgh, strove for the Inheritance, Spain, like the Vulture in the Fable, attempted to catch it from both, seizing upon Juliers, one of the chief Strengths of the Country; which the States of the Netberlands, by the help of our King, and Henry IV. of France, besiegid, and recover d again. Sir Edward Ceeil, Brother to the Earl of Salabary, commanded Fourthousand English at that Siege, commanded Four thousand English at that Siege, whose Conduct gave Life to his Soldiers Va-lour, and that advanced the Glory of his Conduct. "Why the Author has paid over to flightly this Treaty between Spain and the States of Holland, is the more firange, The it was the first Scene in which King James appeared abroad, either as a Party or Mediator, since his Accession to the Crown of England; and was of such consequence, that all Europe was kept in suspense of the first Scene in the States of the S

This Story of the English Ambassidors at the Pert was thought of such consequence in France, that President Jeannin, their Ambassidor Extraordinary at that Treaty, was commanded to demand of the States an Authentick Declaration to the contrary, in order to be Transsmitted to Constantingle.

It's true, Teanin wrote back to the Fransh Ministers, That he things such a Declaration was needless; and that it would

Vol. III.

An Reg. 8. Command) formewhat haftily, Dutton diffaining on chrift to be finapt up, (being a Man of a crabbed as Mortality Temper) returned as hot an Anfwer, which is tooke into a Flame: But Dutton quenched it, when the realities is the state of the st by telling Sir Hatton Cheek, He knew he was his Officer, which tied him in the Army to a frict Obedience; but he would break that Bond, and vindicate himself in another Place: And instantly quitting his Command, he went for England.

A Duel betwixt Sir Hatten

Some finall time after the taking of Juliers, Cheek fell sick; and his Distemper was the greater, because he had heard Dutton strove to de-Cheek, and fame him, both in Court and City; for being Sir Thomas full with Passion, he vented it with Freedom enull with Pathon, he vented it with Freedom e-nough in every place. Cheek being recover'd, and Heart-whole, would not give time to his decay'd Limbs to fuck in their old Vigour, but fends to Dutton that threaten'd him, to give an Account of the large Expence of his Tongue againfi him. Dutton, that waited for fuch a agantt min. Dutton, that watered to filler a Reckoning, willingly accepted the Summons: Check took Pigot, one of his Captains, to be his Second; Dutton took Captain Gofmald, both Men of well-fpread Fame; and they Four met on Calais Sands: On which dreadful Stage, at first the Captain C meeting, Dutton began to expostulate his Injuries, as if a Tongue-Combat might decide the Controversy; but Cheek would dispute it otherwife. Then their Seconds fearching, and strip-ping them to their Shirts in a cold Morning, they ran with that Fury on each other's Sword, as if they did not mean to kill each other, but ftrive who should first die. Their Weapons were Rapier and Dagger, a fit Banquet for Death. At the first Course, Cheek ran Dutton into the Neck with his Rapier, and flab'd him in the Neck backward with his Dagger, miraculously missing his Windpipe: And at the same instant, like one Motion, Dutton ran Cheek through the Body, and thab'd him into the Back with his left Hand, locking themfelves together thus with four bloody Keys, which the Seconds fairly open'd, and would fain have closed up the bleeding Difference; but Cheek's Wounds were deadly, which he finding, grew the violenter against his Enemy; and Dutton feeing him begin to stagger, went back from his Fury, only defending himfelf, till the other's Rage, weaken'd with Lofs of Blood, without any more Hurt, fell at his Feet. Dutton, with much Difficulty, recover'd his dangerous Wounds, but Cheek by his Servants had a fad Funeral; which is the bitter Fruit of fiery Passions.

From the The next Year was fatal to Hony the Great of Lounth of France, who (in the height of his Glory, when he had imp'd his Wings with a mighty Army, field by and a Mafs of Treafure, and none knew which Raviline. way his towring Spirit would fly) was flopt by a horrid Hand, that with a poyfon'd Knife cut out his Paffage to another World: Such poor and penetrable Things are Kings, as well as other Men! And when in this World's Sea they have toil'd their Spirits, in a continued Tempest of fond Hopes, and built upon the Sand their vast Desires, either old Age doth wash them quite away, or else some sudden Storm makes them cast Anchor upon the Shores of Death, and there's an end. But one Act of Providence i very remarkable towards him, as a Fore-runner of this enfuing Mifchief. When he came first to the Crown, (which he (as it were) fnatch'd out of the Lire, the whole Kingdom being in a Hame) he was a profesfed Protestant, so born, and hybred up; but finding himself in a totter-ing Condition among his Popish Subjects, for his better security, he did fomething comply with them in Eccletiaftical Affairs, which gave great Scandal to the Reformed; yet did not an Res 8 much advance him in the good Opinion of their Opposites: For the Jesuits, unconfident of an observation of the confident of the confidence o him, (inclining more to the het Zeal of Spain) one of their Instruments stab'd him into the Mouth with a Knife, without much Hurt: Which done, an Intimate of his, that came to visit him, told him plainly, That the Hand of God was much seen in this Action; for he had now denied the Truths of God, and the Reli-gion he fuck'd in with his Milk, but from the Teeth outward; and therefore this Punishment came to him as a Warning: But let him take Heed of denying it with his Heart; for if he did, (it is to be fear'd) God would ftrike him there also: Both which were too much manifested. So suitable often are God's Judgments to our Sins!

The Venom of this Blow reach'd prefently into England, and came somewhat near to our King's Heart; therefore he took the best way to prevent his Fears, by striving to prevent his Dangers, having no other End but his own: For when he confider'd the Horridness of the Powder-Plot, and by it the irreconcileable Malice of that Party, he thought it the fafeft Policy, not to ftir those Ashes where so much Fire was cover'd; which gave way to a Flux of that Jesuitical Humour to insest the Body of the Kingdom.

But now being startled with this poyson'd A Procla-Knife, he ventures upon a Proclamation, ftrict-mation aly commanding all Jesuits and Priests out of the gainst Je-Kingdom, and all Kecufants to their own futs Houses, not to come within Ten Miles of the Court; and secures all the rest of his Subjects to him, by an univerfal taking of the Oath of Allegiance; which the Parliament, both Lords and Commons, (then fitting) began, and the rest of the People follow'd, to the King's great Contentment. For the last Session the Parliament was prorogu'd till the Sixteenth of October this Year; and meeting now, they were willing to fecure their Allegiance to the King out of Piety; yet they were fo flout, (even in those Youthful Days, which he term'd Obstinacy) that they would not obey him in his Encroachments upon the Publick Liberty, which he began then to practife: For being now feafon'd with Seven Years Knowledge in his Profession here, he thought he might fet up for himself, and not be still Journeyman to the lavish Tongue of Men, that pry'd too narrowly into the Secrets of his Prerogative, which are Mysteries too high for them, being Arcana Imperii, fitter to be admir'd than question'd: But the Parliament were apprehensive enough, that those hidden Mysteries made many dark Steps into the People's Liberties; and they were willing, by the Light of Law and Reason, to discover what was the King's, what theirs: Which the King un-willing to have fearch d into, (after Five Seftions in Six Years time) diffolved the Parliament by Proclamation.

Prince Henry, the prime Branch of this Royal Prince Cedar, now growing Manly, (being in the Six- Henry cae teenth Year of his Age) put forth himfelf in atea a more Heroick manner than was usual with Prince of Princes of his Time, by Tiltings, Barriers, and other Exercises on Horseback, the Martial Discipline of gentle Peace, which caught the Peoples Eyes, and made their Tongues the Messengers of their Hearts, in daily extolling his hopeful and gallant Towardlines to Admiration. And now the King thought him full of Ripeness for the Henour of Knighthood, (which

An. Reg. 8. admitted of a willing Contribution from the An. Christian People; and such old Customs as bring in Money are never out of Date) and (to add the ney are never out of Date) and (to add the more Splendour to his fparkling Youth) created him Prince of Wales, (as he formerly intimated to the Parliament) with all the Pomp and Solemnity that a great King could express to a hopeful Son, his First-born; or the Merit of Parliament of the Parliament o a Prince (that floated in the Peoples Affections) could possibly attain to: For as yet the King could discover nothing in him but that harmless and wanton Innocency that commonly accom-panies Youth, being of a light Nature, and foon blown away. But how far the King's Fears (like thick Clouds) might afterwards blind the Eye of his Reason, when he saw him (as he thought) too high mounted in the Peo-(as he thought) too high mounted in the Peoples Love, and of an alluring Spirit, to decline his Paternal Affection to him, and bring him to the low Condition he fell in, may be the subject of my Fears, not of my Pen. With this Ingrandizing Title the King added a great Revenue, eltablishing also a full and splendent Retinue and Family to attend his Person at St. James's, now appointed to be the Prince's Course where this even San placed in the Third Court, where this new Star, plac'd in the Third House, might be fear'd to culminate, and become Lord of the Ascendant : His Palace being as gloriously attended with young and fprightly Bloffons, as the King's was with older, and more fage Plants. And now the King de-liberates for a Wife for him, and fends to Sir Charles Cornwallis, his Lieger Ambaffador in Spain, to treat with that King for his eldeft Daughter. But after some Traverses, it was found there was more Time lost than Ground gotten: For Princes in Treaties lie at the Snap, and the most backward often gets the better of it. But the King being not to hot then for this, as he was after for the other Son, with another Sifter (the eldest being matched into France) made a quicker and a more honourable Re-

I can lay nothing to the Charge of this great Man, but from common Fame; yet this I may truly fay, That for his Predecessor Whitesiff, and his Successor Abbot, I never heard nor read any thing tending to their Disparagement: But on him, fome unhappy Wit vented this Pafquin;

> Here lies his Grace in cold Earth clad, Who died with Want of what he had.

The Queen was Mistress of Somerset-House, (as well as the Prince was Master of St. fames's) and the would fain have given it the Name of Denmark-House, which Name continued her time among her People; but it was afterwards left out of the common Calendar, like the dead Emperor's new-nam'd Month. She was not without some Grandecs to attend her for outward Glory; the Court being a continued Mas-Masks in karado, where she and her Ladies, like so ma-great e-ny Sea-Nymphs, or Nereides, appear'd often in stem. various Dresses, to the Ravishment of the Beholders: The King himself not being a little delighted with such such as the state of the delighted with fuch fluent Elegancies, as made the Nights more Glorious than the Day. But the Latitude that thefe high-flying Fancies, and more speaking Actions, gave to the lower World to judge and censure, even the greatest with Reproaches, shall not provoke Me so much as to flain the innocent Paper. I shall only fay in general, That Princes, by how much they are greater than others, are look d upon with a more fevere Eye; if their Virtues be not suitable to their Greatness, they lose much of their Value: For it is too great an Allay to fuch Refinedness to fall under the common Cognizance.

It was one Sattliff, Doftor in Divinity, that procur'd a Patent from King James for crefting this College, to confid a Provoft and Twenty Fellows, to be chosen by the Archbishop of Canterbay, the Bishop of Landon, and the Vice-Chancellors of the two Univertities for the time being; which College he intended to build and endow, and the Part did, with lay own Money, and the free Contributions of others. He was the First Provost himself, and dy'd either after Archbishop Barneys, or about the same time; for there were three Provosts after him successively, whereof the Lexical Dr. Faithy was one. It was one Sutcliffe

Now how far Archbishop Banerst might encourage Sutcliff's Design, I know not: But if it had been Originally Baners's own, it's not probable King James would have discourage it afterwards, as he did; or that his next Successfor but one Archbishop Land, would have utterly neglected a Foundation laid by a Pruber, whose Memory he held in the highest Veneration, and whose Maxims and Character he made it his Business to incince.

This Accident gave the King Occasion to take Inis Accident gave the Aing Occasion to take Notice of him; and hearing that his Name was Car, remembred he had a Page of that Name when he came first into England, which this provid to be: For the Pages the King brought first with him, according to the French way, to write the Air September 1. wait upon his Coach, were dicharg'd, and Footmen, according to the English way, supplied these Places. The King mustering up his those Places. The King mustering up his Thoughts, fix'd them upon this Object of Pity, giving special Order to have him lodg'd in the Court, and to have his own Physicians and Chirurgions use their best Endeavours for his Recovery. The King vifited him often during his necefficated Refiraint, fometimes an Hour or more difcourfing with him, to found him, and know what he was; and tho he found no great Depth of Literature or Experience, yet fuch a fimooth and calm Outfide made him think there might be good Anchorage, and a fit Harbour for his most retir'd Thoughts. As foon as he recover'd (which the King with fome Impatience attended) he made him Knight, and Gentleman of his Bed-Chamber, took the Pains himself to teach him the Latin Tongue, and laid a Foundation, by his daily Discourses with him, to improve him unto a Capability of his most endear'd Affections.

Now all Addresses are made to Sir Robert Car; he is the Favourite in Ordinary; no Suit, nor no Reward, but comes by him; his Hand diffributes, and his Hand reftrains; our Supreme Power works by fecond Caufes; the Lords themselves can scarce have a Smile without him. And to give the greater Lustre to his Power, about this time the Earl of Dunbar, the King's old trufty Servant, (the Cabinet of his fecret Counfels) died; so that he folely now took the most intimate of them into his Charge, and the Office of Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, which Staff the other left behind him; and though it could be no great Supporter, yet the Credit of it carried some Reputation in his own Country, where it was his Happiness to be mag-Country, where it was his Happinels to be magnified, as well as in England; for he had Treafure enough here, where the Fountain was.

And to ingrandize all, the King created him Baron of Brandigeeb, and Vifcount Reshefter, and Goon after Knight of the Garter. Thus was he Vifcount drawn up by the Beams of Majefly to fhine in the higheft Glory, grappling often with the Prince himfelf in his own Sphere in divers Contributions. For the Prince himself with the Prince him felf in his own Sphere in divers Contributions. teilations: For the Prince being a high-born Spirit, and meeting a young Competitor in his Father's Affections, that was a Mushrom of yeiterday, thought the Venom would grow too near him, and therefore he gave no Countenance, but Opposition to it; which was aggravated by some little Scintils of Love, as well as Hatred, (Rivals in Passion) being both Amotons, and in youthful Blood, fixing by Accident upon one Object, who was a third Man's; in which the Viscount got the Mastery, but to his Ruine. And being mindful of the Afperity and Sharpnes that was betwirt him and the late Earl of Effex, he thought it a good Act of Policy and Piety not to fuffer Malice to become Hereditary; and therefore he was a great Means in marrying the young Earl of Effex to the Lady Frances Howard, another of those Sisters, that the Father's Enmity might be closed up by the Son's Nuprial Fraternity. The Earl of Effix was Fourteen Years of Age, and she Thirteen, when they married; too young to consider, but old e-nough to consent: Yet by the Advice of Friends separated after Marriage, she under her Mother's Wing, and he visiting France and Germany, till Time should mature and ripen a happy Counion. The Court was her Nest, her Father being Lord Chamberlain; and she was hatch'd up by her Mother, whom the four Breath of that Age (how juttly I know not) had already tainted; from whom the young Lady might take fuch a Tincture, that Eafe, Greatness, and Court Glories, would more diftain and impress on her, than any way wear out and diminish.

The Prince of Wales, now in his Puberty, fent many loving Glances, as Ambaffadors of his good Respects; and amorous Expressions are fit Subjects for jealons Reproaches to work on. Her Husband having been now Three or Four Years beyond the Seas, (fick with Absence from her whom his Defires longed after) came over again, and found that Beauty, which he had left innocent, so farded and sophisticated with fome Court Drug which had wrought upon her, that he became the greatest Stranger at home. His Patience made way for him a while, and he bore up with a gentle Gale against the Stream of this Woman's Affections, which ran altogether (unknown to him) into another Chanel. Nor was her Reputation yet become fo robuft (being of a tender Growth) to strike his Ears with Reproaches; and therefore he imputed her fly Entertainments to a Maiden Bashfulness; till furfeited with that dull Potion (upon better Advice) he went to the Earl of Suffolk (her Father) and demanded his Wife, thinking himfelf capable to enjoy both her and her Love. The Tather, that thought there had been an Intimacy betwixt them fuitable to their Conjugal Knot, made use of his Paternal Power, to reduce his Daughter to the Obedience of a Wife. But while thefe things were struggling for, a most Violent Discase of a Poysonous Nature, imputed to, but far transcending, the fmall-Pox, feized on the Earl of Effex; and had not the Strength of Youth, and that Almighty Power that orders all things, wrough out the Venom of it, the Earth (as probably wish'd by her) had been his Marriage-Bed.

alienated from her Husband, and fet upon the Viscount, had a double Task to undergo, for accomplishing her ends: One was, to hinder her Husband from enjoying her; the other was, to make the Viscount sure unto her: For dishonest Love is most full of Jealousy. Her Husband she look'd upon as a private Person, and to be carried by him into the Country, out of her Element, (being ambitious of Glory, and a Beauty covetous of Applause) were to close (as fhe thought) with an infufferable Torment; though he was a Man that did not only every way merit her Love, but he lov'd her with an extraordinary Affection, having a gentle, mild, and courteous Disposition, especially to Women, fuch as might win upon the roughest Natures. These two consult together how they might stop the Current of the Earl's Affection towards his Wife, and make a clear Paffage for the Viscount in the place. To And For effect which, one Doctor Forman, a reputed many about Conjurer, (living at Lambeth) is found out: it. The Women declare to him their Grievances; he promifes sudden Help; and to amuse them, frames many little Pictures of Brass and Wax, fome like the Viscount and Countess, whom he must unite and strengthen; others like the Earl of Essex, whom he must debilitate and weaken; and then with Philtrous Powders and fuch Drugs he works upon their Persons. And to practife what Effects his Art would produce, Mrs. Turner, that lov'd Sir Arthur Manwaring, (a Gentleman then attending the Prince) and willing to keep him to her, gave him fome of the Powder, which wrought so violently with him, that, through a Storm of Rain and Thunder, he rode Fifteen Miles one dark Night to her House, scarce knowing where he was till the was there. Such is the devilifh and mad Rage of Luft, beighten d with Art and Fancy.

These Things matur'd and ripen'd by the Cunning of this Jugler Forman, gave them Affurance of happy Hopes. Her Courtly Invite-ments, that drew the Viscount to observe her, fhe imputed to the Operation of those Drugs he had rasted; and that Harshness, and stub-born Comportment she expressed to her Husband, making him (weary of fuch Entertainments) to ablent himfelf, fle thought proceeded from the Effects of those unknown Potions and Powders that were administred to him: So apt is the Imagination to take Impression of those Things we are willing to believe.

The good Earl finding his Wife nousled in the

The old Manbeing troubled with his Daughter's Disobedience, imbitter'd her, being near him, with wearisome and continual Chidings, to wean her from the Sweets she doted on, and with much adofore'd her into the Country. But how harsh was the parting, being rent away from the Place where she grew and flourish'd? Yet the left all her Engines and Imps behind her; the old Doctor, and his Confederate Mrs. Turner, must be her two Supporters: She blazons all her Miseries to them at her depart, and moyftens the way with her Tears. Chartley was an Hundred Miles from her Happiness, and a little time thus loft is her Eternity. When she came thither, (tho' in the pleasantest time of Sum-When she came mer) she shut her self up in her Chamber, not fuffering a Beam of Light to peep upon her dark Thoughts: If she ftir'd out of her Chamber, it was in the dead of Night, when Sleep had taken possession of all others but those about her. In this implacable, fad discontented Humour, she continu'd some Months, always murmuring against, but never giving the least civil Respect to her Husband; which the good Man suffer'd patiently, being loth to be the Di-vulger of his own Misery: Yet having a Man-

With this kind of Stuff she fill'd her Letters, which were after found in Forman's Closet. These Instigations made him active; and the Man being skilful in Natural Magick, did use all the Artifice his Subtilty could devise really to imbecillitate the Earl; for no Linen came near his Body that was not rinfed with their Camphire Compositions, and other faint and wasting Ingredients; and all inward Applications were foifted on him by corrupted Servants, to leffen and debilitate the Seminal Operations: Which Veneficium is one great part of Witchcraft, destructive to Nature, and horridly abominable to be practised. And this in time wrought such Effects upon his Person, that he found himself unable with her, tho' she permitted him; yet when he had been from her fome reasonable time, to renovate his Spirits, by shaking off those Artificial Applications, then his Abilities made her unwilling and re-fractory. Tho' fome are of Opinion, that he was not much debilitated, but that she got (by her virtuous Agents) an Artifice too immodest to be expressed, to hinder Penetration. And thus she tormented him, till he was contented to let her steer her own Course, which after run her on Ground.

We could dispute the Nature of these Operations, how far they are contingent, and how the Fancy works with them, tho ignorant of them, making their Impulsions more active, being the Sparks that kindle this combushible Matter; for we will never allow there was any other Diabolical Means used, Nature being ftrong enough for fuch a Production; but being not pertinent to the Story, will leave it, and follow them that found the Effects of it, and had Affections suitable to it, which they made use of with an unbridled Appetite, yet finance are of with an anothered Appents, yet meeting closely in Corners, (Sin being at first shamefaced) but afterwards they grew more hold; and every Hour that the Viscount could steal from his Royal Master, he dedicated it to his Disloyal Mistres: Being caught in this Net of Adulation, he becomes a willing Prisoner; Lust only getting Liberty to all Looseness and Licentiousness: Places of frequent Meetings are daily renew'd; Persons sitted for such Practices are employ'd; and when Nature was exhausted, Art, her fubtil Imitator, brought in her Store, to contribute new Spirits, purchased at any rate. All outward Adornment, to prefent Beauty in her full Glory, were not wanting on both fides, being Luft's Fuel, which tended to the Confumption of all Reason: And among the rest, yellow Starch, the Invention and foil of Jaundice Complexions, with great Cut-work Bands, and Piccadillies, (a thing that hath fince loft the Name) crouded in and flourish'd among us, Mrs. Turner being nominated to be the first Contriver, happily in England, but the Original came out from France; which Fashion and Colour did fet off their lean and fallow Countenances. Thus did the Viscount get the Conquest of two, the King, and this Lady, but could not fubdue

The Lord The Wheel of Fortune running towards the Sanquir Sects, turn'd by the Viscount Rochester, was unmurther-happily diverted upon the Lord Sanquir, a Baron ed a Fen- of that Nation, and married to a good Family in England; who fome Years before meeting with a flurdy Fencer, one John Turner, who was a Mafter of the Weapon-Trade in his own School, the young Lord strove to put some Affront upon him, (making it no little Conquest to difgrace a Master in the Art, as they term'd it) and the Man apprehensive of the Attempt, with a bold Rudeness press'd so hard upon him, that he thrust out one of the Baron's Eyes. This Mischief was much regretted by Turner, and the Baron being conscious to himself that he meant his Adversary some III, took the Accident with as much Patience, as Men that lofe one Eye by their own Default use to do for the Preservation of the other. Some time after, being in the Court of the late Great Henry of France, and the King (courteous to Strangers) entertaining Discourse with him, ask'd him, how he lost his Eye: He (cloathing his Answer in a better Shrowd than a plain Fencer's) told him, it was done with a Sword: The King replies, Doth the Man live? And that Question gave an end to the Discourse, but was the beginner of a strange Confusion in his working Fancy, which neither Time nor Distance could compose, carrying it in his Breaft some Years after, till he came into England, where he hir'd two of his Contant, (which doth not amount to above Five Countrymen, Gray and Carlile, (Men of low hundred Pounds) or, cunningly, (if he knew and mercenary Spirits) to murther him; which the Value, knew also the Treasurer's Meaning)

This bold nefarious Act was very deeply refented at Court, and the King's Commands were fo active for Apprehenfion of the Murderers, that they were all three taken; one upon the Borders of Scotland, fo far had his Fears carried him; another in a Ship bound for Hamburgh, who escaping in a Storm, the Seas deliver dup; and the Lord himself being obfcur'd, (in this Tempest of his Soul) hearing a Thousand Pound was offered to bring his Head, (fo liberal was the King for Juffice) threw himself into the Arms of his Mercy, by the Mediation of the Archbishop of Canterbury, to whom he presented himself an Object of Pity; but no Intercession could prevail, their Lives satisfied the Law, the Baron not having Is hang'd the Honour of a Noble Death.

The Caufe of the King's Severity, (if Juffice Caufes of may be call'd Severity) was contrary to that of the King's the Baron's Prefumption; for he thought the Severity. Seas might do any thing, and he fuffer'd because they had done so much: For Ramser, one of the King's Servants, not long before had switch'd the Earl of Montgomery, who was the King's first Favourite, happily because he took it so. Maxwell, another of them, had bitten Hawley, a Gentleman of the Temple, by the Ear; which inraged the Templers (in those Times Riotous, and fubject to Tumults) and brought it almost to a National Quarrel, till the King stept in, and took it up himself. The Lord Bruse had fummon'd Sir Edward Sackvill (who was after Earl of Dorfet) into France, with a fatal Compliment to take Death from his Hand: Such killing Civilities these Times produced! And the much lamented Sir James Stuart, one of the King's Blood, and Sir George Wharton, the prime Branch of that Noble Family, for little worthlefs Punctilio's of Honour, (being intimate Friends) took the Field, and fell by each other's Hand. This was accounted a Piaculous Action of the King's by many; tho' fome have not stuck to say, That as Queen Elizabeth was willing to be rid of the Queen of Scots, yet would not have it her Action; and being it could not be done without her Command, when it was done she renounc'd her own Act. So tho' the King was angry when he heard his Mother was taken away by a violent Death, recalling his Ambaffador, threatening War, and making a great Noise (which was after calm'd and clos'd up with a large Pension from the Queen) yet he might well enough be pleas'd that fuch a Spirit was laid, as might have conjured up three Kingdoms against him: For Patrick Grey, that the King sent to dissiwade Queen Elizabeth from taking away his Mother's

We have a Letter of his to King James in Print, in Answer to one the King had sent him of Sir Thomas Edmonds, concerning this Treaty of Maritage. Seeing probably it was the last he ever writ, it well deserves a Place here, for it's dated the 14th of Odober, 1612, and he dy'd the 6th of November following.

He therein, with great Prudence, gives his Opinion about every Article contain'd in Edmond's Letter. Prince Homy Knew well his Father's coverous Temper, and for that Reafon he has a nice Touch upon the Article of her Fortune. If Your Maigly (continues he) regards the Greature] of a Down, I think you will prefer the Prince] of Savey : She brings with her Your handward shoughed Cownt more than the Lady of France; for at least Lean farce perfusal my fill, that the Regent will give more to the Second Daughter than to the Eldel. But if Your Maigly lays affile Interest, to do what that he more to the Mind of the general Budy of Protificants abroad, it ferms to me you will rather incline to France than Savey. It's you, Six, who is to take the must advantageous Resolution that may be for the Goad of the State: I have but little Experience in Political Affairs, and cannot special hea a Man finited with Levy upon this Occasion.

Hanny had it here for this Occasion.

Happy had it been for King Charles, and for England, if the Treaty of Marriage between him and the youngest Sister of this Princess had been set upon the same Foot that Prince Henry design'd his should have been. Vol. IL Trett

A.Rig.10. gerous are the Paths of Greatness, that the Tongue (many times) rouling afide, makes An Christi Men tread awry. Strange Rumours are raised upon this fudden expiration of our Prince, the Difease being so violent, that the Combat with Nature in the Strength of Youth (being almost Nineteen Years of Age) lasted not above Five Days. Some fay he was poisoned with a Bunch of Grapes, others attribute it to the venemous Scent of a pair of Gloves prefented to him, (the Diftemper lying for the most part in the Head.) They that knew neither of these, are strucken with Fear and Amazement, as if they had tafted, or felt, the Effects of those Violences: Private Whisperings, and Sufpicions, of fome new Defigns a foot, broaching Prophetical Terrours, That a black Christmas avoild produce a bloody Lent. For the Spaniard, who opposed the Marriage of the Prince Palatine, and faw their Ruin growing up in Prince Huny's rowardly Spirit, were reputed (vulgarly) the Mint-mafters of some horrid Practices; and that a Ship of Pocket-Pistols was come out of Spain, fit Instruments for a Massacre. these Trepidations were not only in the lower Region, but wrought upwards fo high, that Proclamations were fent abroad, to forbid the making or carrying of Piftols under a Foot long in the Barrel. And all Papifts are not only difarm'd (being ever efteemed Vaffals to the Catholick King) but their Actions with caution pried into. In fuch dark Clouds as thefe, the whole Kingdom was at a lofs; all ordinary Transitions of Nature, are imputed to prodigious Omens; the greater the Fears are, the more blazing is the Metcor that arifes from

Some that knew the Bickerings betwixt the Prince and the Viscount, muttered out dark Sentences, that durft not look into the light; especially Sir James Elphington, who (obterving the Prince one day to be discontented with the Viscount) offered to kill him: But the Prince reprov'd him with a gallant Spirit, faving, If there were Cause, he would do it him-felf. Now whether these Rumours begot a surther Scrutiny, or whether it be the Court-trick to daub and flubber over things that may be perfpicuous, I know not: But the Phylicians about the Prince gave it under their Hands (which was spread abroad in several Copies) that he died of a ftrong malignant Feaver, (fo are all violent Diffolutions, where Nature hath power of Refiftance) that his Liver was Pale, and Livid, lead-like; the Gall had no Gall, but was full of Wind; the Spleen was unnaturally black, and the Lungs in many Places spotted, with much Corruption; the Midriff, or Diaphragma, blackish; and the Head in some Places full of Blood, and in some Places full of clear Water. Thus was he Anatomized to amuze the World, and clear the sufficion of Peifon, as if no Venoms could produce these HisFune. Effects. He died the Sixth of November, and was carried on a Hearfe (triumphing even in Death) to Westminster, the Seventh of December following; the Pemp of the Funeral being fully compleated, with the Peoples Tears and Lamentarions.

But the King (though he could not but he troubled to lofe fo near a part of himfelf) look'd over all these Mists, and (like the Sun) dispelled all these Clouds and Vapours; commanding, no Man should appear in the Court in Mourning; he would have nothing in his live to bring to fad a Message to his Heart. The Jolliry, Featling, and Magniticence of Christmas, must not be laid down. There were A. Reg. 10. Princes, and Nobles, that came out of Germany An Christi with the Prince Elector, that must fee the 1612. Glory of the English Court; which was pre-fented with so much Eminency in gorgeous Apparel, that the precedent Mourning was but Apparel, that the precedent Mouring, the base a fable Foll, the better to illustrate it.

The Prince Elector Palatine, and Maurice Knights Prince of Orange, were made Knights of the Garter, Lodowick Count of Orange being Matternal. rice's Deputy; and Prince Maurice took it as a great Honour to be admitted into the Fraternity of that Order, and wore it constantly; till afterwards, some Villains at the Higus, that met the Reward of their Demerit, (one of them a French Man, being Groom of the Prince's Chamber) robb'd a Jeweller of Amsterdam, that brought Jewels to the Prince, this Groom tempting him into his Chamber to fee fome Jewels, and there with his Confederates they strangled the Man with one of the Prince's Blue Ribons; which being after discovered, the Prince would never fuffer fo fatal an Instrument to come about his Neck.

In February following, the Prince Palatine, The and that lovely Princels, the Lady Elizabeth, Palatine were Married on Bishop Valentine's Day, in all married the Pomp and Glory that so much Grandeur to the could express. Her Vestments were White, Lady the Emblem of Innocency; her Hair dishevel'd, zabeth. hanging down her Back at length, an Orna-ment of Virginity; a Crown of pure Gold up-on her Head, the Cognizance of Majesty, being all over befet with precious Gems, fhin-ing like a Constellation; her Train supported by Twelve young Ladies in White Garments, to adorned with Jewels, that her Paffage looked like a Milky-way. She wasled to Church by her Brother Prince Charles, and the Earl of Northampion; the young Batchelor on the Right Hand, and the old on the Left. And while the Archbishop of Camebury was Solemnizing the Marriage, fome Corulcations and Lightnings of Joy appear'd in her Countenance, that express'd more than an ordinary Smile, being almost elated to a Laughter; which could not clear the Air of her Fate, but was rather a fore-runner of more fad and dire Events: Which flows how flippery Nature is, to trot us along to those Things that bring Danger, yea fometimes Destruction with them.

She return'd from the Chapel between the Duke of Lenox, and the Earl of Nottingham Lord High Admiral, two Married Men. The Feaflings, Maskings, and other Royal Formalities, were as troublesome ('tis presum'd) to the Lovers, as the Relation of them here may be to the Readers: For fuch Splendour and Gayety are fitter to appear in Princes Courts, than in Histories.

The City of London (that with high Magnificence had Feafted the Prince Palatine, and his Noble Retinue) presented to the fair Bride a Chain of Oriental Pearl, by the Hand of the Lord Mayor, and Aldermen, (in their Scarlet and Gold Chain Accoutrements) of fuch a Value, as was fit for them to give, and her to receive. And the People of the Kingdom in general, being Summon'd to a Contribution for the Marriage of the King's Daughter, did shew their Affections by their Bounty. And tho' it be the Custom of our Kings to pay their Daughters Portions with their Subjects Purses; yet a Hundred years being almost past since such a Precedent, it might have made them numilling (if their Obedience had not been full ripe) to recal such obsolete Things, as

But, tir'd with Feafting and Jollity, about "But, tird with Feating and Jointy, assuate the middle of April, when the Beauties of the Spring were enticing enough to Beguile the tediodines of the way, the Prince Elector willing to review, and the Princels to fee what the was to enjoy; after all the Careffes, and Grove Enthances, they could be between the fweet Embraces, that could be between the Princefs. King, Queen, and Princes, that were to be feparated to long, and at fuch a distance; and after all the Shews, Pastimes, Fireworks, and other Artifices that could be devised, and manifeffed, they parted at Rochester; the Lord Admiral being ready with a Royal Navy in the Downes for their Passage and Conduct. The Season smiled on them, and they arrived the Nine and twentieth of the Month in Flushing. The Duke of Lenax, the Earl of Arundel, the Viscount Lift, and the Lord Harington, with divers Ladies and Persons of Quality, attended them to Heydelburg. Their Entertainment was great and magnificent in the Low Countries, not only fuitable to the Perfons, but the Place from whence they came, (the English having been ever a Bulwark to the Natherlands) and now they were in full Peace with Spain, which gave the better rellish to their Ban-quettings. And in every eminent Town in Germany as they paffed, they found that Wel-come which prolong d their Time, but made their Travel the less, so that with much ado they reach'd Heydelburgh. And after fome time fpent there, to fee the Beauties and Delights of that Court, and Country, (which were extended and put forth to the uttermost) the No-bility and Ladies of England return'd home, on-ly they left the Lord Harington behind them, who died by the way: A Gentleman much lamented in his own Person, but much more in his Sons, (who not long after furviv'd him) with whom were Buried, not only those excellent Endowments that make Noblemen great indeed, but the Memory of a noble Posterity, which makes them little, or indeed nothing at

> The Viscount Roobester all this while (tho' plunged in Lust) was held up by the Chin in the Glories of the Court; and the Prince (that interposed betwith him and the Beams of Majesty) being removed, the Earl of Salisbury (another obstacle) dying Six Months after the Prince, in the way from the Bath; he now took full Post-fion of the King's Favours alone. He executes the Place of Principal Secretary, receiving all Pacquets, and dispatching An-ferers without the Knowledge of the King or Council; or if the King did know, his Love had hoarded up fuch a Confidence in him, as he laid all out upon that Stock. Rochester's greatest Assistant was a private Gentleman, one Sir Thomas Overbury, by whose Compass he fteer'd his Courfe, who (being a Man of Parts and Abilities) had wrought upon the Viscount fo, as not only to keep him in, and close with the King, but to make him capable of manag-ing the highest Affairs, if he had kept himself within the Circle drawn to his Hand. This Intimacy betwixt them, spake Overbury an Actor in all his Privacies. And when he understood by the Viscount his Intention of Marriage with the Countels of Esex, he opposed it with all the powerful Arguments he could use: For tho' he might be fo active, in his Initiation of Fayour with the Viscount, to be affistant to his now gotten good footing in his Affection, and building his Fortune thereon, his Reason might 1613. tell him, there could be nothing more deftru-ctive to both their growing Hopes, than to lay a Foundation upon to much publick Injuftice, as to Marry another Man's Wife, her Husband living; therefore he paffionately perfuaded him to cast his Thoughts upon a more honourable Object, and not on one, whose Disloyalty (in her present Condition) was so much branded with Infamy, that the Marks of it would be visible on his Face. But the Viscount, bewitched with the Inticements of his Soul-ravishing Mifirefs, (uncapable of good Counfel) doth not only call home his Affections from Overbury, that had been long Lieger with him, (denouncing Enmity) but incites his Beloved against him also; who mustering up all her Passions, with the greatest Acrimony that a Feminine Malice could devise, she never left, till she had discharg'd all the Vollies of her Rage upon him. alleharg a all the Volues of her Kage upon min. And the better to do it, the conclust with her Uncle the Earl of Northampion, aggravating Overbury's Offence, as tending to the Difhonour of their whole Family: That he (a petry Fellow) should dare to raise such as against the such as her Innocency. The Earl of Northampton, that knew of the Endearments betwixt the Viscount and his Niece, (fo bafe and mercenary was his Spiric) thought it good Policy to flop all Pafages, that it might not come into the publick Mouth: For being in a Sphere clated above others, it was a Sin of a high Presumption for any of an inferiour Orb to move but in its own Place, or meddle with what is above them. He therefore closes with the Viscount, (whom in Rochester his flattering Acclamations by Letters he makes and Nor. a little Deity) and after some dispute of the thampton manner how to be revenged of Overbury, they Pictore conclude to dispatch him by Poison, which burn could not be done fo well in a publick way; Death, and therefore they fubtilly contrive to exafperate the King against him, that being a Prisoner, and shackled by them to a Place, he might be a more settled Mark for their envenom'd Arrows.

About the same time, the King thinking fit Restricts to fend an Ambassador into Flanders, to the betrays Arch-Duke, (fome say, into France) the Vis Overlay. count recommended Sir Thomas Overbury to the count reconninence of Thomas Overeury to the King for that Service, (extolling his Abilities, and fitness for the same publickly, that more notice might be taken of the Affront) and the King made choice of him for that Imployment. Which done, the Viscount (under the shadow of Friendship) imparts to Overbury what Intentions the King had towards him; but he thought it would not be fo convenient for him to accept of it, because he should not only lose his Converse and Company by fuch an Alienation, (which he highly valued) but many a fair opportunity of im-proving his Refpects to him, in fome better way of Advancement. Overbury had not been fo little a Courtier, or a Man of fo mean Reafon, but that he was sensible what Displeasure he should pull upon himself, by resuling the King's Commands: And therefore he told the Viscount, that betwixt the King's Favours, and his Friendship, he had a great Conslict in his Spirit, being willing to retain both; but how he should retail the King's Commands with fafety, he knew not. But the Viscount, with fair Promises, prevail'd with him to fet up his Pleasures, and for carrying forward some of his dark Contrivances, (those Secretaries being Vol. II.

The Earl of Northampton resenting his Nieces with her. Grievances, makes the King acquainted with her Maiden Bashfulness, how loth she is to divulge her Husband's Infirmities, and how long it is fince her Marriage, and yet she hath not enjoyed the happiness of a Wife; that her Husband's Inability must needs be an unnatural Conjunction, fuch as neither Law nor Reason can admit of; and that there was a great Affection betwixt the Viscount and her, so as there feem'd to be a more excellent Sympathy, and fweet Composition of Soul in them, more fuitable to Reason and Nature, than in the State fhe was in. Which was feconded by the V1fcount's humble Submissions to the King's great Wifdom, who (he acknowledg'd) had not only raifed him to what he is, but may yet make him more happy, by uniting him to a Lady of fo much Honour and Virtue.

The King, that took delight to compleat the Happiness of them he lov'd, commanded the Bishops to sue out a Divorce between the Earl of Effer and his Lady, that the Viscount might Marry her: For he had been practifed former-206 John ly in Scotland, in his Minority, with the like thous the Experiment. Elizabeth, Daughter to the Earl forcy of Scaland. of Abba, being married to the Earl of March, under pretence of Impotency, but meerly for Lust, (as the Author reports) was Divorced from her Husband, and Married to the Earl of Dram, (the King's Favourite) who had been before a Partner in her Adulterous Sheets, (fo cutrent is the Parallel, and so equally are Luft and Ambition yoked together, that they both (with full Violence) draw one and the fame way.)

The Bishops, and others, having a Commission under the Great Seal of England, to Convene the Earl of Effex, and his Countels, before them, fent out their Summons, and they made their Appearance accordingly. But be-the accused her Husband of Impotency, (and that he was hindred with a perpetual and incurable Impediment, whereby he is unable to have Carnal Copulation with her, with frigiditas quoad bane, often reiterated, &c.) The good Earl, willing to be rid of fo horrid a Mischief, did acknowledge he had attempted to enjoy her many times, but he never did, nor could Carnally know her, and believ'd he never fhould. Upon these Grounds the Judges proceed to a Divorce.

Declaring, That Robert Earl of Effex, and The the Lady Frances Howard, contrailed by since of Coun-Marriage, did cobabit in one House, and the together test di-in one Bed, Nuclus cum Nucla, & Solus cum from her Sola; and that the faid Lady Frances did shew ber Husband. felf Promps, ready to be known of him; and that the faid Earl neither did, nor could have knowledge of her, although he did think himself able to have knowledge of other Women. And that the faid Lady Frances, by inspection of her Body by Midwives, expert in matter of Marriage, was proved to be apt for Carnal Copulation with Man, and yet a Virgin. Therefore we the faid Judges deputed in the Caufe, first invocating the Name of Christ, and setting God fulf invocating the Name of Chriff, and Jetting God before our Ege, do pronounce, decree, and declare, That the Earl of Effex, for some secret, incurable, binding Empediment, did never Carnally know, or was, or is able Carnully to know, the Lady Frances Howard: And therefore we do pronounce, hove decreed, and do declare, the pretended Marriage, so contrasted, and solimized, de facto, between them, to have been, and to be utterly wold, and to no effect; and that they did want, and quant to mant the freenth that they did want, and ought to want the strength of the Law: And that the Lady Frances was, and of the Law: An that the Lady Frances was, and so, and so ought to be Free, and at Liberty, from any Bond of such pretended Marriage, de sacto, contra-tited and solemnized. And we do pronounce, that she ought to be Divorced, and so we do Free and Di-vorce her; leaving them, as touching other Marri-ages, to their Conscience in the Lord. TheLieutenant of the Tower engaged in it.

But Overbury's Meat must be dress'd in the Lieutenant's Kitchin, and therefore it is neceffary to make him acquainted with it; which the Earl of Northampton undertook, smoothing him with fuch Language, and promifing him flith Rewards, as he thought fixeft to gain upon him; Assuring him, that it would be an acceptable Service to the King to have him remov'd; being an infolent and pernicious Fellow (as he called him) of a Factious and Dangerous Spirit; and therefore advifed him to be Cautious in admitting any to fee him, left his Paffions should vent themselves and become Publick. The Lieutenant being a Man intelligent enough, could not but apprehend the dangerous Path he trod in purfuing this Bufiness: For if he should make the King acquainted with it, to know more of his Mind, before it were done, and he disclaim it, Northampton was powerful enough to crush him on the one side; and if it should be discover'd after it were done, he might be fure the King would not own it; and it would bring him a certain Ruine on the other fide: Betwixt thefe two Extreams he knew no Mean; and therefore he took that which tended (as he thought) to most fafety, hoping that the Earl of Northampton had some higher Authority for the fame. And now they begin to put their Defign in Practice; Franklin furnishes Weston with Materials, compounded to consume Nature infentibly; but this was not quick e-nough; Malice must be as Active, as Cunning; Stronger Ingredients are infused, which Westen having received from the Counters by his Son, he meets the Lieutenant as he carried up Overhe meets the Leutenant as he carried up over-bury's Meat, faying to him, Sir, full I give it Habit of a Virgin, with her Hali pendant al-him now? He gets therefore (by the help of Franklin) several forts of Poysons, tempering them with his Broaths, and every bit of Meat he eat, that he might diminish by Degrees; for his very Salt was mixt with white Mercary: And besides these, Sir Thomas Monson fent Tarts and Jellies of the Countess and Mrs. Tirure's Composition (by some of his Ser-vants) to Weston, for the better Expedition. Thus was the poor Gentleman tortur'd and rack'dina horrid Diftemper; who being Young, and of a Strong Constitution, was able to grap-ple a long time with these Corroding Tormentors: But his Body being not always able to bear it, at length he fell extream Sick; and having no Friend that could or durft Vifit him. none to complain to but the Caufers of his Mifery (fuch strict Guards were kept about him) he languish'd both in Body and Mind. But some Friend by accident taking the Advantage for a Visit, and finding him very Sick, procur'd him a wholesome Glister, which Weston was willing enough to have administred, be-cause he would not be too quick; and that recarded the Work, by carrying away some of the Poyfonous Matter. Which Northampton hearing, the Lieutenant was check'd for being fo careless; and commanded that none should come near him; being fearful lest the Desperateness of his Condition should make him reveal fome thing of High Concernment that had been Machinated among them: And Mrs. Turner rebuked her Minister Weston, for looking no better to his Charge; fo they dealt with him now upon a new Account.

The City of London, and the Court at White-Feafted in London ball, like two great Stars in Conjunction, had one and fame Influence and Operation; they must do something for the Man whom the King loves: Therefore a great Feast is prepard by them in Merchant-Taylors-Hall (and all the Grandees and Ladies are invited) with fo much Magnificence, as if it had been Competitor, and vied with Whitehall for Glory. They all rode a Horseback into the City in the Evening, following their two Leaders; the Men attending the Bridegroom, and the Women the Bride; fo mounted, furnished, and adorn'd with Trap-pings, and so bespangled with Jewels, that the Torches and Flambeaux (which were nu-

The Noise of these Triumphs resounding in the closest Corners, brought the News to Sir the Mar-Thomas Overbury, which was an unfit and comfortless Companion to a Man in Misery; confcious to himfelf, that all his Sufferings proceeded from his Opposition to that which was now in Agitation; fo that in his obscure Prifon and darker Thoughts, he could not fee the least Glimps of Hope that look'd toward Liber-ty, when he consider'd the implacable Nature of the Woman. But yet he was not fo guilty to his own Reason, and that Friendship (as he thought) that was betwixt him and the Earl of Somerfet, as utterly to despair, he having so faithfully promised to procure his Release.

And to kill him again after Death, they Northamp. brand him with the Scandal of a Lalcivious to revoles Life; giving out, that he died of the Pox:him. Which Northampton expressed to Somerfet in a Letter; telling him of ftrange Sores and Ulcers found upon his Body, ugly to behold, thinking intolerably; the People forced to throw him in a loofe sheet into a Costin, and bury him privately on Tower-Hill: Concluding, That God is gracious in cutting off evil Instruments before their time. Which Sentence (while he was writing it) reflected the Judgment on himfelf; for Northampton having a great Influence in the Kingdom, being a prime Counfellor to the King, and intimate with Somerfet, they Two gralping all Power; and Northampton having the better Head to manage it, the Miscarriages were, not without cause, imputed to him. For being a Papist, he did not only work upon Somerset to pervert him (by letting him fee there was a greater Latitude for the Conscience in that Religion) but got him to procure many Immunities for the Papitts, as the King's best affected Subjects. And being Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports, he gave free Access to Priests and Jesuits, that abundantly flock'd again into the Kingdom, the Operation of the last Parliament having now lost the Vertue. And a Letter being difcover'd which he had written to Cardinal Bellarmine, wherein he expresses the Condition of the Times; and the King's Importunity compelled him to be a Protestant in show, yet nevertheless his Heart stood firm with the Papifts, and if there were Cause he would express it; with much more to this Purpose. These Things first mutter'd, then urg'd against him, touch'd him to the Heart; fo that he retir'd, Northamp-disposed of his Estate, and died. He had a ton dies. great Mind tending towards eminent Things, which he was the better able to effect, by living a Batchelor to an old Age, being always attended (and he loved it) with Gentlemen of Quality, to whom he was very Bountiful. His Affections were also much raised to Charity, as by the Alms-House he erected appears; and his Works shew him to be a great Getter. But leaving no Iffue to Propagate his Name, he built a fair House by Charing-Cross to continue it; which it lost foon after his Death, being called Susfield-bousse for a time, and now Northumberland-bouse. Such Changes there are in the World's Measures! His Body was carried to be buried at Dover, because he was Warden of the Cinque-Ports, as was reported by some of his Followers; but it was Vulgarly rumour'd to be transported to Rome. But these Actions of his about Overbury lying Dormant, made no great noife at this time against him; but when they broke out, they laid upon his Name as great a Stench as Insamy or Odium could produce.

But this Malicious Proceeding was no hindrance to the Establishment of that Colony, nor is the Blame to be laid upon the Function, for some of the †Bishops in these Times were Holy Men, and great Lights to the Truths of God) but on fuch, whose Ambition made them endeavour more after Earthly things than Hea-venly, and lefs to pleafe God than the King, (as Cardinal Woolfer long tince confessed of himself) and the Malice of Evil Men may protract, but it shall never destroy what God intends to build up. A Wonderful Light breaking forth in the West-part of the World; this Latter Age discovering the Nakedness of the Nations both in Body and Soul; which carried a Refemblance of the Creation of a new World, or at least the Imperfection of the Old. A vast Territory, and few People.

The Spaniards, the first Discoverers, being more covetous to grafp, than well able to plant, took Poffeffion of the most precious Places; fo that the English, French and Dutch, caught but what they left. Sir Walter Raleigh, and others (after Sir Francus Drake) found out that Country now called Virginia, which was long fince try now caned prigina, which was long lince planted with a Colony. And in that Track of Land more Northerly, within the Degrees of 40 and 48 of Latitude, lies New-England, a Climate Temperate and Healthful, but not fo much as the Old. It is rather a low than a high Land feel to Beaker Core to Proposers Land, full of Rocky Capes or Pronontories. The Inmost Parts of the Country are Mountainous, intermix'd with fruitful Valleys and large Lakes, which want not flore of good Fifh. The Hills are no where Barren (though in fome places Stony) but fruitful in Trees and Grass. There are many Rivers, fresh Brooks and Springs, that run into the Sea. The Rivers are good Harbours, and abound with plenty of excellent Fish; yet are they full of Falls, which makes them not Navigable far into the Land. The Seas bordering the Shores are studded with Illands, about which great Shoals of Fifnes (Cod, Haddock, and fuch like) do wan-tonly fport themfelves. The main Land doth nourish abundance of Deer, Bears, Wolves, and a Beast called Moose, peculiar to those Regions; and the Rivers and Ponds are stor'd with fome Beavers, Otters, and Musquashes. There are also divers kinds of small Beasts, but the most offensive are Foxes. Fowls there are store in their feveral Seafons, as Turkies, Geefe and Ducks; and the Soil naturally produces wild Vines with very large Bunches of Grapes; but the extremity of Heat and Cold, hinder their just Temper. There are many other Fruits which are very good, with Plants, whose Rinds or Barks transcends our Hemp or Flax; both Air and Earth concurring to bring forth most things that Industry and Art can provide for the Use of Man.

The First that fent a Colony into this Country, firth 1606. was the Lord Chief Juttice Popham, in the Year terwards Earl of Holland, a Gentleman of Ex-perfecuting fuch as trangreffed the Laws among 4.8eg.12-Christians; living like Beasts of Prey to the prejudice of Travellers. And in this he had a receiving special Aim and Hope also, to establish Christian Laws among Infidels; and by Domestical, to chace away those Ferous and Indomitable Creatures, that infested the Land: Brave and Gallant Spirits having ever such Publick Ends. But Planters are like Alchymists, they have fomething in Projection, that many times fails in Production. It is conceived the Romans were not well advised to fettle one of their first Colonics at Mullon in Effex, whose Soil about neither yet sound, nor Air falubrious. And the first opening of Ground in a Climate not Natural, hath an extraordinary Operation upon the Bodies of Men, whose Senses must comply to give Entertainment to a Stranger, that often spoils the Place where it finds Hospitality. For the first Planters in New-England having scated themselves low, few of them were left to direct those that succeeded in a better way. Yet People, by dear Experience, over-came it by degrees, being Yearly fupplied by Men, whole Industry and Affections raught them, there was more Hope to find Safety in N.w-England than in the Old.

Though these found some stop, yet our great some story Favourite, the Earl of Somerset, and his Busi- Devices nels, runs finoothly, without Ruh, fince Over to get bury's Death. But he must alter his Bias, and Money go less, or find fome new Ways to bring in Moneys; the Revenues of the Crown are not competent to maintain fuch vast Expences, accumulated by his Riot, though he had all the Earl of Westmorland's Lands at his Marriage, and Creation, added to his Earldom. must be therefore a new Order of Baroners made, in number Two hundred, that must be next Degree to Barons; and these must pay a Thousand Pound a-piece for their Honour; having it by Patent under the Great Seal, and continued to Posterity with the Title of Knights. Some of these new Honourable Men (whose Wives Pride, and their own Prodigalities, had pumpt up to it) were fo drain'd, that they had not Moitture to maintain the Radical Humour, but wither'd to nothing. This Money thus rais'd, is pretended for planting the North of freland; but it found many other Chanels, be-fore it came to that Sea. And though at our King's first access to the Crown, there was a glut of Knights made, yet after some time he held his hand, lest the Kingdom should be cloy'd with them: And the World thriv'd fo well with fome, that the Price was afterwards brought up to Three hundred Pounds a piece. But now again, the poor Courtiers were fo Indigent, that Sixty Pounds would purchase a Knighthood, the King wanting other Means to gratifie his Servants

Yet he was of fo free a Nature, and careless The of Money, when he had it (though folicitous King's to get it) that he Battled in his own Bounty. For being one Day in the Gallery at Whitehall, and none with him but Sir Henry Rich (who was fecond Son to the Earl of Warwick) after-1606. A Man highly Renown'd in his time, for cellent Natural Parts, but youthfully Expensive;

[†] From this Character which the Author gives feveral Bishops of that time, it appears he was no Sectarian or Disference, as some would pretend, but a Moderate Churchman

|| It's true, the Earl of Salahury had given the King a Project for Erecting this new Order of Knighthead some time before, in order to slapply in Some Measure his supply Costers: But it was Somerfer that got it put in Practice, and he had most of the Money arising from it.

Maxwel told him, he wish'd he had so much Money; Marry fhelt then Harry, (faith the King) and presently commanded the Porters to carry it to his Lodging, with this Expession; You think non you have a great Purchist; but I am more delighted to think how much I have glored and in the first hard with the mach the second with I have pleafured you in giving this Money, than you can be in receiving it. This Story intervenes, to show the Temper of his Mind.

About this time also Gold was rais'd to Two Shillings in the Pound, occasion'd from the high Value fer upon it abroad, which made the Merchants transport it. But the first Inhancers can make their Markets, by ingrofting great Sums; especially the Payments of those Times, and all this King's Reign, being for the most part in Gold, for that it might be call'd the Golden Age; that it is a Wonder now what Gulph hath swallow'd those great Sums, if their Golden Wings be not flown to the Sun-ring. But these little Projects will bring in but small Store of Money to maintain the Work: Many fuch Materials must go to make up a Royal Building; and little Streams will not easily fill a Ciftern that hath many Issues. A Parliament can furnish all; but who dare venture on fuch Refractory Spirits.

Yet there was a Generation about the Court, ment un- that, to please and humour Greatness, underdertaken took a Parliament, as Men prefuming to have Friends in every County and Borough, who (by their Power among the People) would make Election of fuch Members for Knights and Burgeffes, as fhould comply folely to the Kings Defires; and Some fit is the Head and Chief of these Undertakers: But this was but an Embrion, and became an Abortive. The English Freedom cannot be lost by a few base and tame Spirits, that would unmake them-felves and their Posterity to aggrandize one Man. For the Parliament meeting according to their Summons, fuch Faces appear'd there as made the Court droop; who, inftead of contributing to the King's Wants, lay open his Wafts, especially upon the Scots, with whom they desire Medicatem Lingue, a Share of Favour; the Bread (by our Saviour's Rule) properly belonging to the Children of the Kingdom. dom. And they befeech his Majesty to stop the Current of suture Access of that Nation, to make Residence here, having enough to eat up their own Crums. They enquire into the Causes of the unexpected Encrease of Popish Recufants fince the Gunpower-Plot, the Detestation whereof (they thought) should have utterly extinguished them; and they find it owing to the Admission of Popish Nobility into his Councils; the filencing of many watchful and diligent Ministers; † the divers Treaties his Majesty hath entertain'd, not only for the Marriage of the deceased Prince Henry, but for Prince Charles, that now liveth, with the berlain, fucceeding his Father-in-law the Earl Queen opmores.

Miscarriages in Government; which the King willing to have conceal'd, flop'd them in their Courfe, diffolving the Parliament, and committing to the Tower and other Prisons (the Beginning of Encroachment upon the Publick Liberties) fuch as were most active for the Common Good.

These fair Blossoms not producing the hop'dfor Fruit, they find out new Projects to manure the People, different much in Name and Nature, a Benevolence extorted, a Free-Cift a- A Benegainst their Wills was urg'd upon them; and volence they that did not give in their Money, must required give in their Names, which carried a kind of Fright with it. But the most knowing Men (like so many Pillars to the Kingdom's Liber-ties) supported their Neighbour's tottering Refolutions, with affuring them, That these kind of Benevolences were against Law, Reason, and Religion.

First, against Law, being prohibited by divers Acts of Parliament, and a Curfe pronounced against the Infringers of them.

Secondly, against Reason, that a particular Man should oppose his Judgment and Discretion, to the Wisdom and Judgment of the Kingdom affembled in Parliament, who have

there denied any fuch Aid.

Thirdly, against Religion, that a King, violating his Oath, (taken at his Coronation, for maintaining the Laws, Liberties and Cuftoms, of the Realm) should be affisted by the People in an Act of fo much Injustice and Impiety. These, and many other Arguments, inftilled into the People by fome good Patriots, were great Impediments to the Benevolence; fo that they got but little Money, and loft a great deal of Love: For no Levies do fo much decline and abase the Love and Spirits of the People, as unjust Levies. Subsidies get more of their Money, but Exactions enflave the Mind; for they either raise them above, or depress them beneath, their Sufferings, which are equally mischievious, and to be avoided.

But the Joy continu'd not long; for after fome Fourteen Days Interview, they parted again. Sir Rulph tilmwood, who had been Lieger-Ambassador with the States in the Natherlands, Ameliandor With the Sacon the the Market Ambalianor With the Sacon Service had merited 1614 for much from the King, that he made him becretary of State: The Queen closely with him the better to discover Somefiels Milaurings: and he was ready enough to oblige her; for somorfet made him but an Underling, grafping all Publick Employments into his own Hand, not caring whom he difobliged, or what Malice he pull'd upon himfelf; for, like a Colois, he itood the Brunt of all the Tempel's of Envy, making those that carried the greatest Sail to ftrike and come under him. fer any Place in Court, or Dignity in State, to be beltow'd, which was not fiveetned with his Smile that gave it, or their Bounty that enjoy'd it; fo that (it was thought) he engrofied a Mass of Coin, as if his Soul intended to take her Ease. This Pride and Covetousness added to his other Miscarriages such a Number of to no oner americanages nen a Number of Underminers, that he shoot upon a tottering Foundation, having no Support but the King's Favour, which, whether by Providence from above, or Purpofes below, (both ever concurring from the Will to the Means) was foon removed.

George Vil. For about this Time the King cast his Eye lers a Fa- upon a young Gentleman, so rarely moulded that he meant to make him a Masterpiece: His Name was George Villers; he was fecond Son to Sir George Villiers, a Knight of Leicestershire, by a fecond Venter: For the old Man coming to Coleborton, in that Councy, to visit his Kinf-Colebriton, in that County, wo had a young woman the Lady Beauseart, found a young Gentlewoman of that Name ally'd, and yet a Servant to the Lady, who being of a handforme Presence and Countenance, took his Affections, and he married her. This was the Soil where the glorious Cedar grow; who, having only the Breeding and Portion of a younger Brother, with the Mother's Help and Travel, got the Addition of a French Garb, which brought him to the Court in no greater a Condition than Fifty Pounds a Year is able to maintain.

The King, stricken with this new Object, would not expose him to so much Hazard as the Malice of a jealous Competitor, nor himfelf to fo much Cenfure as to be thought changeable, and taken again with a fudden Affection; therefore he instructs some of his Confidents to bring him in by Degrees, who intimated the King Pleafure to him, that he flould wait Cup-bearer at large, being fo, at 100 great a Distance of Place to have any Mark of Favour for Sufpition to level at. And if the King had not receiv'd a new Impression thus, the old Character of Somerfet, that was imprinted in his Soul, could not to foon (as many Men thought) have been blotted out. But Courts that are the wifeft, though not the most virtuous Schools. do teach their Scholars to observe the Seasons and, by the Aftronomy of the Prince's Eve, to calculate what Fortune fuch Aspects and such Conjunctions may happily produce: And shey found so much as gave them Enzouragement to hear, and Boldness to diffeover, that which pull'd down the one, and fet up the other.

Sometfet's But Sometfet, that had the Public of Confei Decline, once always bonding at Overlain's Door, was an active to preferre himself, as his Boor, was a active to preferre himself, as his Boor, was no to ruine him: And fooding himself shaking, (though there was nothing yet had to he Charge but the imbezelling some of the Con-Jewels) he throws himself at the king's Feet acknowledging the great Truft his Majerly had with Envy, that joilles them in the way:) He therefore humbly befought his Mighetty to grant him a general Pardon for what was paid, that he might not be exposed to the Malice of those that would wrest all his Actions to the worst Meaning. The King, that raised this fair Edisco, being both to have it quite pull'd down again, gave Order for the drawing up of a general Pardon, in so ample and full a Manner, that it might rather Exceed than take Rife from any former Precedent: This the King fign'd, and fent to the Great Seal; but the Queen having Notice of it, and using her Power with the Lord Chancellor, gave ftop to the Seal till the King's coming to Town, (who was on his Progress in the West) and then what was mur-Frogress in the west of and then what was muster'd in Corners before, rung openly in the Streets: For the Apotheory's Boy that gave sir Thomas Overhay the Glifter, falling fick at Fluibing, reveal'd the whole Matter, which Sir Raiph Winnwood, by his Correspondents, had a full Relation of; and a small Breach being made, his Enemies, like the Noise of many Waters, rife up against him, following the Stream.

The King hearing of the Business, and what The King ill Sound it carried with it, (as it was fet out deferts to him) that in the Face of the Court, and so him. near his own Bosons, such poysonous Practices. should be perpetrated, and on one that was his Prisoner, he seem'd to be much mov'd with the Relation, and fending for the Judges, gave them ftrict Charge to examine the Matter throughly, imprecating a Curfe upon them and their Posterity, if they did not endeavour to dis-cover it; and if he did spare any guilty Person, he wish'd Gods Curse might light upon him, and his Posterity; so violent the King appear'd in Profecution of it: And away to Royfon he goes, and Somerfer with him; thither these Rumours came buzzing about his Ears, like a rising Storm upon a well-spread Oak; but he thought him-felf too firmly rooted in the King's Favour to be removed, therefore he went back to London, to still the Murmurs vented against him. Some say, the Lord Chief Justice Coke sent for him; upon which he went to the King with a Complaint, as taking it to be a great Prefumption; but the King made answer, Thou must go then; for if Coke feeds for me, I must go too. Others say, when he came to take his Leave of the King, he embrac'd and kiss'd him often, wish'd him to make haft back, shew'd an extream Passion to be without him; and his Back was no sooner rurn'd, but he said with a Smile, I shall never see by Face more. Whether either or both of thefe were fo cannot be afferted; but to London he went; his Countefs was apprehended (and comnitted to Cuftody in Elsek Fryars) before he same thither: He was no fooner there, but he was feiz'd on, and commended to the Charge of Dr. Muntain, Dean of Westminster; and then hey went on roundly with the Bufiness.

For a little before this, Wester was taken, and westernand examin'd; but, like a flubborn Piece, (un noul-the reft Led for Impression) nothing could be drawn tried from him: But God (by the Means and Pertivation of the Bishop of Lenden, Dr. King, a Man entinent for Piety in his Time) to arought upon his Heart, that the Eye of his oul being open'd to the Foulness of his Sin, he lifeover'd all; fo that the whole Confederacy were laid hold on; who falling into the Hands

But in the mean time, between Weston's standing mute, and his Trial, one Lumsden, a Scotchman, took upon him to make a false and libel-lous Relation of the Business, and delivers it to Henry Gib of the Bed-Chamber, to be put into the King's Hand; in which Writing he fallifies and perverts all that was done the first Day of Weston's Arraignment, turning the Edge of his Imputations upon the Lord Chief Justice Coke; which Bolt was boldly shot by him, but it was thought not to come out of his own Quiver; and it lighted into an ill Hand for him, for the King discover'd it, and left him an open Mark to that Justice he had traduc'd.

Weston was the first that suffer'd by the Hand Weston exof the Law; which Sir John Hollis, (after Earl of Clare) out of Friendship to Somerfet, and Sir fohn Wentworth, a Person debauch'd and riotous, (hoping, from the Beams of Somerfet's Favour, to increase his wanting Fortunes) strove to blast in the Spring; for they rode to Tybun, and urged him at his Execution to deny all, hoping that way to prevent the Autumn that followed: But Weston's Soul being prepar'd for Death, refisted their Temptations, sealing penitently the Truth of his Consession with his last Gasp. And this Attempt of Hollis, Wentworth, and Lumfden, to pervert Justice, being aggravated against them in the Star-Chamber by the King's Attorney, Sir Francis Bacon, they were fentenc'd there, and found the Reward of their Prefumption.

Mrs. Turner follow'd next: A Pattern of Pride and Luft; who having always given a loose Rein to her Life, she ran this Carrier at last into the Jaws of Death.

Sir forvis Ellowis, Lieutenant of the Tower, was the third, who suffer'd on Tower-Hill; a Man much pitied, being drawn in by the Allurements of Northampton to be a Spectator ra-ther than an Actor in this bloody Tragedy; but this Connivance coth him his Life. And being a Man full of Sorrow for his Offence, he left two Pillars behind him at his Death, for Watch Towers to all that pass by, in this Bark of frail Mortality, to prevent Shipwrack. One was, Not to vow any thing to God, but to perform it. The other was, Not to take a Pride in any Parts, tho' never so Excellent. For the first, he faid he was a great Gamester, and lov'd it; and having

He took a great Delight in his Pen, And that Pen (to use his own Words) which I was so proud of, bath struck me dead, and, like Absolon's Hair, bath banged me; for there drops a Word or two from my Pen, in a Letter to the Earl of Northampton, which upon my Salvation I am not able to answer At my Arraignment I pleaded hard for my Life, and protested mine Innocency; but when my own Pen came against me, I was not able to speak for my self, but food as one amazd, or that had no Tongue. Such Damps doth Guiltiness cast upon the Spirit!

The fifth and fixth were Somerfet and his Countefs. At her Arraignment, all the Letters that paffed betwixt Formm and the were read in open Court, and the Waxen and Brazen Poppets were made vifible, dancing up and down from Hand to Hand, which discover'd the Folly of her Actions: But the Earl and she being condemn'd, found the King's Mercy, and were, after fome time of Imprisonment in the Tower, fet at Liberry, holding their Lives by a Leafe of the King's Will, living in a private and almost ob-foure Condition: † Shewing in it, That ob-foure Content or Happiness can be truly established, but on the Foundation of Justice: For that Love that made them break through all Oppositions, (either by her declining to some new Object, (as was the common Rumour) or his inclining to Reluctancy for the old) grew fo weak, that it pin'd away, and they liv'd long after (tho' in one House) as Strangers one to another.

I some fet iiv'd to an old Age, in a very obscure Retreat, tho' visited sometimes by King James, but never by his Son King Charles I. He was suffer'd to enjoy the greatest part of his Estate, and thought himself ill us'd that he was not restou'd to the whole. We have a Letter of his to this purpose Printed in the Cabasa, wherein he complains to King James about the Delay he met with in that Business, and after a perplex d manner vindicates his nocency, or at least extensions his Grime. The whole of that Letter is couch'd in obscure Terms, and some Sentences require an Interpreter. Among other expostulatory Expressions, he hath these following: I have presend to this and (is the let a maken Jam Majes) a come cancer to up a this his letter. For the ite Asti of your Mercy, which are not communicable, nor the Cause of them, as being derived from the first Fire. For the ite Asti of your Mercy, which are not communicable, nor the Cause of them, as being derived from the first Fire. Main can be and the property of your worm stear, yet my Cause needs not hide is self, but attend the Dipute with any that would put upon it a marginous and beavy Shape. Some few Lines after, he tells the King, That the Grime whereapon he was judged whigh have been none, if his Majely's Hand had not one touched upon it; and that he fell rather for want if well Defending, than by the Violence or Force of any Prost; for (lays he I) is far spiden hylles, that it may be a Regelion. Have by the Violence or Force of any Prost; for The last Peciol of this Letter begins with another, yet dasker, Expression. I will say no further (continues he) nather that which Your Majely's doubted my Aprusit is fall into; for my Cause, nr my Confidence it not in that Difress is for to use that them of interession, he is remember Your whisply that I am the Workmanship of your Hansis, &c. 'To this Letter he ligns, Your Majely's Loyal Servant and Creature, Somerfet.

How hat any Expressions in this Letter may have Relation to a Report spread about at that time, of S

A Reg. 13. sommess at last: Pardon the Sharpness of these Expressions, for they are for the Glory of God, An Christi who often makes his Punishments (in the Ballance of his Justice) of equal Weight with our Sins.

For his Person, he was rather well compacted inhisLife, than tall; his Features and Favour comely and handsome, rather than Beautiful; the Hair of his Head Flaxen, that of his Face tinctur'd with Yellow, of the Sycambrian Colour: In his own Nature, of a gentle Mind, and affable Difpo-fition, having publick Affections, till they were all fwallow'd up in this Gulf of Beauty, which did precipitate him into these dangerous Contrivances: For that which made his Friendship falle, diverted his publick Affection to his private Interest; and when he found himself guilty of what he thought might ruine him, he grew covetous to heap that together, which he thought might preferve him: So that at one Breach that our Corruptions make, many Mischiefs follow in the Crowd. And if he had not met with such a Woman, he might have been a good Man: But Trials and strong Temptations enhanceth the Price of Virtue; the Conflict is gallant, but to be overcome, debaseth a Man the more, by how much his Fall is the greater.

I was loth to separate these Delinquents in their Trials (being close woven) by the length of Sir Francis Bacon's Speech in the Star-Chamber, against Hollis, Wentworth, and Lumsden. But knowing what an Ornament his Oratory will give to this Story, and how usual it was for ancient Historians to infert their Harangues of State, as well as Military Orations, not decline this, tho' it comes almost in the Rear; the rather because it will serve as a Seal and Confirmation of what is formerly written.

And thus it was:

Becon's

THE Offence wherewith I shall charge the three Offenders at the Bar, is a Mis-Special of demeanour of a high Nature, tending to the the Star Defacing and Scandal of Justice, in a great Coamber. Cause Capital. The particular Charge is chis:

'The King, among many of his Princely ' Virtues, is known to excel in that proper Virtue of the Imperial Throne, which is Justice : It is a Maîter Virtue, unto which the other three are Ministrant, and do Service: Wifdom ferveth to discover and discern of Innocencies and Guiltiness; Fortitude is to profe-cute and execute; and Temperance so to carty Justice, as it be not passionate in the Purfuit, nor confus'd in Valuing Persons, nor precipitate in Time.

For this his Majesty's Virtue of Justice, God hath of late raifed an Occasion, and erected (as it were) a Stage, or Theatre, much for his Honour, to fhew and Act in it, in the purfuit of the violent untimely Death of Sir Tho-'mas Overbury, and therein cleaning the Land from Blood: For if Blood doth cry to Hea-ven in God's Ears, this is a Stench, I may fay, in the Notirils of God and Man.

This Work of Justice, the greater and more excellent it is, you will foon conclude, the greater is the Offence of any that have fought to affront or traduce it. And therefore, before I defcend unto the particular Charge of these Offenders, I will say somewhat of the Crime of Impoyforment; fomewhat of the particular Circumstances of this Fact upon Overbury; and thirdly, of the King's great and worthy Care and Carriage in this

'The Offence of Impoyfonment is most tru- A. Reg 14. ly figured in that Device and Description on the Nature of Caius Caligula, That he was Lutum sanguine maceratum, Mire cemented with Blood: For as it is one of the highest Offences in Guiltiness, so it is the basest of all others in the Minds of Offenders. Treasons Magnum aliquid spectant, They aim at great Things; but this is vile and bale. I have found in the Book of God, Examples of all other Offences, but not any one of an Impoyforment, or an Impoyfoner. I find Mention of fome Fear of catual Impoyfonments; when the Waters were corrupted and bitter, they came complaining in a fearful manner, Master, Mors in olla: And I find Mention of Poyfons of Beaßs and Serpents; The Poyfons of ziss is under their Lips, faith the Psilm; but I find no Mention in a Humane Creature of a malicious and murtherous Impoyfonment. Let their Table be made a Snare, is certainly most true of Impoyfonment; but that I think was meant of the Treachery of Friends, that were participant of the fame Table.

This is an Offence that hath two Spurs of offending, Spes perficiendi, & Spes celandi, It is easily committed, and easily conceal'd. It is an Offence, that is, Tanquam fagitta notle volans, It is the Arrow that flies by Night, it discerns not whom it hits; for many times the Poyfon is laid for one, and another takes it, As in Sanders's Case, where the poyson'd Apple was laid for the Mother, and the Child And so in that notorious Case, whereupon the Statute of 22 Hen. VIII. cap. 9. was made, where the Intent being but to poyfon one or two, Poyfon was put in a little Veffel of Barm that ftood in the Kitchin at the Bithep of Rochester's House, of which, Barm, Pottage or Grewel was made, wherewith 17 of the Bishop's Family were poyson'd; nay, dithe binds Framily were polytond; nay, divers of the Poor that came to the Biflop's Gate, and had the Pottage in Alms, were likewife poyfon'd. Here is great Talk of Impoyfonment, I hope I am fafe, I have no Enemies, nor any thing Men san long for; that is all one; for he may fit at the Table by one for whom Poyfon is prepar'd, and have a Drench of his Cup, or of his Portage, and fo (as the Poet faith) Concidit infelix alieno vulnere, He may die another Man's Death; and therefore it was most gravely, judiciously, and properly provided by that Statute, That Impoysonment should be High-Treason, because whatfoever Offence tendeth to the utter Sub-' version and Dissolution of Humane Society, is 'in the Nature of High-Treason.

But it is an Offence, that I may truly fay of it, Nonell nostriguers we fanguinis; It is, Thanks be to God, rare in the Ille of Britain: It is neither of our Country, nor of our Church: 'You may find it in Rome and Italy, there is a 'Religion for it; if it fhould come among us, 'it were better living in a Wilderness than in a c Court.

For the particular Fact upon Overbury, I knew the Gentleman, it is true, his Mind was great, but it mov'd not in any great good Order; yet certainly it did commonly fly at good Things; and the greatest Fault that ever I heard by him, was, That he made his Friend his Idol. But take him as he was, the King's Prisoner in the Tower, and then see how the Case stands. In that Place the State is (as it were) a Refpondent to make good the Body of the Prifoner; and if any thing happen to of the Prifoner; and it any times warred him there, it may (the not in this Cale, yet in an Christi c

A Reg 14. ' in some others) make an Aspersion and Reflection upon the State it felf: For the Person is utterly void of his own Defence; his own ' Care and Providence can ferve him to nothing: ' He is in the Cuffody and Prefervation of Law; and we have a Maxim in our Law, That 'when a State is in Prefervation of Law, no-'thing can deftroy it, or hurt it; and God forbid but the like should be in Persons; and therefore this was a Circumstance of great Aggravation.

Laftly, To have a Man chased to Death, in a manner, as it appears now by Matter of Record, (for other Privacy of Caufe I know 'not) by Poyson after Poyson: First Refaker, then Arfnick, then Mercury Sublimate, then Sublimate again: It is a thing would aftonish 'Man's Nature to hear it. The Poets feign, 'That the Furies had Whips, and that they were "corded with poyfoned Snakes; and a Man would think that this Subject were the very Case: To have a Man tied to a Post, and to focurge him to death with Serpents; for fo truly may Diverfity of Poylons be termed. It pleafed my Lord Chief Juffice to let me

' know that which I heard with great Comfort, which was the Charge that his Majesty gave to himself, and the rest of the Commissioners in this Case, worthy to be written in Letters of Gold, That the Business should be carry'd without Touch to any that was innocent, not only without Impeachment, but without Afpersion, which was a most Noble and Princely
Caution; for Mens Reputations are tender Things, and ought to be, like Christ's Coat, without Seam. And it was more to be refpected in this Cafe, because it met with two great Persons; a Nobleman that his Majesty had favour'd and advanc'd, and his Lady, be-' ing of a great and Honourable House; tho' I think it be true that the Writers fay, That there is no Pomegranate fo fair of found, but may have a perished Kernel. Nay, I see plainly in those excellent Papers of his Ma-jesty's own Hand-writing (as so many Beams of Justice isluing from that Virtue which so much doth shine in him) the Business so evenly carry'd without Prejudice, whether it were a true Accusation on the one part, or a Practice or false Accusation on the other, as shew'd plainly that his Majesty's Judgment was, Tunquam tabula rafa, as a clean pair of Tables, and his Ears, Tanguam janua aperta, as a Gate not one fide open, but wide open to the Truth, asit should be discover'd. And I may truly affirm, That there was never in this Kingdom, nor in any other, the Blood of a private Gentleman vindicated, Cum tanto motu Regni; or to say better, Cum tanto plausu Regni: If it had concern'd the King or Prince, there could not have been greater or better Commissioners. The Term hath been almost turn'd into a Jufitium, or Vacancy; the People being more willing to be Lookers on in this Business, than Proceeders in their own. There hath been no Care of Discovery omitted, no Moment of Time loft; and therefore I will conclude, with the Saying of Solomon, this part of my Speech, Gloria Dei celare rem, and Gloria Regis scrutari rem, It is the Glory of God to conceal a Thing, and it is the Glory of the King to find it out: And his Majesty's Honour is the greater; for that he shewed to the World this Business as it hath Relation to my Lord of Somerfet, (whose Case in no fort I do fore-judge, being ignorant of the Secrets of the Cause, but take him as the Law takes him, hitherto for a Suspect): I say, the King hath, to his great A. Res. 14. Honour, shewd, That were any Man in fuch a Case of Blood, as the Signet of his Right 1616.

Hand, (as the Scripture faith) he would put him off.

'Now I will come to the particular Charge of these Gentlemen. And first I will, by way of Narrative, relate the Fact, with the Occafion of it.

This wretched Man Weston, who was the Actor, or Mechanical Party in this Impoyfonment, the first Day being indicted by a very substantial Jury of selected Citizens, to the Number of Nineteen, who found Billa vera; yet nevertheless at the first stood mute: But after some Days Intermission, it pleased God to cast out the Dumb Devil, and he put himself upon his Trial, and was by a Jury of great Value, upon his own Confessions, and other Testimonies, found guilty: So as Thirty and one sufficient Jurors have pass'd upon him, and he had also his Judgment and Execution awarded. After this, being in Preparation for another World, he fent for Sir Thomas Overbury's Father, and falling down upon his Knees, with great Remorfe and Compunction, ask'd him Forgiveness; and afterwards again, of his own Motion, defir'd to have his like Prayer of of Forgiveness recommended to his Mother, who was absent. And at both times, out of the Abundance of his Heart, confessed, that he was to die justly, and that he was worthy of Death. And after again at his Execution, (which is a kind of fealing time of Confessions) even at the Point of Death, (the there were Tempters about him) he did again confirm publickly, That his Examinations were true, and that he had been justly and honourably dealt with. So here is a Period of this Man, which was the Subject of this Calumny or Affront of Justice; wherein Mr. Lumsden plays his part first, who in the time between Weston's standing mute and his Trial, frames a most edious and libellous Relation, containing as many Untruths as Lines; fets it down in Writing with his own Hand, and delivers it to one of the Bed-Chamber to be put into the King's Hands, falfifying all that was done the Fift Day of Westers than language and that was come the fift Day of Westers' Arraignment, turning the Pike and Point of his Imputations upon the Lord Chief Justice of England; whose Name thus occurring, I cannot pass by, and yet I cannot skill of this same Flattery, or Vulgar Attribute; but this I will say of him, and I would fay as much to Ages, That never Man's Person and his Place were better met in a Bufiness, than my Lord Coke, and my Lord Chies

Justice, in the Case of Overbury.
'Now for the Person of Mr. Lumsden, I know ' he is a Scotch Gentleman, and thereby more ignorant of our Laws; but I cannot tell whether this doth extenuate his Fault, or increase it; for as it may extenuate it in respect of Ignorance, so it doth aggravate it much in re-spect of Prefumption, to meddle in that he un-derstood not, unless some other Man's Cun-ning wrought upon this Man's Boldness. The Intuition of a Slander into a King's Earis, of all Forms of Libels and Slanders, the worst. is true, that Kings may keep fecret their Information, and then no Man can enquire af-ter them, while they are shrined in their Breast: But where a King is pleased that a Man shall answer for his false Information, divers Precedents of flanderous Petitions have ' been as feverely punish'd, as flanderous Libels.

A Rig. 14. For the Offence of Sil Journal of Sir John Holla, which was, to feandalize the An christic Juffice already path, or to cut off the Thread 1616. of fomething that is to come, these two Genderic Silvers of the Silvers of S tlemen came mounted on Horfeback, and in 'a ruffling and facing Manner, prefum'd to Examine Weston, whether he did Poyson Overbury, or no: Directly crofs to that which had been Try'd and Judg'd. For what was the Point tried? That Weston had Poyson'd Overbury: And Sir John Wentworth's question was, Whether he did Poyson him? A direct Contradictory. Whereupon Western answer'd, That he didhim wrong. And turning to the Sheriff, faid, You promised me I should not be troubled at this time; and yet nevertheless Wentworth pres'd him to answer, that he might pray with him. I know not that Sir John Wentworth is an Ec-clefiaftick, that he should cut any Man from Communion of Prayer; and for all this vexing of the Spirit of a poor Man, now in the Gate of Death, Wellon flood conftant, and Gate of Beath, Western thous contents, and said, I die not unworthily, my Lord Chief Justice bath my Mind under my Hand; and he is an Howardbe and Just Jusge. Sir John Hellis was not so much a Questionist, but wrought upon the other Questions; and, like a Counsellor, wished him to discharge his Conscience, and to satisfie the World: What World I marvel! It was the World at Tyburn: For the World at Guildball, and the World at London, were fatisfied before; Teste, the Bells that rang every where. But Men have got a Fashion now a Days, that Two or Three Bufy-bodies will take upon them the Name of the World, and broach their own Conceit, as if it were a general Opinion. Well, what more? When they could not work upon Weston, Sir John " Hollis, in an Indignation, turn'd about his Horfe, as the other was turning to his Death, and faid, he was forry of fuch a Conclusion: That was, to have the State Honour'd or Juftify'd.

' Sir John Hollis's Offence hath another Appendix, before this in time, which was at the Day of Tryal. He prefum'd to give his Verdict openly, That if he were of the Jury ' he would not doubt what to do. Marry, he faith, he cannot well tell whether he lpoke this before the Jury had given up their Verdict, or after. Wherein there is little gain'd; ' For, whether he were a Prejuror, or a Postjuror, the one was to Prejudice the Jury, the other was to attaint them.

The Offence of these Gentlemen is greater and more dangerous than is conceiv'd. We have no Span sh Inquisition; no Justice in a Corner; no Gagging of Men's Mouths at their Death, but they may speak freely to the I aft; but then it must come from the free Motion of the Party, not by tempting of Questions. The Questions that are asked ought to tend to further revealing of their own, or others Guiltiness: But to use a Queflion in the Nature of a crofs Interrogatory, to fallifie that which is Res Judicata, is intolerable. That were to erect a Court, or Com-million of Review at Tyburn, against the Court of Westminster: For if the Answer be according to the Judgment paft, it adds credit to Juffice: If it be contrary, it derogateth nothing; yet it subjecteth the Majesty of Juflice to a popular vulgar Talk and Opinion. My Lords, These are great and dangerous My Lords, These are great and dangerous Offences: For if we do not Maintain Justice, 'Justice will not Maintain us.

Then the Examinations being read, and further aggravated against these three Gentlemen, tire, follow'd him from her House; but stay-

For the Offence of Sir John Wentworth, and there passed Judgment upon them of Fine and A.Rig. 14. Imprisonment.

Sir Thomas Monfon, another of the Counteffes An. Christian Counteffes Countef Agents in this Poysoning Contrivance, had past one days Tryal at Guildhall. But the Lord Chief Sie Thomas Justice Coke, in his Rhetorical Flourishes at his Monson ar-Arraignment, vented fome Expressions (which raign'd he either deduced from Northampton's affuring the Lieutenant of the Tower, that the making away of Sir Tho. Overbury would be acceptable to the King; or from some other secret Hint recciv'd) as if he could discover more than the Death of a private Person; intimating, tho' not plainly, that Overbury's untimely Remove had fomething in it of Retaliation, as if he had been guilty of the fame Crime against Prince Henry; bleffing himself with Admiration at the Horror of such Actions. In which he flew fo high a Pitch, that he was taken down by a Court Lure; Sir Thomas Monson's Tryal laid aside, and he soon after fet at Liberty; and the Lord Chief Juftice's Wings were clipt for it ever after.

And it was rumour'd, that the King (heightned to fo much Paffion by this Eruption of Sir Edward Coke's) went to the Council Table, and kneeling down there, desir'd God to lay a Curse upon him and his Posterity for ever, if he were confenting to Overbury's Death. But this cannot he afferted, being above our Sphere; yet as Mathematicians do propose to themselves imaginary Circles, for the feveral Motions in the Heavens; and though there be none discover'd, yet they find the Effects of what they appre-hend: So the fudden stopping of Monson's Tryal, put strange Imaginations into Mens Heads; and those seconded by Reports too high for private Discovery, their Operation only falling under the common Notion. But the Lord Chief The Lord Justice was blain'd for flying out of his way; Chief Juthat having enough to profecute the Bufinefs, flice bla-he would grafp after more till he loft all: For med. this Crime was thought Second to none but the Gunpowder-Plot; That would have blown up all indeed at a Blow, (a Merciful Cruelty!) This would have done the fame by Degrees, a Lingring, but as fure a way; one by one might have been cull'd out, till all Oppofers had been remov'd. Befides, the other Plot was Scandalous to Rome, making Popery odious; This was scandalous to the Gofpel ever fince the first Nullity. The Devil could not have invented a more Mischievous Practice to Church and State.

The Lady Arabella dying about this time in The Lady the Tower, fet Mens Tongues and Fears and Arabella work, that she went the same way. Such Missidies. chief doth one Evil Action introduce, that it makes a great Rode for Jealousie to pursue after it. The Lady was Daughter to Charles Stuart, younger Brother to our King's Father by Elizubeth Carvendilh, who was married fome Years paft to Sir William Seymour, Son to the Lord Beauchamp, and Granchild to Edward Earl of Hernford; both at fome distance ally'd to the Crown, therefore such a Conjunction would not be admitted in the Royal Almanack; fo dreadful is every Apparition that comes near Princes Titles. Sir William Seymour for the Mar-riage was committed to the Tower, and the Lady Arabella contin d to nei Fronto de Fronto But after fome Impriforment, they conclude to escape beyond Sea together; appointing to account to the Thames. She being dead, Sir William Seymour got Leave to return home, and Marry'd fince to the Lady Frances, Daughter to the late noble Earl of Ellen; a Lady, in whose Breast dwells as much Honour as can be derived from noble Progenitors, by whom he hath a very hopeful Iffue; and by the Death of his Grandfather was

Earl, and now is Marquis of Hertferd. And now the Temples of Jonus being flut, Warlike Abiliments grew rufty, and Bellona put on Masking-Attire; for Second bought her Peace at a good Rate, and Ireland found the Fruits of hers growing up to her Hand Thofe Light that had great Effates (though rude enough) the King suppled and tam'd with Honours; and they that had little, were content calmly to fuck in what they had, and battel'd by it; fo that they wanted nothing but Moderation to make them Happy. Thete Halcion Days shin'd round about us. The Influence of our King's peaceable Mind had almost an Universal Operation. Spain's Ambition was contented to be bounded by the Pyrene Hills and the Atlantick Ocean, fucking in the Fruits of Italy and Sicily, and hoarding up the Treasures of the Indies; willingly ing up the Treatures of the Indies; willingly inging a Requiem to the Netherlands. Finds wanting Exercise, surfaced with Diseases at Home, which by Fits broke out into Tumours among themselves. The Germans swell'd into a Drepsy of Voluptiousness, by Plenty, and the Sweets of Peace. Politick Bodies are like Natural; full Feeding contracts groß Humours, which will have vent. Only such Exercise as may refine, and keep the Spirits active, and diget the groffer and fuliginous Matter, strengtheas the Nerves of a Kingdom, or Republick. Nothing now but Bravery and Feafting; the Parents of Debauchery and treating; the Parents of Debauchery and Rior flourished among us. There is no Theam for History, when Men Spill more Drink than Blood; when Plots and Contrivances for Luft, aced in dark Corners, are more practifed than Strategies. gems in War; and when the Stages with filken Pageants and Poppets, that flacken the Sinews, are more frequented than those Theatres of Honour, where Industry brawns and hardens the Arms: Peace is a great Blefling, if it bring not a Curfe with it; but War is more happy in its Effects than it, especially if it takes away the Distemper that grows by long Surfeits, without destroying the Body. But since these Buskind Ornaments are wanting, we must im-bellish our Discourses with such Passages as paced up and down in the Sock of Peace.

The King There had been in Prince Henry's rime a thinks of Treaty of Marriage betwitt him and a Daugha March ter of Spain; which took no effect. Our King was real in his Intentions, not willing to have his Son's Beams to display themselves but in a Royal Horizon. The Spanish Policy clouded the Business with Delays; whether from the old Grudge that was betwixt Queen Katharine and Henry the Eighth, or the Difference be-tween the Nations in Religion? But the Spanish Courtefie, being loth directly and point-blank to tell our King, he liked not the Conjunction, went with a flow-pac'd Gravity, flich as he went with a flow-pac'd Gravity, fuch as he tion fhould laft longer than his old Clothes, the thought befired the Civility of Princes, and Reader might well dink it a Romance, fagave a little Light to hope that it might be accomplished. But Salvery and others, that read complished. But Salvery and others, that reader the salvery than Reality.

Compliments, which like the Air that gave an Chr. is them being, foon vanished away. After this, our King 'Thoughts caft about, how he might provide a fit Match for Prince Charles, who shin'd in the same Sphere of Honour (that his Brother left for a Better) but not fo much enlightned with the Peoples Love, being lefs. Active and Splendid, and (that I may not call it Sullenness) more Refervid. The Garnan Dames were discoursed on (where his Sitter thin'd in her Glory) as being of the fame Religion, and more fuitable in Christian Policy; but they were (in a manner) Subjects to the Emperor; and that would give an Allay to the Super-elementary Extraction of Kings, which should be of a higher Origine, to amuse, and that they might be the more admir'd by their People, and therefore not fo fitting in State-Policy. And feeing there were small. Hopes expected from Spain, a Daughter to Henry the Great, late King of France, was aim'd at, and Sir Thomas Elmondt, our King's Lieger Ambassador, had slone before the time I mode hit little in the state of the state before this time) made his little Addresses supericially, and founded the Chanel; but he met forne Rocks and Remoras in the Way, fo that he could not discover clearly their Intentions; and the King was loth to express himself plain-ly, left he should receive an Affront. And now inding (as he thought it civilly necessary) an Extraordinary Amballador to congratulate the King of Franch his Marriage with Amba the Fina of Spain, he thought it good Policy take this Occasion to make a stricter Scrutiny, whether these were approximated and the second policy of th whether there were any Ground to rest upon for matching his Son.

And who is fitter for that Employment, be- The Lord

ing only for Courtship and Bravery, than the Hayer sent Lord Hayes, a Gentleman whose Composition into of Mind tended that way? He was Born in Scotland, where Bravery was in no Superfluity; bred up in France, where he could not have is in Extravagancy; but he found it in England, and made it his Vanity. The King had a large Hand, and he had a large Heart; and though he were no great Favourite ever, yet he was never but in Favour. He with a great Train of young Noblemen, and other Courtiers of Eminency, suited themselves with all those Ornaments that could give Lustre to fo dazelling an appearance as Love, and the Congratulation of it carried with it. All the Study was, who should be most Glorious; and he had the happiest Fancy, whose Invention could express something novel, neat, and unusual, that others might admire. So that Hun-618. in England: For the last Parliament it was moved by some well-aff cted to Reformation of the Abril. of Excels in Apparal, that there might be a Regulation of this kind of Gallantry, to the dillinguishing of Men one from another: For (it was faid) fome of mean Fortunes were Garments fitter for Princes than Subjects; and many Gentry of antient De-feent had wasted, and impoverish'd themselves and their Posterities with this Extravagancy, to that it was very requifite to give fome ftop to this redundant Humour. To which was answer'd, That if those of Mean Fortunes went fo richly attir'd, and came not honeftly by their Ornaments, they would be quickly found out, and there were good Laws enough for fuch Transgressors. But as there is no perpetuity of Being on Earth; fo there is a continual Viciffittude and Revolution in all Sublunary Things; forme are advanced, and fome decline: God pullet b down one, and fetteth up another. If any Noble, or anciently descended Family, will be so Mad and Foolish to beggar themselves and their Posterities with this, or any other Excess, very probable that fome Man of more Wildom and Merit will enjoy that which the other hath fo idly and prodigally mispent; for to set such Limitations, will damp the Spirits of Industry. So the Motion was declin'd.

But to return to the Lord Hayes. Thus accounter'd and accomplish'd, he went into France; and a Day for Audience being prefix'd, all the Argument and Difpute betwixt him and his gallant Train (which took up some time) was, how they fhould go to the Court. Coaches, like Curtains, would eclipse their Splendor; riding on Horseback in Boots, would make them look like Travellers, not Courtiers; and not having all Foot-cloths, it would be an unfuitable Mixture: Those that brought rich Trappings for their Horses, were willing to have them seen; so it was concluded for the Footcloth, and those that have none (to their bitter This Prepa-Cost) must surnish themselves. ration begot Expectation; and that fill'd all the Windows, Balconies and Streets of Paris, as they passed, with a Multitude of Spectators. Six Trumpeters, and two Marshals (in Tawny Velvet Liveries, compleatly Suited, lacd all over with Gold, richly and closely laid) led the Way; the Ambailador followed with a great Train of Pages and Footmen in the fame rich I ivery, encircling his Horse, and the rest of his Retinue according to their Qualities and Degrees, in as much bravery as they could devise or procure, follow'd in Couples, to the Wenderment of the Beholders. And some said (how truly I cannot affert) the Ambassador's Horfe was shod with Silver-shoes, lightly tack'd on; and when he came to a Place where Persons, or Beauties of Eminency were, his very Horse prancing and curveting, in humble Reverence Hung his Shoes away, which the greedy Understanders ferambled for; and he was content to be gazed on and admird, till a Farrier, or rather an Argentier in one of his rich Liveries, among his Train of Footmen, out of a Tawny Velvet Bag took others, and tack'd them on; which lasted till he came to the next Troop of Grandees: And thus with much ado he reach'd the Lowere.

The Savoyan Agents bringing more Gold in their Hands than on their Backs, had so smoothed the Way, that not only those about the Princess, but the Great ones them-selves, were made Workers for him. After the Ambaifador had been featled magnificently, with all his gallant Train, in feveral Places, to thew the Grandure of France, he came over in-to England, and practiced it here; making many times upon feveral Occasions such Stupendious Fealts, and heaped Banquets, as if all the Creatures had contributed to his Excess. know not what Limits or Bounds are fer to the Glories of Princes Courts, or Noble Minds. A little before this time, there was a Breach A Breach between the Lord Chief Justice Coke, and the betwirt

Lord Chancellor Elljoner, which made a Pal-the Lord fage to both their declines. Sir Edward Coke Chancelhad heard and determin'd a Cause at the Com-lor and mon Law; and forme report, there was jugling the Lord in the Butiness. The Witness that knew, and flice. should have related the Truth, was wrought upon to be abient, if any Man would under-take to excuse his Non-Appearance: A pragmatical Fellow of the Party undertook it; went with the Witness to a Tavern; call'd for a Galwith the Witnels to a layern; call d for a Gallon-pot full of Sack; bid him drink; and so leaving him, went into the Court. This Witnels is call'd for as the Prop of the Cause; the Undertaker answers upon Oath, He less him in such a Condition, that if he continues in it but a Quarter of an Hoar, he is a Dead Man. This Evidencing the Man's Incapability to come, deaded the Matter so, that it lost the Cause. The the Matter so, that it lost the Cause. The Plaintiffs that had the Injury bring the Bufiness about in Chancery: The Defendants (having had Judgment at Common Law) refuse to obey the Orders of that Court; whereupon the Lord Chancellor, for Contempt of the Court, commits them to Prison. They Perition against him in the Star-Chamber; the Lord Chief Juflice joins with them, foments the Difference, threatning the Lord Chancellor with a Previourire. The Chancellor makes the King acquainted with the Bufiness, who fent to Sir Francis Bacon his Attorney-General, Sir Henry Montague and Sir Randolph Crear, his Serjeants at Law, and Sir Henry Televerton his Sollicitor; commanding them to Search what Precedents there have been of late Years, wherein fuch as complain'd in Chancery were relicv'd according to Equity and Confcience, after Judgment at Common Law. These being Men well vers'd in their Profession (after canvassing the Matter throughly) return'd Answer to the King, That there hath been a strong Current of Practice and Proceeding in Chancery, after Judgment at Common Law, and many times after Execution, continu'd fince Homy VII's time, to the Lord Chancellor that now is, both in the Reigns (Sciatim) of the feveral Kings, and the Times of the feveral Chancellors, whereof divers were great Learned Men in the Law: It being in Cases where there is no Remedy for the Subject by the strift Course of the Common Law, unto which the Judges are fworn. This fatisfied the King; justified the Lord Chancellor; and the Chief Justice received the Foil: Which made his Butinets known by more productive and dreffes; which in appearance was well referted, was a bitter Potion to his Spirit, but not fitrong but indeed not intended; and came to no effect; enough to work on him as his Enemies withd.

In King Edward II.'s time, Walter de Langdid take of the Earl of Montealto, to be a Friend to him, (in agendis negotiis versus Dominum Regem) a Hundred pounds, (the faid Earl, being a Prisoner) to let him go free to do his Bufinefs. And this was given, as the Record speaks, De spontanea voluntate, for a Gratuity, or en curialitate sua, for his Courtesse, yet this was adjudged Extortion and Bribery. Again, folm de Engam was Indicted of Trespass by this Bishop for the Mannor of Fabie, whereunto the King pretended Title, and was by the Bishop Imprisoned for the Trespass. But asterwards another Mannor was conveyed to this Bishop, ob diversas curialitates, for Courtesies that he had done, and fo Engam was discharged of his Indictment; and tho' that the Bishop pleaded, that Voluntas Regis potius ad imprison-mentam quam ad finem, because it was the King's Pleasure rather to punish by Imprisonment than Fine, yet this was adjudged Bribery. Again, The Bayliff of Oxford was committed for Arrerages of a Hundred Pounds in his Account, and thereupon the Mannor of Caleet was conveyed unto the Bishop, and the Bishop of his pure Devotion did discharge him of that Imprisonment. But these were Pleas and Flourishes of guilty Men, as the Record saith, but they were all three judged Extortion and Bribery; and for these, the Bishop was put from his Place, Fined, and committed to the Timer.

William Lord Latimer, in Edward III.'s time heing appointed to pay the King's Debts, did Buy in fome of them at lower Rates than was due, as Eighty Pounds for a Hundred, and Thirty Pounds for Forty; by which Course he made the King a Bankrupt Compounder, and for this he was Fined, and loft all his Offices.

In like cafe was the Lord Nevil, who was trusted to pay the Army; but he bought the Debt of them, and juffified, that they gave him the remainder of their free Gift; but for this he was Fined, and committed to the Tower.

Thefe, and many other Precedents and Examples, armed with Authority and Antiquity, were maftered up, and the Lord Treasurer's Miscarrieges exasperated, especially for Embe- that there might be a Harmony and sweet

But the Earl himself being a Man of a noble Disposition (though too indulgent to his too-active Wife) had retained the King's Favour, if he had taken Sir Edward Coke's Counfel, and fubmitted, and not strove to justifie his own Integrity, which he maintained with a great deal of Confidence, till it was too late, for then his Submiffion did him little good. But his Wives Faults being imputed to him, he was fined Faults being imputed to him, he was fined Thirty thousand Pounds, and Imprisonment in the Tower; Sir John Bingly Fined Two thou-fand Pounds, and Impriforment in the Fleet: For it was thought the Lord and Lady could not have found the way into these ob-feure, low, and dark Contrivances, without the light of his help. But the King, more to exalt Justice, and to The King shew the People his high Abilities, came in comes to June this Year to the Star-Chamber, where in a the Star-long, and well-weighed Difcourfe, he turns Chamber. might read his excellent Parts in lively Chara-

He told the I ords, he came thither in Imitation of Henry VII. his great Predeceffor; and the reason he came no sooner was, that he re-folved with Pythagoras, for Seven Years to keep filence, and learn the Laws of the Kingdom, before he would teach others, and the other Seven Years he was fludying to find an Occafion to come, that might not be with Prejudice: For in his own Cause he could not come; in a great Cause betwixt Man and Man, it might be thought some particular Favour brought him thither; and in a small Cause it was not fit for him to come; but now he had fo much to fay in relation to good Government, that he could no longer forbear.

First, He charges himself. Secondly, The Judges. Thirdly, The Auditory in general.

In his own Charge, he lays a Foundation for raifing a most excellent Structure in Government, wherein he was a Mafter-workman, and had a most admirable Theory, and full Abilities to put it in Practice, and happily the bent of his Intentions tended that way, though it had for the most part a loofe strong.

And to that which concerned the Judges, he not only reckons up their Duties in their publick Relation, but shews them the Jurisdiction and Power of their feveral Courts, how far every one did extend, to which he would have them limitted, that they might not clash and contest one against another, to fhake the Basis on which they were built, but

Con-

An Christ with fuch Elegance and Prudence, that the times, the Contention doth appear; which afmost studious Lawyer (whose Design had been his Prince) could not have gone beyond what the express to imbellish a Discourse fixthing for the Ears of his Prince) could not have gone beyond what he express to his People; so fitning and retentive was his Judgment and Memory, so natural Liberties, so the People strove to bound and genuine that which came from them, that it did emanare, flow from him, to the Admiration of the Hearers.

To the People in general, and Under-Offi-cers, he gave an Admonition to fubmit to the Law, and Justice of the Land, and not to go upon new Puritan Strains (fuch was his Expreffion) to make all things Popular, but to keep themselves within the ancient Limits of Obedience: Fir he feared Innovation as a Mon-fer got loofe, which should be always kept in such a Labyrinth, as none should come at, but by the Clew of Reason.

Then he commands the Judges in their Circuits, to take notice of thole Justices of the Peace that were most active for the good of the Country, that they might have Encouragement from him. For, (to use his own Words) I value them that force me faithfully there, equally with those that attend my Person. Therefore let none be ashamed of this Office, or be difcouraged in being a Justice of the Peace, if he ferve worthily in it.

The Chancellor under me makes Justices, and put them outs; but neither I, nor he, can tell what they are; Therefore we must be informed by you, Judges, who can only tell who do well, and who do ill; without which, how can the Good be cherished, and the rest put out? The Good Juffices are careful to attend the Service of the King and Country; the Bad are idle Slow-bellies, that abide always at Home; given to a Life of Eafe and Delight, liker Ladies than Men; and think it is enough to contemplate Justice, when as, Virtus in actione confiftet; to contemplate Justice is no Justice; and contemplative Justices are fit to be put out.

Another fort of Justices are Busy-bodies, and will have Men dance after their Pipe, and fol-Iow their Greatness, or else will no be content: A fort of Men, Qui se primos omnium esse putant, nec sunt tamen: These proud Spirits must know that the Country is ordained to follow God and the King, and not them.

Another fort are they that go feldom to the King's Service, but when it is to help fome of their Kindred or Alliance; fo they come to help their Friends, or hurt their Eemies, making Justice serve for a Shadow to Faction, and tu-multuating the Country.

Another fort are Gentlemen of great Worth in their own Conceit; and cannot be content with the present Form of Government, but must have a kind of Liberty in the People, and must beGracious Lords, and Redeemers of their Liberty; and in every Cause that concerns Prerogative, give a Snatch against Monarchy, through their Puritanical itching after Popularity; fome of them have fnew'd themfelves too bold of late in the Lower House of Parliament: And when all is done, if there were not a King, they would be less cared for than other Men. So wise the King's Fears made him, and fo wary to prevent himfelf in a full Conjunction with the Stars keep off the Inundation of his Prerogative. Then he takes notice of the Swarms of Gentry, that through the Indligation of their Wives, or to new Model and Fashion their Daughters (who, if they were Unma rried, marr'd their Marriages; if Married, lost their Reputations, and rob their Husbands Purses) did neglect their Country Hospitality, and cumber the City; a general Nuisance to the Kingdom, being as the Spleen to the Body, which as in Measure it over-grows, the Body wastes: And feeing a Proclamation will not keep them at Home, he requires that the Power of the Star-Chamber may not only regulate them, but the Exorbitancy of the New Buildings about the City (which he still much repined at) being a Shelter for them; where they spent their Estates in Coaches, Lacquies, and fine Clothes, like Frenchmen; living miferably in their Houses, like Italians; becoming Apes to other Nations: Whereas it was the Honour of the English Nobility and Gentry (above all Countries in the World) to be Hofpitable among their Terrants; which they may the better do, by the Fertility and Abundance of all things. Thus the King pried into every Miscarriage; being willing to Reform these (then growing) Abuses.

But among all the Heights of Reason that Unstable the Spirit of Man doth Actuate and give Life Spirits to, the Highest and most Transcendent is that mutable: of Religion; which as it partakes more or less of Faith, so it enclines more or less to Fancy: Wavering and Unftable Minds are not only blown about with the Wind of every Opinion, but Pride and Discontent (conjoined often, though of different Operations) are Engines fulficient to shake the Foundation, though never fo firmly fettled. Some Men turn over the Leaf of Conscience, and change a Good Religion for a Worse; some the Leaf of Policy, leaving an Evil Religion for a Better: But these kind of Spirits will not be brought under by Fasting and Prayer, unless it be by him that can discover the Heart of Hypocrifie, though in as variable a Capacity as the Countenance.

But I can only give a Catastrophe to one of these Tragedies; the last Act of this now a playing wants its Exit.

And to conclude the First, Lowis XIII. finding his Mother's Power fwell fo high, as to threaten a Deluge of Noble Blood for the Prefervation of a Mechanick Florentine, and willing to be rid of a Governess who eclips'd his Glory, commanded Monsieur De Vitry, Captain of his Guard, to feize on the Marquis at his first access to Court. The Marquis (being then in his Government in Normandy, placing and difplacing Officers, for his greater fecurity) hear-ing there were new Whifperers admitted to the King, came to the Court in a full Career, with a ruffling Retinue at his Heels, thinking to remove all Obtfacles in his Way; but there he met the greac One, Death, waiting for him, that his Policy and High-Flying Thoughts never minded: For he had no fooner cutred the Gates of the Lowere, but De Vitry Arrefted him; and feeing him flep back upon his Arreft, as it were, to lay hold of his Sword, he kill'd him inflantly with a Piftol; the Noise whereof Lord Privy-Seal, in exchange of his Place, and put the whole Court into an Uproar. The la good Sum of Money put into the Scale: And

The poor Murquis rested not in Death; for though he was privately buried that Night, yet the Rage and Malice of the People lighted them to his Grave the next Day; and tearing him thence, and tying his naked Body to an Affe's Tail, drew him through the Streets of Paris, and hanged him by the Heels upon a Gibbet on the new Bridge; where they cut off flakes of his Body, to fend as Prefents to their Friends. And when they had fariated them-felves thus, they took down the mangled Carcass, and made another Progress through the City, till wearied with their Delight, they strove to burn the Body, to be rid of it; but the Fire being not fo active as their Malice, they threw the tatter'd Bones into the River; fo that their Rage pulled him out of the Earth, hung him in the Air, burnt him in the Fire, and left him in the Water. And (as they thought) to leave no Memory of him, pulled down his House to the Ground; which was afterwards ratified by publick Justice, and his Wife was condemn'd by the same, and burn'd for a Witch. And to make their Names the more Odious, their very Birth-places were ripped up, and they were both found to proceed from the † Dunghills of Florence. Thus ended this fad Tragedy; which ferves as Lights and Sea-marks of Mortality, to teach us how to fleer our Brittle Bark in this World's Tempest, that we bear not too much Sail, but keep a moderate and even Courfe betwirt the Rocks of Pride, and Shallows of Contempt; both which are equally

And the King had fit Instruments for these Sports about his Person; as Sir George Goring, Sir Edward Zoneb, Sir febm-Finnit, and others, that could Fit and Obtem-perate the King's Humour: For he loved such Representations and Disguises in their Masqueradoes, as were witty, and fudden; the more Ridiculous, the more Pleafant.

No Man Dances better; no Man Runs, or Jumps better; and indeed he jumpt Higher than ever Englishman did in so short time, from a private Gentleman to a Dukedom. But the King is not well without him; his Company is his Solace, and the Court Grandees cannot be well but by him; fo that all Addresses are made to him; either for Place or Office, in Court or Commonwealth. The Bishops See did also Ebb and Flow, from the Wane or Fulness of his Influence upon them; and having a numerous Kindred of the Rank of Gentry, which he planted about him, as a Nurfery in the Court, to make them Virefcere, and Spring up the better; the Dew of these Offices, and the fresh Springs that came from these Seas must be contributed. It cannot with Modesty be expressed how greedily fome of our Prelates would clear all Paffages of a bad Conscience, to bring in such Waters of Comfort, left it should bespatter the more Worthy, and brand them all with Simony, which dares not be done. But where God hath his Church, the Devil many times will have his Chapel: It was ever his Ambition to be like unto him.

The Book

But among all the Dances that these Times of Sports were guilty of, none of the Masqueradoes pre-obtruded fented so horrid a Vizard as the Churchmans: For fome of the Bishops, pretending Recreations, and Liberty to Servants and Common People, (of which they carved to themselves too much already) procur'd the King to put out a Book to permit Dancing about May-poles, Church-ales, and fuch debauched Exercises upon the Sabbath-day after Evening Praying, (being a fpecious way to make the King, and them, acceptable to the Rout) which Book came out with a Command, enjoining all Ministers to read it to their Parishioners, and to approve of it; and those that did not, were brought into the High Commission, Imprison'd and Suspended. This Book being only a Trap to catch fome Confciencious Men, that they could not otherwise with all their Cunning infnare: For they would preach the Gofpel in a Fool's-Coat (as fome of them express'd) rather than be filenced for a Surplice. And their Conjuring of them with the Cross in Baptism, and the Circle of the Ring in Marriage, could not make a well-composed Reason and a sound Conscience then start at it: But when so Frightful an Apparition as the Dancing Book appear'd, fome of the Ministers left all for Fear, others by Force, they were so terrified with it. These. by Force, they were fo terrified with it. and fuch like Machinations of the Bishops, to maintain their Temporal Greatness, Ease and Plenty, made the Stones in the Walls of their Palaces, and the Beam in the Timber, afterwards cry out, moulder away, and come to nothing: Whereas, if those in most Authority had not been fo Pragmatical, but Holy, Prudent, and Godly Men †#† (as fome others of the ARGAS Function were) their Light might have Shin'd fill upon the Mount; and not have gone out as it did, offensive to the Nostrils of the Rubbish of the People.

The King in his return from Scotland made his Progrets through the Hunting-countries, (his Hounds and Hunters meeting him) Sherwood-Foreft, Needwood, and all the Parks and Forefts in his way, were ranfack'd for his Re-creation. And every Night begat a new Day of Delight, till he brought Holyrood-day (not * Holyrood-house) to It biteball.

This new Encroachment upon the Sabbath House in gave both King and People more liberty to fo called. Prophane the Day with Authority: For if the Propiane the Day with Authority: For 11 the Court were to remove on Monday, the King's Carriages muft go out the Day before. All Piety of times were alike; and the Court being to rethe Lord move to Theebalds the next Day, the Carriages went through the City of London on the Sabbath, with a great deal of Clatter and Noise in the time of Divine Service. The Lord Mayor bearing of it commanded them to be

Mayor hearing of it, commanded them to be ftopt; and this carried the Officers of the Carriages with a great of Violence to the Court; and the Business being presented to the King with as much Asperity as Men in Authority (croffed in their Humours) could express it; It put the King into a great Rage, Swearing, He thought there had been no more Kings in England but himself; yet after he was a little Cool'd, he fent a Warrant to the Lord Mayor, commanding him to let them pass, which he obey'd, with this Answer, While it was in my Power, I did my Duty; but that being taken away by a Higher Power, it is my Duty to Obey. Which the King upon fecond Thoughts took well, and thanked him for it.

As Prophaneness crept in on one side, so did Juggling Idolatry and Superstition on the other; for of the Jethere was more Enmity against Ministers of fuice, the Gospel than Popish Priest; they swarm'd over the Kingdom, working Miraculous Projects in every Corner. One Pack of them got into Staffordhire, among fome of the Giffords in that County, Gentlemen of good Eftates, where they practifed their Artifices to feduce the People. There must be a Ground-work, Estates to keep them (being like the Gout never troubling the Poor) and then there must be Materials, Correspondents to act for them. Holiness and Piety must be confirmed by Miracle; and these Miracles must be visible to the Peoples Eyes, that they may convey Belief better to the Heart. If the Priefts be Holy, and can fubdue Satan, the Religion they profels must be Heavenly, that triumps over Principalities, and Powers, and Spiritual Wicked-ness, bringing all to Obedience. These are Finesses and Subtilties of Mastring Wits (calling them Piæ Fraudes, Godly Deceits, Worms to bring Fish to the Net) and this kind of Frippery they are ever fraught with.

For about this time there was a Boy born at The Boy Bilson in that County, whose Father, Mother, of Bilson Neighbours, and many other People, with Admiration, did absolutely think possess with at Devil; for he had strange, sudden, violent, distorting Fits, that appeared to all the Beholders contrary to Nature; and being not full

The Jesuits (that are the best Physicians in fuch Diltempers) hearing of it, viited the Boy, Prayed by him, and uled fuch other Charms and Exorcilins, as are fit to make them be admit'd; giving his Parents good hope of Difpossessing him of that Foul Spirit, by which might palpably be discerned, how much God's Power was express'd in their Weakness; and difference the Truth and Holiness betwixt the Catholick Religion, and the Herely professed among Protestans. So that they that heard them (as many reforted to the Place) must needs take them for very Holy Men, by whom such Wonders were to be accomplished. The Jesuits visited him often, sometimes in Private, sometimes in Company; but this kind of Spirit would not be commanded by them, fo that they grew almost desperate of the Cure.

Accuses a Woman to be a Witch.

The Boy in his Fits would rave against an old Woman dwelling near to his Father, intimating by Signs and Ghaftly Behaviour, that flie had fent a spirit to torment him; and in plain Terms (when he was out of his Fits) accused her to be a Witch, and the Author of all his Misery. This old Woman is sent to the Bishop's Chancellor at Litchfield to be examined: The Boy is brought thither to confront her; and having his Back towards her, at her coming into the Room, where the Chancellor was, before the yet enter d or appear d, he falls into a most bitter Agony, crying out, Now she comes, now my Tormentor comes! Wreathing and Tearing himself in fo horrid a manner, that it did not only breed Amazement, but Pity in the Spectators, there being many with expectation attending the Iffue; which, with fome other Probabilities, were an Inducement to the Chancellor to fend the Woman to Stafford Gaol.

At the next Affizes for that County, the Boy and his Parents appear as Witnesses against the Witch; the Boy was placed in a conspicuous part of the Court, with his Face to the Bench, Lying the Judge continually in a very peaceable and quiet Poffure; and as the Woman was coming in (when the Court thought it impossi-ble the Boy should be sensible of her appearance) he fell into a more raging Fit than ever he was poffefs'd with before: So flupendiously unnatural, that it was deem'd by all that saw it, that nothing but a Diabolical Spirit could work fuch horrid Effects. This, thus openly acted, and the Relation of what was done at Litchfield, and other Probabilies evidencing, the old Woman (that had no good Reputation among her Neighbours, being of a tetrical and froward Temper, incident to old Age) found few Friends to plead her Cause; so that being indicted for Witchcraft, the was found Guilty by the Jury, and Condemn'd to die.

Dr. Morton, Bishop of that Diocese, a great condemn-Father of the Anglicane Church, (and happily then on the Bench about Secular Affairs) heargers her ing that fome Romish Priests had been tamper-Reprieve ing with their Exorcifms, to the undevilling of the Boy, and finding little Reason produced, why, or for what Cause, the Witch should use the Child fo ill, was perfwaded, that this might be fome juggling Trick in them, for effecting their miraculous Ends. He therefore befought the Judge to reprieve the Woman till the next Affizes, and he would take the Boy home with him, have him carefully and flrictly looked to, Boy finding all quiet, no Noise about him, he and doubted not before that time to find out the lifts himself up, flares, and liftens, and at length bottom of fome fecret and hidden Contrivance. A.Reg. 15. The Judge affented to the Bishop's Request, and Bishops House, whicher his Firs followed him with a great deal of Violence: For being put out of his Pead (based on the put of out of his Road (having formerly all forts of People come to admire him, and now being more carefully looked to) he grew fullen, and would not eat sometimes in two or three Days; fo that his Belly was almost clung, and grown to his Back, and he had a new Swelling about his Throat, which never appeared before; lay in his Bed, fometimes as it were fenfeless, sometimes staring with his Eyes, and foaming at the Mouth, fometimes striking those that stood near him, (his own careful Mother being one, whom he made all black about the Arms and Breafts) never spoke but in his Fits, and then a strange Gibbrish; at other times he only muttered, and made Signs. The Bishop visited him often, striving sometimes to soften him with Gentleness; at other times he handled him roughly, with Objurgations and Threatenings; but his ill Spirit is capable of neither. He spoke to him one time some of the Greek Testament, to fee how that would work, and it brought him into his Fit. At another time, he uttered fome Verses out of the Greek Poets, which his Devil was not fo Learned as to diffinguish, for that put him into a Fit again; fo that the Bishop was confirmed, that he was an Impostor of a most pernicious and pertinacious Spirit; but how to conjure it out of him, was the Difficulty. And finding Words and Menaces made no Impreffion in him, he fell to Blows; for taking him ont of his Bed, and having one to hold him, the Bishop gave him six very smart Lashes with a Rod, which moved the Boy no more than if he had been an infensible Stock. They alfo thruft Needles into his Toes and Fingers, betwixt the Nails, clapt burning Candles to his Eye-lids, till they finged the Hair off, to divert him when he was in his Fits; but with all their Perfecutions he neither winch'd nor ftirr'd; fo that the Actors were more troubled to execute, than he to fuffer.

And in this Condition growing almost desperate, he would make Signs for Knives, or any other Instrument, to do himself a Mischief: Therefore strict Care was taken, and many watchful Eyes fet over him, to prevent any fuch Danger. Thus he continued almost a quarter of a Year; at last his Urine grew so black, that the Physicians thought Nature had left her usual Operations, having never found in any Humane Body fo much Adust Matter, to give fo deep and deadly a Tincture.

This flruck the good Bishop very near; for The Bi-he was certain the Priests had been hammering shop trouabout him, and now, if he should miscarry un-bled der his Hand, those Mint-masters of Mischief for the would in their dark Shops coin fuch Scandals against him, as might pass current in the World's Opinion: Therefore he used all the Means he could poffible, as well to preferve him, as to discover him; but finding the Boy endure so many Trials with Patience, fo much tough Hardship and Robustness in tender Years, he resolved, if his Water continued black, to sist the Matter no further. To find out which, he fet a trufty Servant to watch him through a Hole that looked into the Chamber upon the Bed, which the Boy knew not of. The Bifhop going that Morning with his Family to a Lecture, all things were very still in the House; and the

A. Reg. 15 gets out of his Bed, and in the Straw or Mat | under it takes out an Inkhorn, and makes Wa-An Christi ter in the Chamberpot through a piece of the Corton in his Hand; another little piece of the Cotton he puts into his Prepuce, covering it with the Skin, and that was for a Referve, if he fhould be forced to make Water when Company is by. Thus having cunningly put him-felf in order, he hides the Inkhorn again, and returns to his Bed.

The Impostor discovered.

The Man that was appointed to watch him feeing all this, discovered it to the Bishop at his coming home, who came to him presently, and coming home, who came to him pretently, and ask'd him how he did? He, according to his ufual manner, pointed to his Water, looked ghaftly on it, and mutter'd out his old howling Tone. The Bifhop, that meant now to deal roundly with him, faid, Sirrah, you have Ink in your Bed-ftraw, which you make ufe of to black your Water, and your Knavery is found out; and calling in his Man, he took out the Labhon where the Roy had hid it, and the Man Inkhorn where the Boy had hid it, and the Man juffified, that he faw him make Water through the Cotton; which (with the Bishop sthreatening to fend him to the House of Correction) struck the Boy with such a sudden Terror, that he rose from his Bed, fell upon his Knees, and humbly befought the Bishop to pardon him, and he would discover to him the whole Truth. And as he put on his Clothes, the Bishop laid open the Grievousness of his Sin, which wrought fo upon his Spirit, that he melted into Tears, crying to God for Mercy. A very strange Alteration! That, what he did but counterfeit, the Devil had fo hardened in him, that all the Torments and Pains inflicted by Man could not produce a Tear, till God, that melted the Rock, had first rouched the Heart.

His Confeffion.

Then he confess'd, a Pedlar with a Pack on his Back met him when he was going to School, nis Back mer nim when he was going to solitori, and with many inticing Words perfwaded him to go to Mr. Gifford's Houfe, affuring him of good Enretrainment; and by his Allurements he went thither with him. There he found four Romith Priefts, who gave him Money, and many fair Words, promiting him great Mat-rers, if he would be conformable to their Instructions. They were three Days teaching him how to demean himfelf, and after he was well tutor'd, and had practis'd his Tricks there privately, then they fent him home to his Fa-ther (who thought he had been loft, and was much troubled for him) to exercise them in a more publick way. He came home in a very distracted manner, to the Amazement of his Parents, and in fliort time drew much Company to visit him; and his Parents being poor, got Money from many charitable People, which did encourage him to perfift in that way. when the Fame of his being poffess'd with an evil Spirit was sufficiently bruited abroad, the Priests came to disposses him; but he found so much Sweetness in the Ease, and Profit of that Life, that he would not be dif-inchanted by them, tho' they charmed never fo cruelly; for they beat him, and pinch'd him, and us'd him bitterly ill, to make him defift. Thus were the Deceivers deceiv'd! The Bishop ask'd him, Why he accused the poor old Woman of Witchcraft? He answer'd, The Priefts told him he must lay the Cause of his being posses'd upon some old Woman, and the being known to him, and of a feolding Humour, he fix'd it on her. Then the Bifhop ask'd him, How he came to fall into his Fits a little before the Woman appear'd in the Room, both at her Examination and Arraignment, his Back being towards her? For the first, at Liebfield, he said, He heard some about him mutter, She is here; which made him A. Rig. 15. cry out, She comes; she comes: And for the second, at Stafford, He heard the People remove, Inc. Confil. cond, at Stafford, The heart the reopie remove, and her Chains gingle as fine came, which gave him the Sign. Lattly, he was ask'd, How he made his Throat fwell? And he fhew'd, it was by thrufting his Tongue (being very long) down his Throat, which Trick he found out himself; the rest were taught him by the Priests. Thus did the Bishop preserve an innocent old Woman condemned by the Law to die, discover the abominable Forgeries of the Pricits, and convert a wicked Boy, whom afterwards he bound Apprentice, and proved a good Man. This Story I heard from the Bishop's own Mouth, almost Thirty Years before it was inserted here. And the Refult of all is, That Falshood with her painted Countenance appears often as beautiful as Truth it felf, deceiving many, specially in this Point of Witchcraft, which is a Structure established in the Vulgar Fancy, that hath many odd Paffages and Ways opening to it, and is many Airy Stories high; but being well examined, it will prove (for the most part, I will not fay always) Paper-proof, as there may be occasion to express in another place.

College in Oxford, practifed Physick in the Day, and preached in the Night in his Bed. His Practice came by his Profession, and his Preaching (as he pretended) by Revelation; for he would take a Text in his Sleep, and deliver a good Sermon upon it; and tho his Auditory were willing to filence him, by pulling, hauling, and pinching, yet would he pertinaciously per-fift to the end, and sleep still. The Fame of this Sleeping-Preacher flies abroad with a light Wing; which coming to the King's Knowledge, he commanded him to the Court, where he fate up one Night to hear him: And when the time came that the Preacher thought it was fit for him to be asleep, he began with a Prayer, then took a Text of Scripture, which he significantly enough infifted on a while; but after made an Excursion against the Pope, the Cross in Baptisin, and the last Canons of the Church of England, and fo concluded fleeping. The King would not trouble him that Night, letting him Morning, and in private handled him fo like a cunning Chirurgeon, that he found out the Sore; making him confess not only his Sin and Error in the Act, but the Cause that urged him to it; which was, That he apprehended himself as a buried Man in the University, being of a low Condition, and if fomething Eminent and Remarkable did not spring from him, to give Life to his Reputation, he should never appear any body, which made him attempt this Novel-ty to be taken notice of. The King finding him ingenuous in his Confession, pardoned him, and (after his Recantation publickly) gave him Preferment in the Church. Some others, both Men and Women, infpired with fuch Enthufi-alins, and Fanatick Fancies, he reduced to their right Senses, applying his Remedies suitable to the Dittemper, wherein he made himself often very merry (being happily practiced, to be taken notice of by him); but some of their Stories being a little coarse, are not fit to be here related. And truly the Looseness and Carelesness of Publick Justice sets open a Door to such flagitious and netarious Actions, as feverer Times would never have perpetrated.

gave Rife to this Enterprise. The King looking on Raleigh as a Man whose Abilities might better the Nation, if improvid the right way, gave him Liberty, and a Commission under the Great Seal, to equip and fet forth Ships and Men for that Service. putation and Merit brought many Gentlemen of Quality to venture their Estates and Persons upon the Defign; and being gallantly furnished with all things necessary, either for Peace or War, they fet out; and met no Difficulties till they came to Cape Ver in Africa; and then they found the Winds averse to them, (contrary to the usual Nature of it) with many violent Storms, which much impeded their Voyage: For they that usually navigate betwixt Cape Vert and America, run it in less than twenty Days; but it took them double the time. And being driven from the Isle of Bracco by a Tempest, there left they Cables, Anchors, and Water-Cask, behind them; fo that by the Length of the Time, Heat of the Climate, and their Want of Water, great Sickness fell among them, and fwept away many of their ableft Men, both for Sea and Land.

But with much Patience and Hardship, getting fight of the Coast of Guiana, they came to an Anchor in five Degrees, at the River Caliana, where they landed their fick Men, fet up Barges and Shallops, which were brought out of ges and shanops, which were recognic out of the ships, and took in fresh Water, being sed and assisted by the Indians that Six Walter Raligh had fermerly known; who (in this general Contagion, having grappled long with Sickness, and not yet able to move, otherwise than he was carried in into the River Orinoque (having Captain Kemilh for their Conductor) towards the Mine, the Star that directed them thither. And in these five Ships were five Foot-Companies, under the Command of Captain P. reker, and Captain North, Brothers to the Lord Mouragle, and the Lord North; Captain Water Raleigh, the General's el-deth Son; Captain Thomburgh, and Captain Chil-ley, Gentlemen of great Valeur, and infinite Patience, in Inffering Hunger, Heat and Lahour. Major Pigot died in the miterable Paffage, and Sir Warbam Sautleger (who was Lieutenant-Colonel) lay tick, without hope of Life; fo that the Command of the five Companies being conferred upon George Raleigh, the General's Nephew, (made Major in Pigot's room) he was not fo well obey'd as the Enterprise required. As they passed up the River, the Spaniards began the War, and shot at the Ships, both with their Ordnance and Musket; but they landed their Forces, without any great Lofs, near unto a Town upon the River, called St. Thome, and gallantly charged the Enemy to the very Ports; where finding fome little Opposition, they at last forced a Passage, and made themselves Maflers of the Town. In the Affault, Captain defind it, especially if the Enemy should be re-Welter Radigh, the General's Son, (a Man of cruited, the Country being all in Alarm, he live and Courage, litter to execute, than to or-ligave over the Enterprise, and returned: For if

And the thefe five Ships with the General were but of little Defence against fo strong a Power as the King of Spain's Gallions; yet they would have given them their Hands full; for they were all re-folved to have burned, and died by their fides. A.: Christi Men (as he pretended) to work in it; and being a great way up into the Land, Men would have been got thither with much Danger and Difficulty. And that was true. The Spaniards themselves complain for want of Negroes to work in their Mines; for the Indians cannot be constrained, by a Law of Charles the Fifth; and the Spaniards will not, neither can they endure the Labour. But this was ill advised, to take fo much Pains, and run fo much Hazard, to get and poffers that, which, when they had it, they could not make use of; so that which Kenish pleaded (when he returned) for an Excuse, reifected upon him as a great Milearriage. As foon as he came to St. Thome, the English pillaged the Town, carried away the best and morp portable Things; and the Enemy not daring to appear for the Kedemption of it, they fet it afire, leaving behind them an infinite Mass of Treasure, which, either for want of Knowledge or Power, they could not attain to: For there were two Gold Mines near the Town, the one possessed by Roderigo de Parama, the other by Herman Frontino, and a Silver Mine by Francisco Fashardo: To preserve and fortify which, they employed all their Strength and Industry; fo that they needed not have gone so far up the River to find a new Mine, when they had fo many nearer them, that either Ignorance or want of Strength made them neglect. his Son, and Kemifi's Return without effecting his Work, was perplexed to the very Soul, telling Kemish he had undone him, and wounded his Credit with the King, past recovery; but he must think (he told him) to bear the Weight of the King's Anger as well as himfelf; for he must avow that Konish knew the Mine, and that with little Lofs he might have possessed it. Kemish, much troubled in his Mind, retires to his Cabin, which he had in the General's Ship, and presently after his being there, he shot himself with a Pistol: The General hearing the Noise, ask'd what Fiftol it was? Answer was made. That Captain Kemish shot it off in his Cabin to cleanse it; but Kemish's Man going into the Cabin, found his Mafter lying in his own Blood. The Piftol having a little Bullet, did only crack the Rib; which being too flow for his Fury, he desperately thrust a Knife in after it up to the Haft; and with him the Glory of the Voyage expired: For the Defign being thus broken, the Ships leaky, Victuals failing, and milling of those Golden Showers they gaped after, (that Radical Moisture which fills the Veins of the Affections, and gives Life and Vigour to all Actions) Iome of the Men began to mutiny against the General, others were for him; some would have him go home, others would have him stay; the major part forced him to swear not to go home but by their Allowance; and yet his Ships dwindled away one after another, (his Strength was best discovered by his Weaknefs) ten Ships being reduced to four, and those would do what they lift. Some would go for Italy, fome for France, few for England, fearing the Spanish Power there more than they did in the Indies. Thus they were sharter'd in Judgment, with a greater Tempest than the Seas or Winds could produce. Miserable is that Govern-ment where the Multitude is Master! At last he is brought to Kinfale in Ireland.

The News of taking and burning St. Theme coming to Gondemar, he befieges, and (as it were) the King affaults the King with Importunity for Reparation: For he was a Man not only of an infinu-

The King's Fears being heighten'd to Anger, he dilayows the Action; and left others of his Subjects should by this Example take the Boldness to attempt the like Hostility against the King of Spain, he puts out a Proclamation, wherein he shews his Detestation of such Proceedings, and threatens severe Punishment to the Enterprisers, thereby to deter them: Which gave Gundemar fome Satisfaction; whose Design being only to get Sir Walter Raleigh home, (after this Brush) vented lit-tle Passion; but so cunningly skinned over his Malice, that when Raleigh was in Irdand, he found nor heard of no fuch great Difficulties, (Dangers often flying upon the Wings of Rumour) but that he might appear in England; and the Men not willing to be banished their own Country, (the' fome of them had France in their Eye) put in at Plimouth. Raleigh was no fooner ashore, but he had private Intimation, which gave him cause to suspect, the Smooth nefs of the Beginning would have a Rough End: Therefore he attempted an Escape from thence in a Bark of Rochel: But being apprehended by Sir Lewis Stukley (his Kinfman) who had private Warrant and Instructions to that purpose, (fo unnatural and fervile is the Spirit, when it hath an Allay of Bafenes, there being many others fitter for that Employment) he is brought to London, and recommitted to the Tower.

There is a strange Virtue in this Spirit of Sol! The Intenseness makes Men firm; the Ductilness brings them to be active. French Crowns are not fo pure, nor so piercing, as Spanish Pistoles. Auri sacra fames! Quid non mortalia pectora cogis? The King, that loved his Peace, is incented by them that loved their Profit, and the poor Gentleman must lay down the Price of his Life upon the

To which, in the proceedings of the lare Voyage; but the Lord Chief Juffice wished him to spare that Trouble; for there was no other Matter in question but the former Judgment, which the King would have executed upon him, for fome Occasions best known to himself, unless he could

Raleigh answered, That he was told by his Council, that Judgment was void, by the Commission his Majesty was pleased to give him since under the Great Seal for his last Employment, which did give him a new Vigour and Life to that Service. The Lord Chief Juffice replied, That he was deceived, and that the Opinion of the Court was to the contrary. A Reg. 16 rioticies. Now, like Plethorique Bodies that want letting Blood, they break out into Diftemdu Christi per; a Schissm in the Church, and Faction in the State.

The arft Author of the Schisin, was Arminius; of the Faction, Barnevelt; Perfons of great Parts and Power (tho) of different Natures.) The one had been Divinity-Professor at Leyden, the other the Manager of all the great Affairs of the State. Diftempers in Kingdoms and States are like Madness in Bodies, which doth not break out till some Accident doth slir the Humour. Arminine died just upon the beginning of the Treaty, which was in the Year 1609, leaving behind him the Seeds of this Pelagian Herefy, which tho' it were cherished much by some, in whose Besoms he had sown it, yet happily it might never have taken Root, had not Peace and Ease manured it, and made it fruitful. The Mysteries of Predestination, and the ineffable Essence of God (Que tremenda & admiranda Words) which are to be trembled at, and admired, not pried into) are the great Theme. Such Intuitions are too high for Flesh and Blood: Yet what will not Pragmatical Spirits do, when they proudly look into Divine Things with the Eye of Reason, not humbly with the Eye of Faith?

This Rupture in the Bowels of the Church grew fo great, that it endangered the Body of the State. The Chief Rulers and Magistrates in the feveral Provinces being tainted with this Error, strove to establish it by Power; among whom Barnevelt was a Principal Agent, who, by the Affistance of Hocgenherts of Leyden, Grotius of Rotterdam, and Leidenburgh Secretary of Utrecht, with others their Adherents, drew on the Defign, which was to suppress the Protestant Reformed Religion, and establish the Tenents of Arminius, being fomented by the Kings of France and Spain, as the immediate way to introduce Popery. This went on fo finoothly, that the Orthodox Ministers were expelled out of their principal Towns, and none but Arminians admitted to Preach to the People, which in fome Places bred many Combustions, that tended to nothing but Popular Confusion.

quiry for some Doctor to be chosen in the 40216 Place of Divinity-Professor there, at these time world; after Mature Deliberation, they made Election of Comedus Verfilm to the Place.
Which Election and Calling, was countermin'd prefently after by certain Perions, to whose Office or Disposal the business did nothing at all belong; who charged the faid Vorgius with Unfoundness of Doctrine: whereupon the Curators thought fit (with the good liking of Varstius himself) that both at Leyden, and at the Hague, he should appear in his own Justification, to answer all Accusers; which he did; and there came none to Charge him. But not long after, fix Ministers undertook to prove, That Vorstius had publish'd False Doctrine, who being heard in a full Affembly of the States of Holland and Welffrizeland, they could by their Arguments find no Reason, why the Execution of what was done by the Curators lawfully, ought to be hindred or impeached. And they do affuredly believe, Thar if his Majesty of Great Britain were well informed of the true Circumstances of this Bufinefs, he would, according to his High Wifdom and Prudence, conceive favourably of them, they proceeding in this Business with all Reverence, Care and Respect, to his Maje-sty's serious Admonition. And not giving it over, he writes to them again, to be mindful of the Glory of God, and not fuffer fuch Scandalous Members to remain in the Body of the true Reformed Church, that maintain fuch execrable Blafphemies, as to deny the Eternity and Omni-potency of God: Furthermore, he defires them to much to confult their own Honour and Safety, as to Extirpate fuch Atheisins and Herefies. But if they suffer such Pestilent Hereticks to neftle among them (who dare take upon them the licentious Liberty to fetch again from Hell ancient Herefies long fince condemned, and invent new ones of their own, to the Depravation of the true Catholick Church) he should be constrained publickly to protest against them. Dated at Theobalds, 6 October, 1611.

Sir Ralph Wimwood represented this Letter to the States; and finding them cold and backward in proceeding any further against Vorshins, according to the King's Directions to him, he made this Remonstrance to them.

My Lords.

The ever the King of Great Britain, my Mafter, Sir Ralah hath merited any thing of this State, (and Himmod's how much he hath merited, in refpect of his Remongreat Favours and Royal Affiftances, your firance to Lorddhips acknowledging them with all Gratitude, can best Judge and Witness) he hath furetitude, can beit Judge and witness ne nathure-ly merited at this present, having by his Let-ters full of Zeal and Piety, which he hath written unto you, endeavourd to procure the Ettablishment of that Religion only within your Provinces, which the Reformed Churches of Great Britain, France and Germany, by a mu-' tual Confent have generally Imbraced. If therefore Religion be as it were the Palladium of your Commonwealth; and that to preferve the One in her Glory and Perfection, be to maintain the Other in her 'Purity, let your felves then be Judges, in how grear a Danger the State must needs be at this prefent, so long as you permit the Schissis of Arminius to have such Vogue (as now they have) in the Principal Towns of Holland; and if you fuffer Vorftins to be received Diof the Holy Word of God, hath, after his own ' Fancy, devifed a new Sect, patch'd together of feveral Pieces of all forts of Ancient and ' Modern Herefies. If any 'Man doubt of it, see here what his Majesty, with his own Hand, hath collected out of his Writings. And then presenting them a Paper, he proceeded

These are, in part, the Opinions of that great Divine, who is chosen to domineer in the Chair at Leyden: In opposition whereunto, I mean not to fay any thing, but that which the Roman Orator did once pronounce in the like Case, Mala est, & impia consultado, contra Deum disputandi, sive serio id sit, sive simulate; It is an evil and wicked Custom to dispute against God, whether it be in earnest,

Now my Lords, I address my felf unto you, and according to the Charge which I have re-ceived from the King my Master, I conjure you by the Amity that is betwixt his Kingdoms, and your Provinces, to awaken your Spirits, and to have a Careful Eye at this Affembly of Holland (which is already begun) ne quid Respublica detrimenti capiat, that the Com-' monwealth take no harm; which undoubtedby at one time or other will be turned upfide down, if you fuffer fuch a dangerous Contagion to harbour fo near you, and not remove it as foon as possibly you may. Furthermore, I have Commandment from his Majesty, to move you in his Name, to set down some certain Reglement in Matters of Religion throughout your Provinces, that this licentious Freedom of Disputation may be restrain'd, which breeds Factions and Parttakings; and that you would absolutely take away the Liberty of Prophefying, which Vorftins doth fo much recommend unto you in 'the Dedicatory Epistle of his Anti-Bellarmine, the Book whereof his Patrons do boast so much.

'And his Majesty doth exhort you, feeing you have heretofore taken Arms for the Liberty of your Consciences, and have endur'd a violent and bloody War, the space of Forty Years, for the Profession of the Gospel; that now, having gotten the upper Hand of your Miferies, you would not suffer the Followers of Arminius to make your Actions an Example for them to proclaim throughout the World that wicked Doctrine of the Apostacy of the The Account which his Majesty doth Saints. make of your Amity, appears fufficiently by ' the Treaties which he made with your Lordships, by the Succours which your Provinces have received from his Crowns, by the Deluge of Blood, which his Subjects have spent in your Wars. Religion is the only Solder of this Amity. For his Majesty being, by the Grace of GOD, Defender of the Faith, doth hold himself obliged to defend all those who profess the same Faith and Religion with him: But if once your Zeal begins to grow cold therein, his Majefty will then ftraightways imagine, that your Friendfhip towards him, and his Subjects, will likewife freeze by little and little.

This was the Effect of Sir Ralph Winwood's Remonstrance; to which, after fix Weeks Delay, he received this cold and ambiguous Answer:

That the States General had deliberated up-on his Majesty's Proposition and Letter, Answer, dated the 6th of October, 1611. and do give him humble Thanks for the continuance of his Royal Affection towards the Welfare of their Country, and Prefervation of Religion. And that they had entred into Confultation concerning the Articles charged against Vorstins; and the Curators of Leyden did thereupon make an Order Provisional, That Vorstius should not be admitted to the Exercise of his 'Place, but remain in Leyden only as an Inhabitant and Citizen. And in case Forstim should not be able to clear himself from those Accufacions which were laid to his Charge, at or before the next Affembly (which was to be ' holden in February following) that then they would decide the Matter with good Con-' tentment to his Majesty

My Lords,

Sir Ralph Here is not any one of you, I fuppose, in this Aisembly that will not acknowledge Protesta- the Brotherly Love wherewith the King, my Mafter, hath always affected the Good of your Provinces, and the Fatherly Care which he hath ever had to procure the Establishment of your State. In which respect, his Majesty having understood, that Vurstim was elected Divinity-Precedior of Leglan, a Person attainted by many Witnesses, is therewith exceedingly Offended. And for the timely prevention of an Infinite of Evils, did give me in charge to exhort you (which I did the 21st of September last) to wash your Hands from that Man, and not suffer him to come within your Country. To this Exhortation your Answer was, That all due Observance and Regard should be had unto his Majesty: But his Majesty hath receiv'd fo little Respect therein, that instead of debarring Vorstins from coming into the Country (which even by the Laws of Friendship his Majesty might have requir'd) the Proceedings have been clean contrary; for he is permitted to come to Leyden; hath been received there with all Honour; taken up his Habitation; Treated, and Lodg'd, in the Quality of a Publick Professor. His Majesty perceiving his first Motion had so little prevailed, writ a Letter to you to the same Purpose, full of Zeal and Affection; perswading you, by many Reasons, not to stain your own Honour, and the Heaving of the Research Churche. the Honour of the Reformed Churches, by calling unto you that wretched and wicked Atheist. These Letters were presented to this Affembly the Fifth of November last, at which time, by his Majesty's Command, I used some Speech my felf to the fame effect. Some Six Weeks after, I received an Answer, but so Confused, Ambiguous, and Impertinent, that I have reason to conceive there is no meaning at all to fend Vorftins away, who is at preferit in Leyden, received, acknowledged, respected be to grace that University instead of the Deceased Joseph Scaliger, or whether to give him means to do more Mischief in Secret, which perhaps for Shame he durft not in Publick, I cannot tell. For these Reasons, according to that Charge which I have received from the King, my Master, I do in his Name, and on his Behalf, Protest in this Assembly, against the Wrong, Injury, and Scandal, done unto the Reformed Religion, by receiving and re-taining Conradus Vorfius in the University of Leyden, and against the Violence offered unto that Alliance which is betwixt his Majesty and your Provinces; which being founded upon the Preservation and Maintenance of the Reformed Religion, you have not omitted to Violate, in the Proceeding of this Caufe. Of which Enormous Indignities committed a-gainst the Church of God, and against his Majesty's Person, in preferring the Presence of Vorstius before his Amity and Alliance, the my Master, holds himself bound to be fensible; and if Reparation be not made, and

'Majesty will make it appear unto the World, A. Reg 16 by fome Declaration (which he will cause to be Printed and Published) how much he detests the Atheisms and Hereies of Verstins, ' and all those that Maintain, Favour and Chefrish them.

To this, the Stares promifed a better Answer at their next Astembly; but that producing no good Effect, the King writes a Declaration againft Vorstins, which is extant in his own Works, collected by Doctor fames Montague, Son to Sir Edward Montague, of Bowghton in the County of Northampton, Knight, then Bishop of Winchester, and Dean of his Majesty's Chapel; in which Volume is depainted the King's excellent Spirit, and many Royal Graces tending to Religion and Piety.

Thus the States let in a Deluge of Impiety, by being fo pertinaciously affected to Vorstins; and though he lived not long among them, yet what he had planted grew up abundantly, and were the bitter Roots of these present Divi-

And after, in the Year 1613, there were many Our King Difcords among them, which our King hearing writes to of, he incited the States by Letters again (fo willing he was to have Unity among them) in 1613. that this War of the Tongue might be pacified, rather by Publick Authority than School Difputations; and, by his Mediation, for a good time the Humout was abated, or refted, as in the Interpolate Fits of Agues; but the Rancour broke out again more than ever.

For this Year 1618. (as formerly expressed) And now the Diftemper came to the State, or Height, in 1618, and had ever after a Decline. Our King hearing of the Diforders and Tumults among them, look'd upon them (now) as fo many ill Omens, portending not only the Ruine of the Netherlands, but the Tempest growing greater, might beat too foon upon the British Shores. To stay therefore the fwelling Progress of this Gangrene Humour, he prohibits his Subjects by Proclamation to fend their Children to Leyden; and follicites the States by Letters again, not only to forbid the Preaching of these Controversies, (the Pulpits being made but the Bellows of Dissertion) but commands his Ambassador, Sir Dudley Carleton, to flew them their Discafe. and then prescribes them the Cure. Disease was this; Schism in the Church, which usher'd in a Faction in the State; Jealousse and Disaffection among the Magistrates; Hatred and Heart-burning among the Common Peo-ple; Contempt of the Orders and Decrees of the chiefest Courts of Justice; Distraction among the Soldiers, being tied to feveral Forms of Oaths; Infurrections and Commotions a-mong the Companies new levied, not well Difciplin'd, (as likewise among the Common People) which have extended to Blood, to the Afrightment, Fear and Trouble of all the Provinces; at which the Enemy finiles (who happily have a Hand in the Defign) and their Friends lament to fee it so. To cure which Malady, there is no other way than to call a National Council, where these Waters of Strife being kept in due bound, the asperous Edge of Opinion might be taken off, by grave and weighty Reason, to abate the Passion both in Church and State.

The Remonstrants (which the Arminians called Barnes sin themselves) earrying on their Resolutions with a opposifull Sail, would by no means alter their Courle, the Prince fenfible; and it Reparation be not many other or confent to the calling of a Council; either that Speedily (which cannot be by any other) or confent to the calling of a Council; either Means, than by lending Verline away; bis fearing their Party in Council would prove the Westers, or confent to the calling of a Council; either of Grange.

- Action would be the strongest; for most of the States and Governors of Provinces had tafted of this infected Cup. And Bornevelt (the Head of them) being an active Person, and having a nimble Tongue, distilling into them a Jealoutie, that Maurice Prince of Orange (who had the Command of all their Garifons, as General of their Army) affected to make himself (by his Power) fole Lord and Monarch over them that the Freedom which they had purchased with their Bloods, was now ready to be trampled on; he that was their Servant, afpiring to become their Mafter; having all Power both by Sea and Land, in his own hand; all Governments, and Offices at his own dispose, so that he wanted nothing but the Title to make him Absolute. These Sparks took Fire with many, and yet they could not well fee by that Light, because Barnevelt drew these Pretences as a Curtain, to get as much Power in the Militia, as he had in their Councils, the better to bring his Ends about. Whereupon, to Balance the Prince of Orange's Power, new Companies are levied in fome of the Provinces fecretly, especially in Utreeht, meaning to make that the Stage to act their bloody Parts on: Which Town being much corrupted with the Leaven of bad Doctrine, they foon closed with the Corruption of as bad Manners.

The Prince of Orange, and fome others af-Ponce of feeted to him, did cut out their Time to the length of the others Endeavours, proportiontheir Prevention fuitable to the others Action; fo the advance of the one Party ran upon the fame Parallel with the other, being ready to tread on their Heels for hafte. And now the time being ripe, the Prince goes to Utrecht, accompanied with some of the States his Intimates, Count Ernest of Nassau, and some other Commanders of the Army, to Seife upon, or Disband those new raised Forces; in which he was opposed by Leydenburgh and other States of the Town, who incited the Governour, Sir John Ogle, our Countryman, to deny the Prince entrance; but he was too much a Friend to the Honour of his Name, and Nation, to falfine his Truft. So that the Prince encountred only with those, whose Unwillingness had Power enough if they had had Hearts to oppose him. But he finding it would be an ill Precedent to the rest of the Towns to meet a Repulse here, had ordered Five hundred Foot from Arnham, and the next Garifons, to meet him there, who entred the Town that Evening peaceably, and the next Morning about Four a Clock Disbanded the new levied Companies, before the Towns-Men were well

> The Prince had no great Reason to trust the Garrison of the City, confidering the Reformed Religion was totally kept under Hatches, and the Arminian got upon the Deck. The Governor himself suspected, and complying to outward Appearance, and the Common Soldiers running with the Stream. But he knew (it feems) their Temper afcended to no higher Nations, than Thirty Stivers a Week was able to purchase. Therefore he fammon'd them all over Night into the Market-place, without Best of Drum, who, with the other Five hundred, struck such a Terror into the new levied Companies, that, at the first Word of Command, they laid down their Arms and lubmirced. They were in that City in all Nine hundred Men, that knew they were raifed

This giving fome Stop to the Carrier of the Remonstrants in Utreelt, the rest of the Towns took up, though they had run long uncurbed. And now the Prince and State thought of nothing more than of composing the Diforders of the Church, by a National Council; which Barnevelt and his Faction opposing, they resolved to take away those Impediments that hindered the Peace and Tranquility of the Provinces. So that on the 19th of August, the prime Ring-leaders of the Sedition, Barnevelt, Hoogenberts, and Grotins, were feized on at the Hague, as they were entring the Senate, and committed to feveral Prifons. This cast a general Damp upon the Spilons. This cut a general Damp upon the opports of the Remonfrants, as if they had been crushed in the Head. And some few Days after, Leydenburgh was sent from Utrecht with a strong Guard. These being the Four chief Pilling lars whereupon this confused Building stood, they being taken away, it fell to the Ground. Leydenburgh, to prevent their Mercy, stabbed himfelf in Prison with a Knife, that opened a Pasfage to let out his Life. Hoogenberts and Grotius found femething of Mercy by waiting for it, but they were condemned to perpetual Imprifonment in the Castle of Lovestein. And the latter of them (Grotius) after some time of Imprisonment, made an Escape in a Trunk, which his Wife pretended, to the Soldiers of the Caftle, to be full of Arminian Books, which she would fend away, because they should not trouble her Husband's Head. But the Capital Offender, Barne-velr, was beheaded at the Hague the 14th of May following, being 1619. His Sentence of Death was this, That for fo Barne-

the seventy first 1 ear of his Age.

He lived to fee (that which he had fo much opposed) a National Synod held at Dort,* whither our King sent Doctor George Carlion, Bilhop of Landass; Doctor Joseph Hall, Dean of Worcesser; Doctor John Davenant, Prossofior Regims in Cambridge, and Master of Queen's College; and Doctor Samuel Ward, Regent of Sidney College in Cambridge: Divines of great Reputation, found Learning, and well-grounded Faith. Where they met with divers Divines from Switzerland and Germany, besides the Natives of the Netherlands; who altogether, in a full Synod, quashed, as much as in them lay, the Arminian Opinions: And though they could not utterly extirpate the Roots of the Heresie, yet they laid them so low, that they never broke out there fince into exuberant Branches; though fome of the Fibra, the small Veins lest behind, much tainted our Nation; as shall be expressed hereaster.

And now the Heavens declare the Glory of zing Star. God: A mighty Blazing Comet appears in Libra, whose bearded Beams covered the Virgin Sign. It began on Wednesday Morning, the 18th of November this Year, and vanished away on Wednefday the 16th of December following; making, in 28 Days Motion, its Circumgiration over most Parts of the known World, extending its radiant Locks (by the Observation of Astronomers) sometimes 45 Degrees in length. And as our Doctor Bambridge observed towards the Declination of it, about the 11th of December, it pass'd over London in the Morning, and so hasted more Northwards, even as far as the Orcades.

War, Ruine, and Devastation, in mott Parts of An. Fulgura non semper, nec semper prælia durant. Let's count it almost past, For War, like Lightning, doth not always last.

The first remarkable Accident that happened The in England after this Prodigious Forerunner, Death of was the Death of Queen Anne, who died of a Queen Dropfie at Hampton-Court, and thence brought to Anne her Palace in the Strand, for the more triumphant Glory of her Obsequies. The Common People, who naturally admire their Princes, placing them in a Region above ordinary Mortals, thought this great Light in Heaven was fent as a Flambeau to her Funeral; their dark Minds not difcovering, while this Blaze was burning, the Fire of War that broke out in Bohemia, wherein many Thoufands perished.

She was in her great Condition a good Wo- A fhort man, not tempted from that height she stood Character on, to embroil her Spirit much with things of the below her (as fome Busie-bodies do) only Queen. giving her felf content in her own House, with fuch Recreations as might not make Time tedious to her: And though great Persons Actions are often pried into, and made Envy's Mark, yet nothing could be fixed upon her that let any great Impression, but that she may have engraven upon her Monument a Character of Virtue.

About this time Henry Earl of Northumberland, Northumwho had been a Priloner in the Tower ever bernal fix since the Powder Plot (a long Recluse) was at Liberty. The Cause of his Confinement was upon a Sentence in Star-Chamber, for nourishing in his House Thomas Piercy his Kinfman, who was one of the Completters of the Treason. And though nothing could be prev'd against the Earl to endanger his Life; yet upon the Presumption of his Knowledge of it, he was Fined in Thirty thousand Pounds, and Imprisoned in the Tower. He was married to Dorotby, Eldest Daughter to Walter Earl of Ultima Calestum terras Afrea reliquit.

*For all this mighty Pother King James made against Arminius and his Doctrine, its remarkable that towards the end of his Reign, and much more in his Sons, the best way to obtain Preferments in the Church was to be of that Principle; and those that were nor, were branded with the odious Name of Puritums.

*The Notice our Author takes of this Comet, as prefaging, forfooth, mighty Events, is an instance, how far a popular Error, or the prejudice of Education, may Bysis even Men of good Sense and Learning, for such certainty the Author was. This purs me in mind of an Accident that happened about this time in Sectional, which the His florians of that Country interpreted each of them to their own Sence and Purpose.

King James had prevailed with the General Assembly of that Church which list at Persh, to come to an Agreement, with the Church of England, in Five material Articles, which were ever since call'd, the Five Articles of Persh. The Presbytecians exclaim'd against them, and opposed them with all their might; as the Epistopap Party food firm for them, as the greatest Point they had gain'd since the Reformation. When these Articles came afterwards to be Ractified in Parliament, just sathe Kings Commissioner was Touching the Act with the Seepere, (which is the manner of giving the Royal Assential Articles), the third of Parliament, just sathe Kings Commissioner was Touching the Act with the Seepere, which is the manner of giving the Royal Assential and Rain, that the like had not been known in many Ages before not frince.

Their Ecclessifical Writers of both sides, when they come to mention this Accident, are pleas'd to give it a runn fuitable to their own Genins or Interest. The Presbyterians Say; And thus Gad from Howen, by the Parlia of Thunday, expected his Assential and Rain, that the like had not been known in many Ages before not frince.

by whom he had a numerous Iffue, like Olive-Branches about his Table. The Younger Daughter, Lucy, a Lady of incomparable Beauty, (iolemnized in the Poems of the most exquisite Wits of her time) married the Lord exquinte wits of ner time) married the Lord Harget, (now made Vifcount Denseifer) against her l'ather's Will, (who aimed at higher Ex-tractions) during his Imprisonment; which the old Earl's stubborn Spirit not brooking, would never give her any thing; and Denseifer, whose Affection was above Money (setting only a Valuation upon his much-admired Bride) throve to make himfelf Meritorious, and prevailed fo with the King for his Father-in-Law, that he got his Releafe. But the old Earl would hardly be drawn to take a Release from his hand, so that when he had liberty, he re-ftrained himself; and with importunity was wrought upon, by (fuch as knew the Diftempers of his Body, might best qualific those of his Mind) persuading him, for some Indisposition, to make a Journey to the Bath, which was one special Motive to accept of his Son-in-Law's Respects.

The flout old Earl, when he was got loofe, The variable of the tout of the countries and the strength of the carring that the great Favourite, Buckingbam, of Times, was drawn about with a Coach and Six Horfes, (which was wondred at then as a Novelty, and imputed to him as a Mastring-Pride) thought if Buckingham had Six, he might very well have Eight in his Coach, with which he rode through the City of Lenden to the Bath, to the vulgar Talk and Admiration; and recovering his Health there, he lived long after at Personth in Soffex, bating this over-topping. Humour, which shewed it rather an affected Ite, than a Diffemper. Nor did this addition of Two Horfes by Buckinghum grow higher than a little Murmur. For in the late Queen's time there were no Coaches, and the first had but Two Horses; the rest crept in by Degrees, as Men at first venture to Sea. And every new thing the People disasted, they stumble at, fometimes at the Action for the Person, which rifes like a little Cloud, but foon vanishes. So after, when Buckingham came to be carried in a Chair upon Men's Shoulders, the clamour and noise of it was so extravagant, that the People would rail on him in the Streets, loathing that Men should be brought to as servile a Condition as Horses. So irksom is every little new Impression, that breaks an old Custom, and rubs and grates against the publick Humour! But when Time had made those Chairs common, every loofe Pimp, or Minion, used them; fo that, that which gave at first so much Scandal, was the Means to convey those privately to fuch Places, where they might give much more. Just like long Hair, at one time decried as abominable, at another time approved of as beautiful. So various are the Fancies of the Times! And that strong Reason is only able to manage this Beaft, that can best curb its own Appetite.
But now War breaks in upon us, following that blazing Forerunner; the House of Austria (like Pyribus and Lyfander, extending their Dominions no further than the Sword could reach) having long feathered their Nefts with the Eagles Plumes, grew formidable to the Princes and States of Germany. And because they found the Popes had fhrewdly plumed fome of their Predeceffors, till they had wreft-

A little before this time, Ferdinand (Uncles Son to Matthias the Emperor) was Crowned an 1617. King of Bohemia, with this Refervation, That he should not Exercise the Power of a King, as long as the old Emperor lived. This kind This Lind of crowning of Kings (one in the Life of another) was the great Chain, that (Link by Link) held the Empire, and the two Kingdoms of Hungaria and Bohemia together in the Austrian Family; so that the State of either Kingdom could not, or durst not, put forth their Strength to shake them afunder. The Emperor kept his Court at Vienna, King Ferdinand at Gretz in Stiria; fo that the Government of Bohemia rested in such Counsellors as the Emperor Matthias left there for the Management of Publick Affairs. These Counfellors and Ministers, with the Archbishop of Prague, broke out about this time, not only to demolish the Protestant Churches, but by the help of the Jesuits, (their bitter Enemies) strove to undermine the Religion it felf.

The Protestant States, and Nobles of the Country, summoning an Assembly, to redress their Grievances, were epposed by some of the Emperor's Ministers of State, the very day of their Meeting; which exasperated them to such a height of Passion, (being back'd by fome Forces they brought with them for their Security) that they threw Slabata the Emperor's Chief Justice, Smelanfins one of the Council of State, and Fabricius a pragmatical Secretary, from a high Window in the Castle, down into the Court, though fome of them took little hurt, and lived (as Reports go) to this time. This rash Action the Bohemians strive to palliate by Apologies to the Emperor; but withal ftrengthned themselves, making Levies both of Horse and Foot, the better to secure their own Peace, and banishing those Firebrands the Jesuits out of Prague, whose mais-cious and diffemper'd Zeal first kindled the Flame. The Emperor hearing of these Mischiefs, raifes an Army under the Command of Count Bucquey; and the Protestant States find-ing the Emperor exasperated, raise two Armies, one commanded by Count Thurne, the other by Count Mansfeldt: Some Bickrings pass'd betwixt the Imperial Army and the Bohemians, some Towns taken on both fides; and in the heat of this flir the old Emperor dies.

Ferdinand King of Hungary and Bobenia, and adopted Heir of old Mathias, meeting (after Summons) at Frankford, with the Three Electors of Mentz, Collen, and Trevers, and only with the Representatives of the other Three Electors: The Church carried it for him, and Jug 13. he was chosen King of the Romans. The States of Bohemia disclaimed the Election as invalid, because he could not be an Elector himself as King of Bohemia; for that he had never been actually in Possession of the Crown. And tho their Diffent could not leffen Ferdinand's Election to the Empire, yet they protefted by Oath never to acknowledge him for their King. These Eruptions made a Noise all over Christendom, and most knowing Men looked on this heavenly Torch, the late Comet, as fit Fuel to give Fire to fuch a Train.

Our King, fearing the Clap would fall heavy Dontalist upon the Protestant Party, sent the Viscount Ambassa-Doneaster, Extraordinary Ambassador, to medi-dor. ed most Parts of Haly from the Empire, they are a Reconciliation betwirt the Emperor and Ferdinand infinuated with the Princes of Germany, especially the Duke of Bavaria, to corroborate his Party; the Bohemians made Ele-ction of our King's Son in-Law, the Prince Elector Palatine, to be their King, hoping his great Alliance would strengthen theirs. Some little Pauses were in the Acceptation, (though a Liquorish Bait) the Elector Palatine being fearful to ingage himfelf to fnatch a Crown out of the Fire: But the Bohemian States wrought the Prince of Anhalt, the Earl of Holoch, and the Baron Done, the Palatine's Inti-mates, in their Forge (of great Promifes and Preferments) to such a Temper, that by their Affifiance (flighting the Danger) he reach'd at the Crown, before either he or his Friends were well advised of it. His Election was were well advised of it. His Election was upon the 26th of August, his Entrance into Progue the last of October, and his Coronation. the Fourth of November following. But as foon as he had accepted, and fwallowed the Royal Bait, he fent the Baron Done to our King, to excufe the fuddennels of the Accepration, before his Counfels were well concocted; but the emergency of the Cause (as he pretends) would admit of no Deliberation. As fome hasty Physicians, or cholerick Patients, to prevent a Feaver, bring the Body to a Hectick.

Our King, that looked upon his own Condi-tion through the Optick of the People's mutable and unstable Affection, would by no means countenance fuch a Precedent as should give them Power to dispose of an established Royal Dignityat their Pleasure and upon every change of Humour; for so he might shake his own Foundation, which made the Baron's Addresses crude and naufcous to his Appetite, till Time And then he difhad a little digested them. patched two Ambaffadors into Bohemia. One Weston and was Sir Richard Weston, who was afterwards Commey Lord High Treasurer of England, and left to fent Am-baffadors his Posterity the Earldom of Portland, a Man of a haughty Spirit, yet knew how, by suppling it, to make his way to the height he arrived at: For his Religion gave place to his Policy, and mounted him till he became one of the great Grievances of the Kingdom. The other was Sir Edward Convey, a Man of a groffer Temper; bred a Soldier, being Governor of Bril when England gave over her Interest in the Cautionary Towns, who was after made a Viscount, and Secretary of State, a rough impolished Piece for such an Employment. But the King, that wanted not his Abilities, would often make himfelf Merry with his imperfect Scrouls in writing, and hacking Exprefiions in reading; fo that he would break into Laughter, and fay in a facetious way, Had ev. Man fuch a Seeretary, that can neither Wife nor Read? These two were fuited for the Employment, happily upon defign: Weston being a kind of Papist, and Conwey a Protestant, the better to close up the Breach between the Emperor, and the King of Bohemia.

But Ferdinand being flartled with the flaring Glory of this new King, to cast a damp upon it, and to terrifie him and his Adherents, he caused this Proscription to be published against unhappy Event. While they were thus grappling in Bohemia, the Marquis Spinola was forming an Army in Flanders, and the Protestant Princes of Germany, sed the Rbine in Punts, a kind of Lighter, ad-Confederates to the Palatine, (calling themselves the Princes of the Union) raised Forces for the the Princes of the Union) rather roles for the Defence of the Palatinate, and their own Interest, under the Command of the Marquis of Anspach. But our King made no Preparations; yet hefent to his Ambasilador at Bruffells, commandiant to the commandiant of the Princes of the P ding him to enquire for what purpose Spinola's Army was called together, the Truce continuing betwixt Spain and the Low Countries; but the Ambaffador could receive little Satisfaction, the Spanish Subcilty having scaled up Spinela's Commission, which he was not to open till the Army were ready to march. But Men of ordinary Understanding might apprehend, that an Army of 26000 Foot, and 4000 Horse, with all Military Provisions, were not to lie still; and though our King had divers Arguments prefented to him, that did affure him that Army was intended for the Palatinate, yet would not his Spirit be fet on work to preferve his Childrens Patrimony : So odious was the Name of War to him! But at length, with much ado, one Regiment of Foot (to join with the Princes of the Union, and make a little Noise and Buille) was extorted from him by Importunities. This Regiment was the gallantest for the Persons, and outward Presence of Men, that in many Ages (I think) hath appeared either at home or abroad: It confifted of 2200 compleat; the Chief Commander Sir Horatio Vere, (who was after Baron of Tilbury) a Person bred up in the School of War, and a known Master in the Art of Victory. He was accompanied with the Earls of Oxford and Effex, young and daring Spirits, whose Honour not only descended from a long Series of Noble Progenitors, but they made it their own. And out of Respect to them, as well as Love to the Service, this Regiment was almost furnished with Gentlemen, who went to make themselves capable of better Employment; the English for many Years having been Trunns in that Art. The two Earls had 250 Men apiece in each Company; and fo many flocked to Ffix out of I ove, (and he loth to put them off) that he carried 300 Men into the Palatinate, paying 50 of them with his own Monev. The King being drawn to confent, that two Regiments more should follow for these two Noblemen, which gave the more Encouragement to this petty Enterprize.

The Much of 44 The English followed Spinola, but at a di-discharge of the being nearer to the Palatimate, but the got much the flart of them, tho they went out which Difafters happening, they admonished Palatimate,

Prince of Orange, and the Benefit of a Bridge of Boats a little below Wefel, they passed the Rhine under the Conduct of Prince Henry of Nassau, who, with 2000 Horse, and 400 Musqueriers, taken out of Gulick and the adjacent Garisons, cleared the Country before them, Maintain, through Gulickland, and the barren Mountains of Collenland, till they came near to Coblentz, which Town stands upon the Center of two Rivers, the Rhine and Mosell: Giving out in the March as if the Army intended to pass the Asofell; but the Prince (to divert the Enemies Intelligence) upon the 16th of September drew two Miles back from Coblentz, and pafvancing forward on the other fide of the River three English Miles that Night, to a Village called Hembach, where the Foot ftay'd till the Horse passed the River. And this sudden Change of Resolution was one of Prince Harry's Masterpieces; for he knew from Collen, Spinola would have Intelligence by Couriers which way the Bent of their March tended; and they had the Mofell in their Eye all the way, but the Rhine in Intention. In the Halt before Coblentz, one Bullet, among others from the Town, passed between General Vere and the Earl of Essex standards. ing together, and hit a Gentleman called Flood on the Elbow: The Caufe of fhooting from thence (as was conceived) proceeded from a Skirmish the Night before, that happened betwirt fome English and the Country People of an adjoining Village on the Mofell; for Captain Fairfax being fent with a Squadron to them in a peaceable manner, to defire the Accommoda-tion of Bread and Wine for Money, the Boors shot at him, and hurt some of his Men; but he floutly advancing to them, they took their Boats, and hafted down to Coblentz. Some of the Boors were reported to be flain, for which Fairfax, upon the Prince's Complaint, was committed, to give the Country Satisfaction; but the next day released.

Before the Army passed the Rhine, General Vere sent Captain Row and Captain Dester (with 94 sick Men, some Tents, Trunks, and other Luggage, that were cumberfome) by Water to Bacrach, which Town within few days after was fummon'd by Spinola, and yielded to him, after the Example of Openheim, and the other Towns he had taken in the Palatinate: So Spiritless were the People in every Place, that he met no Re-filtance in any thing that he attempted. The English taken in Bacrach were used with Civility, and, with the Payment of small Ransoms, had Liberty to return home. After the Army, both Horse and Foot, had passed the Rhine, they had hard Marches through the pleasant Country of Naffau, (whose Amenity and Fruitfulness may rival the Beauties of France) shaping their Course towards Francfort.

Spinola finding himself deluded on one fide spinola atof the Rhine, passed the River Main with all his tempts to Horse, and 4000 Foot, intending to snap them intercept on the other; but the Stream being too high, the English. his Waggons with Ammunition took wet, and fome Field-pieces miscarried, which could not be recover'd with the Loss of some of his Men;

1610.

The 24th of September, Prince Henry with his Horfe, and General Vere with the Foot, passed the River Main, at a Ford not far from Francfort, the Foot for the most part marching up to the middle through the Stream; and that Night they flood in Arms, having two Alarms of Spinola's Approach, not hearing yet he was retired. The next day they had a long March to recover Darmstadt, one half of which Town belongs to the King of Bobemia, the other part to the Landgrave of Hessen. There Prince Henry and the Dutch Companies left the English, and re-German Horfe, commanded by Colonel Megan, met them, by Order from the Princes of the Union. The 27th of September they came to Beinsheim, being the first entire Town in the Palatinate they arrived at; and upon the first of October passed over the Rhine by Worms, upon a Bridge of Boats; and that day were met by the Marquis of Anspach, and some others of the Princes of the Union, who stay'd to see them march by, wondering at the Gallantry of fuch Foot, who were with them the meanest of the People.

lish join with the Princes.

After two Days rest, the Princes with part of their Army, being 4000 Horfe, and 6000 Foot, joined with the English, and together marched towards Altzi, (a Town in the Palatinate that the Enemy had taken in) which they intended to surprise. But hearing by their Scouts that the Enemy had quitted the Town, as not tenable, and that Spinola with his whole Army was marching towards them, they faced about to make his way the shorter, and within three Hours their Scouts and the Enemies were in Skirmish; but the German Princes, not having their whole Army, were not forward to engage. Spinola feeing them march towards him, (being as weary as they) took the Advantage of a Hill, and forced their Horse with his Cannon to retreat; but the Princes drew their Cannon up another Hill on the right Hand of the Enemy, there being a large Bottom, and a Hill of Vineyards betwixt the two Armies, which were not visible but from thence; for the one Hill drowned the other to them in the bottom. As soon as they faw how the Enemy strove to secure himfelf, and that he was loth to come on, they judged their Strength not to be great, and therefore took a Refolution to fet upon them. The Dutch, in Courteffy, yielded the Van-guard to the English, which before they flood upon, as a Punctilio of Honour. The English General drew out of every Division 80 Mulquetiers to give the Onset, who were encouraged by that Reverend Divine Dr. Burges, (of whom mention is formerly made) who accompanied the General from England, and was an Instrument of much Good to that Regiment; tho' they needed no Encouragement at that time, being Spirits willingly prepared for fuch Enterprises.

And pre. Standing thus ready, expecting the Command pare for a of the Marquis of Anjach to begin the Charge, and the Evening hashing with a falla Fall. cuse his Slowness, General Vere, tired with his Delays, rode up the Hill, accompanied with the Earls of Oxford and Essex, and there they saw the Enemy began to march away, their Wag-gons marching in two Ranks, and the Foot on the surther side of them, the Waggons serving as a Bulwark for them; their Horse brought up the Rear; and the March was without Drum

then they made the Air shake with the Noise of A.Reg. 18. Joy of their Escape: For the Princes afterwards 1626. had Intimation, that they were not above 6000 Foot, and 2000 Horse, and that they had marched all Night, hoping to have found them in fome Security at Alzi, that they might have beaten up their Quarters before they had been fettled. But the Spaniard, like a cunning Miner, finding them in a Posture to entertain him. was loth to engage, fearing their Strength, and feeking Advantages. And if their German Heads had countermined with him, and interposed betwixt him and Openheim, (his Head Quarter, whither he was marching) being nearer to it than he, they might have either forced him to fight, or forced the Town from him. The Earl of Effex being informed of this by some that knew the Country, preffed the Marquis of Anspach to it, defiring him not to let slip an Opportunity so happily put into his Hand. He, not well pleafed to be urged to a thing fo contrary to his Humour, replied angerly, There is a Fort betwixt us and the Town, and we must pass thither under the Mercy of their Cannon. Sir Horatio Vere hearing the Marquis's Reason, said, When shall we then fight, if we flum the Cannon? But no Persual on Persual of the state of the state of the state of the state of the Spanish, and District feeling in their Force. The Dutch Horse skirmished with the Rear of the Spanish, and took 5 or 6 Horse, and some straggling Foot; that was all the Hurt done them.

The next Day they marched to Quarters a-Spinla gain, where the Soldiers found the Country and the Roots, Fruits and Wine, in the Muff; no good Roots, Fruits and Wine, in the Muff; no good burn on the soldiers with the soldiers w Preservatives: But after they had stay'd by it another.

7 or 8 Days, Spinola led them a Dance for Digestion, pretending for Keisars Luther, a Town in the Borders of the Palatinate, which made the Princes advance their whole Body to attend him; but as they drew near, he retreated; fo that they sported with one another, as Children at Seek and Find, tho' neither of their Armies could be much pleased with the sharp frosty Nights those desolate and naked Hills exposed them to: Upon the top of one of them, the English Commanders one Night burnt a great many of their Waggons to warm them; the Froft was fo violent, and the Soldiers lay in Heaps upon the Ground close together like Sheep, cover'd as it were with a Sheet of Snow. Yet they spent the time thus, till their Stoves summon'd them to warmer Lodging. And the English Regiment was disposed into three principal Garisons: General Vere commanded in Man. heim, Sir Gerrard Herbert in Heidelburgh, and Ser-jeant-Major Burrows in Frankindale, imprisoning themselves in Walls, while the Enemy roamed round about them, and they had only Power to preserve themselves; for the Princes of the Unions Forces were Garison'd in their several Countries. I have the more particularly describ'd this Expedition, because I was an Eyewitness of what passed; and if we had not had an Allay of Dutch Dulness, the Spaniard could not have carved to himself so great a Share in that Country, and their Opposers had not mouldred away their Forces as they did afterwards; which makes this Relation harsh and unpleasing.

Good The Prince of Anhair, General to the King Successin of Bohemia, in the beginning of the War, (like Buhemia, ared Morning, that is the forerunner of a foul Evening) met Victory finiting in his Face: For hearing that Bucquoy the Imperial General with his Army was drawing near Prague, he interpofed to flop his Progress, having not above 12000 Men, a far less Number than the Inspe-Bucquoy had a Wooden Stratagem, and it thriv'd accordingly: He mounted Trees upon Carriages, like Ordnance, to fright his Enemy; but they, as wife as Birds, would not leave their Prey for a while of Straw drefs'd like a Man, but charg'd upon the Mouths of fuch Cannon. Anhalt then had not fo closed with Count Mansfeldt, as to bring him up to him, (being puffed up with his last Victory) and some of his Soldiers being discontented for want of Pay, it a-bated the Edge of their Courage; yet he got with his Army betwixt the Imperialists and Prague, and stood upon the Advantage of Ground; but all would not do; a Hand went our that gave a Period to that Royalty: For the Enemy breaking through them, forced his way, and put the Bobemians into fuch Confusion, that happy was he that could escape with his Life. The Prince of Anhalt, and his Lieutenant-General Holloc, were the first that fled, and brought the News of the Defeat to the King at Prague, who (with his Queen aftonished with the Danger) being in a City not very defensible, among a wavering People, and a Conquering Enemy in the Field, took Time by the Fore-top, and in this Hurly-burly the next Morning, being the 9th of November, left Prague, taking with him their noft portable Things, having Loadenough within them: But the Queen, the more Gal-lant and Royal Spirir, carried it with moft Undauntedness; the King suffer'd doubly as he went, being blamed for keeping his Soldiers The King

And he being able to Steer his own Courfe, looked after no other Pilot but Gondemar, and those that knew the Chanel: Making Buckingham his Instrument and only Bosom Countellor in those Affairs, which afterwards brought the Hatred of the People with the more Violence upon him: For they look not upon the King in any Miscarriage with an Eye of Anger (such was the English Modesty, if Kings had been sensible of it) but upon such intimate Ministers, as he makes active in those things which are contrary to their Affection. And though there were general Murmurs in the Breatts of the People, which found vent enough in Corners, yet the Council-Table and Star-Cham-ber are such Terrisiers, that (as one said) None durst run Riot, but keep at the Stirrop, at excellent Command, and come in at the least Rebuke Balconies, or Windows, to present him their or Check.

It was thought the Papifts did much contribute to Gondeman's Liberality; for they began to flourish in the Kingdom, he having procured many Immunities for them; and they used all their Industry to further the Match; hoping, that if the Prince did not adhere to Rome, yet his Offspring might; and at prefent looked for little less than a Toleration.

His Mother is created a Countess by Patent, and her second Husband, Sir Thomas Compton, had no other Title but an Unworthy one, which the People (either out of their Anger, or her Mildemeanour) imposed upon him. Her edest Son, first made Sir John Tillers, after, Viscount Purbeck, married to the Daughter and Heir of the Lady Elizabeth Hutton by Sir Edward Coke; a Lady of transcending Beauty, but accused for Wantonness. Purbeck not well able to look down from the Heights, got a Giddiness in his Head, which confined him to a dark Room. Her other Son. first made Sir Christopher Villers, was after created Earl of Angleley, whose Honour, mixt with a Weak Brain, could not buoy him up from finking into that Distemper that drowns the best Wits. Her Daughter prefently after also shin'd in the fame Sphere with her; her Husband being from a private Gentleman made Earl of Denbigh. Happy is he can get a Kinfwoman, it is the next way to a thriving Office, or fome new fwelling Title. The King, that never nuch cared for Women, had his Court fwarm-ing with the Marqueffes kindred fo, that little ones would dance up and down the privy Lodgings like Pharies; and it was no fmall Sap would maintain all those Suckers.

And now we have named Sir Thomas Compton, there will follow a Story of his youthful Actions, which, though done long fince, will not be uncomely to croud in here. He had the remark of a flow-spirited Man when he was young, and truly his Wife made him retain is to the laft. But fuch as found him so in those Vigorous Days of Duelling, would trample on his Easiness; and there could not a worse Cha-Ins Eatines; and there could not a worle Character be imprinted on any Man, than to be terined a Coward. Among the reft, one Bird, a roaring Captain, was the more bold and infolent againft him, because he found him flow, and backward (which is a Baseness of an Overdaire News) and his Preservoir states. daring Nature) and his Provocations were fo great, that some of Compton's Friends taking notice of it, told him, It were better to die no-bly once, than to live infamously ever; and wrought so upon his cold Temper, that the next Affront that this bold Bird put upon him, he was heartned into the Courage to fend him a Challenge. Bird, a massy great Fellow, confident of his own Strength (diffaining Compton, A.R.cg. 18. being lefs both in Stature and Courage) told m. Comft, the Second that brought the Challenge, in a 1610 Yapouring manner, That he would not flir a Foot to encounter Compton, unlefs he would not a print be five. meet him in a Sawpit, where he might be fure Compton could not run away from him: The Second, that look'd upon this as a Rodomontado Fancy, told him, That if he would appoint the Place, Compton should not fail to meet him. Bird making choice both of the Place and Weapon (which in the vain formality of Fighters was in the Election of the Challenged) he chose a Sawpit, and a fingle Sword; where, according to the time appointed, they met. Being both together in the Pit, with Swords drawn, and stript ready for the Encounter, Now, Compton, (said Bird) thou shalt not escape from me; and hovering his Sword over his Head, in a disdainful manner, faid, Come, Compton, let's fee what you can do now: Compton attending his Business with a watchful Eye, feeing Bird's Sword hovering over him, ran under it, in upon him, and in a moment run him through the Body; so that his Pride fell to the Ground, and there did fpraul out its last Vanity. Which should teach us, that strong Presumption is the greatest Weakness; and it's far from Wisdom in the most arrogant Strength, to slight and disdain the meanest Adversary. There is yet in Bleeding Memory (even in these Times of Just Severity against this Impious Duelling) one of the fame Family of the Compton's, in some part guilty of Bird's Crime; for the Provoker to such horrid Encounters seldom escapes, the Divine Juffice permitting fuch violent Madness to tend to its own Destruction. But to return to our Story.

Sir Henry Mountague, Lord Chief Justice (as the Two Lord Reports of those Times lively voted) laid down Treatu-Twenty thousand Pounds for the Office of Lord ters in Treafurer; and before the Year expir'd, it was conferred upon Sir Lionel Cranfeld, who had been a Citizen of London, bred up in the Cuffemburg; and knowing the fecret Contrivances of those Officers, was thought fittest to manage the King's Revenue: For in expensive and wanting Courts, those great Officers are most acceptable, that by their Finenesses and Projects can bring in that, which with Riot and Prodigality goes out. But the great step to his Office, was Cranfield's marrying one of the Marquis's Kindred, which mounted him prefently after to be Earl of Middlesex. The Lord Chief Justice for his Money was made a Precedent, as some jested; the King finding him a Man intelligent in all the great Affairs of State, made him Lord President of the Council, Viscount Mandevill, and Earl of Manchester, and, after the Death of Worcester, was Lord Privy-Scal.

But though the Marquis of Buckingham in The appearance aded all these Removes, and Ad. Counters' vancements, yet his Mother, the Counters' of parawrought them in effect; for her hand was in all Translations, both in Church and State; and rules her must need know the Disposition of all Things, when she had a feeling of every Man's Pulse; || for most Addresses were made to her first; and by her conveyed to her Son (for he looked after his Pleafure more than his Profit) which made Gondemar (who was well skill'd in Court Holy-Water) among other his witty

In one of King Jame's Original Letters in the above-mention'd Colletton to the Duke of Buckingham there is a Pailing that plainly confirms this. The King tells him, That the Treasure had made too law a pargain with the East-India Compuny fr a Prefest to his Matter: But that he (the King) had had letter luck in taking the Management of it out of the Trayear: I lands, and had go of them Two thoughand Pounts for her. For the Marquis himfelf, as he was a Man of Bucking.

For the Marquis himfelf, as he was a xuan or hard to exceellent Symetry, and proportion of Parts, ver of Le-fo he affected Beauty, where he found it; but get he looks upon the whole Race of Women as inferior Things, and ufes them as if the Sex were one, beft pleafed with all: And if his Eye was a xuan or support to the second of the second cull'd out a wanton Beauty, he had his Setters that could fpread their Nets, and point a Meeting at fome Ladies House, where he should come (as by Accident) and find Accesses, while all his Train attended at the Door, as if it were an Honourable Visit. The Earl of Ruland, of a Noble Family, had but one Daughter to be the Miftress of his great Fortune; and he tempts her; carries her to his Lodgings in Whitehall; keeps her there for fome time, and then re-turns her back again to her Father. The flout old Earl fent him this threatning Meffage, That he had too much of a Gentleman to suffer such an Indignity; and if he did not marry his Daughter to repair her Honour, no Greatness should protect him from his Justice. Buckingham, that perhaps made it his Defign to get the Father's good Will this way (being the greatest Match in the King-dom) had no reason to mislike the Union, therefore he quickly falved up the Wound, before it grew to a Quarrel: And if this Marriage flopt the Current of his Sins, he had the less to answer for. This young Lady was bred a Papist by her Mother; but after her Marriage to the Marquess, she was converted by Doctor White (as was pretended) and grew a Zealous Protestant; but like a Morning Dew, it quickly vanished: For the old Countess of Buckingham never left working by her fweet Instruments the Jefuits, till the had placed her on the first Foun-So that the Marquess, betwixt a † Modation. ther and a Wife, began to be indifferent, no Papift, yet no Protestant; but the Arminian Tenets taking Root, were nourished up by him; and those that did not hold the same Opinions, were counted Puritans. These new ferences now grew fo hot in England, that the Protestant Cause grew very cold in Germany. Which made the Spirits of most Men rise against the Spanish Faction at home, and Spain's incroaching Monarchy abroad.

The King calls a Parliament.

And though the King fped ill the last Parlia-ment of Somerset's Undertaking, and thought to lay them by for ever (as he often expressed) looking upon them as Incroachers into his Prerogative, and Diminishers of his Majesty and Glory, making Kings less, and Subjects more than they are: Yet now, finding the Peoples defires high-mounted for regaining the Palatinate, he thought they would look only up towards that, and liberally open their Purfes, which he might make use of; and this Unanimity and good Agreement, betwixt him and his People, would induce his Brother of Spain to be more Active in the Treaty in Hand; and fo he should have Supply from the One, and Difpatch from the Other. But Parliaments that are like Phyficians to the Bodies of Commonwealths, when the Humours are once flirred, they find Canfe enough many times to administer sharp Medicines, where there was little appearance of Dif-gales. For in this Recess and Ease, Time-fervers and Flatterers had cried up the Preroga- A.R.g.18, tive: And the King wanting Money for his vaft Expences, had furnished himself by unusual Ancorification. Courses. For Kings excessive in Gifts, will find Followers exceffive in Demands; and they that weaken themfelves in giving, lofe more in gaweaken themselves in groung, for a transfer thering, than they gain in the Gift: For Pro-Sir Robert digality in a Sovereign, ends in the Rapine and Spoil Cetton, of the Subject. To help himself therefore, and Hen. 3. those that dreined from him, he had granted feveral Patents to Undertakers and Monopolizers, whereby they preyed upon the People by zers, whereby they preyed upon the People by Suits and Exadions, milk'd the Kingdom, and kept it poor; the King taking his Eafe, and giving way to Informers; the Gentry grown Debauched, and Fafhion-mongers; and the Commons, fopt and beforted with Quiet and Restiness, drunk in so much Disability, that it might well be faid by Gondemar, England had a great many People, but few Men: And he would finile at their Musters; for through disuse they were grown careless of Military Discipline; iil provided of Arms; Esseminate; Othicers neglecting their Charges and Duties, conniving for Gain at their Neighbours Miscarriages. Some of the Officers in the Militia, and Justices of the Peace not a few, being Church-Papifts, floating upon the smooth Stream of the Times, overwhelming all others that opposed them, Stigmatizing them with the Name of Puritans; and that was Mark enough to hinder the Current of any Proceeding or Preferment aimed at, or hoped for, either in Church or State.

And the Jefuits ranging up and down (like Jefuits Spirits let loofe) did not now, as formerly fwarm, creep into Corners, ufing clofe and cunning Artifices; but practifed them openly, having admission to our Counsellors of State; for when Secretaries, and fuch as manage the intimate Counfels of Kings, are Jefuitical and Clients to the Pope, there can be no tendency of Affection to a contrary Religion or Policy. were only most active in the Court of England that courted the King of Spain most, and could carry the Face of a Protestant, and the Heart of a Papift; the rest were contented to go along with the Cry: For they hunted but a cold Scent, and could pick out, and make nothing of it, that drew off, or crossed, or hunted Counter. Which raifed the Spirits of the People so high against them that were the Chief Hunters in these Times, that they brought the King himfelf within the Compals of their Libels and Pasquils, charging him to love his Hounds better than his People. And if this bad Blood had been heated to an itch of Innovation, it would have broke out to a very fore and incurable Malady: every Man feeing the Danger, few Men daring to prevent it. The Pulpits were the most bold Opposers; but if they touch'd any thing upon the Spanish Policy, or the intended Treaties (for the Restitution of the Palatinate was included in the Marriage before it was the Spaniards to give) their Mouths must be stopt by Gondemar, without the Lady faceb's Receipt, and (it may be) confined, or imprison'd for it: So that there were no plain downright Blows to be given; but if they cunningly, and fubtily, could glance at the Missemeanors of the Times, and finooth it over Metaphorically, it would pass current, though before the King himfelf.

1620. A Satyrical Sei-

A.R.T. 18 For about this time, one of his own Chaplains, preaching before him at Grannich, took of this Text, Mat. 4. 8. And the Devil to k Jefin to the top of a Mountain, and shewed him all the King-dims of the World, saying, All these will I give, &c. He shewed what Power the Devil had in the World at that time, when he fpake thefe Words; and from thence he came down to the Power of the Devil now. And dividing the World into Four Parts, he could not make the least of the Four to be Christian; and of those, how few went Gods way? So that he concluded the Devil to be a great Monarch, having fo many Kingdoms under his Command; and no doubt he had his Vice-Roys, Council of State, Treafurers, Secretaries, and many other Officers, to Manage and Order his Affairs; for there was Order in Hell it felf; which after he had muflered together, he gives a Character of every particular Officer, who were fit to be the Devil's Servants; running through the Body of the Court; discovering the Correspondencies with Jefuits; fecret Penfions from Foreign Princes; betraying their Masters Counsels to deserve their Rewards, working and combining to the Prejudice of God's People. And when he came to describe the Devil's Treasurers Exactions and Gripings, to get Money, he fix d his Eye upon Cranfield, then Lord Treasurer (whose Marriage into the House of Fortune, and Title of Earl, could not keep him from being Odi-ous to the People) and pointing at him with his Hand, faid with an Emphifix, That Man (reiterating it) That Man, that makes bimfelf rich, and his Master poor, he is a fit Treasurer for the Devil. This the Author heard, and faw, whilft Cranfield fat with his Hat pulled down over his Eyes, ashamed to look up, left he should find all Mens Eyes fix'd upon him; the King, who fat just over him, fmiling at the quaint Satyr so handsomely coloured over. It seems Neile, the Bishop of Lincoln, was not by him then; for when any Man preached that had the Re-nown of Piety (unwilling the King should hear him) he would in the Sermon time entertain the King with a Merry Tale (that I may give it no worfe Title) which the King would after laugh at, and tell those near him, he could not hear the Preacher for the old B. Bishop. We must confess, this Relation finells too rank, but it was too true, and hope the Modest Reader will excuse it (we having had divers Hammerings and Conflicts within us to leave it out) feeing it proceeds not from any rancour of Spirit against the Prelacy, but roVin-dicate God's Justice to Posterity, (who never punishes without a Cause) and such-like Practices as these were doubtless put upon the Score, which afterwards gave a Period to that Hierarchy. This Man's Hand helped to close up the Countefs of Effec's Virginity, when he was Co-ventry and Litchfield; His Heart had this kind of Vanity when he was Lincoln; and when he was Archbishop of York, his Head was so fill'd with Arminian Impiety, that in the next King's Reign he was looked upon by the Parliament to be one of the great Grievances of the Kingdom; as will follow in the Tract of this Story. But England was not only Mann'd with Jesuits

Jefuitri-(all Power failing to oppose them) but the Women also began to practife the Trade, calling themselves Jesinizates. This Order was first set a-foot in Flanders, by Mistress Ward, and Mistress Twittie, Two Englift Gentlewomen, who cloath a themselves in Ignatian Habit, and were Countenanced and Supported by Father Gound, Re-

Aor of the English College at Liege with Eather 47 Father Benefild, and others, opposed drain, and would not blefs them with as heptemane; for which seems seems their Defign was to peach the Gospale or their Sex in England. And in there it in o this Mrs. Land Sex in England. And in Beert the One-Fig. Them they the Pope's Indulgence) became the Mecher-General of no fels than Two hundred Figliph Damfels of good Birth and Quality, whom has fent abroad to Preach; and they were to give account to her of their Apoffolick Labours. This Spawn out of the Mouth of the Beaft, and many other fine Jesuitical Exploits, are more particularly related by Wadpworth in his Spenish Pilgrim (who was Son to that Wadfworth, that went over Chaplain into Spain with our King's first Leidger Ambassador Sir Charles Cornwal and there perverted by the Jefuits) which young Man being bred up at St. Omer's, in the Nursery of Jesuitism, discover'd all their Machinations. Such a brood of Vipers being then nourifhed in the Bowels of this Kingdom.

The King, that either thought these Instru-The Parments were not fo Active, or that they would liament not be discovered, was resolved upon a Parlia-meet rement, for the former Reasons, which began the 20th Jan. Twentieth of January this Year; yet not being ignorant of some Miscarriages that passed by his Allowance, he strives to palliate them; and gives the Parliament some little Touches of them by the way, that when they should find them, they might (by his Anticipation) appear the lefs. And being loth to have the Breach between Him and his People made wider, he

'MY Lords, Spiritual and Temporal, and The you the Commens, Cui multilequia King's deeft peccatum? In the laft Parliament I made speech long Difcourfes; especially to them of the for the Lower House, I did open the true Thought ment. of my Heart. But I may say with our Saylour, I have piped to you, and you have not dan-ced; I have mourned, and you have not lamonted. Yet as no Man's Actions can be Free, fo in me, God found fome Spices of Vanity, and fo all my Sayings turned to me again, without any Success. And now to tell the Reasons of your Calling, and this Meeting, apply it to your felves, and fpend not the Time in long Speeches. Confider, That the Parliament is a Thing composed of a Head and a Body; the Monarch, and the Two Estates: It was first a Monarchy, then after a Parliament; there are no Parliaments but in Monarchical Governments; for in Venice, the Netherlands, and other Free Governments, there are none. The Head is to call the Body together; and for the Clergy, the Bishops are Chief; for Shires, their Knights; and for Towns and Cities, their Burgelles and Citizens. These are to treat of difficult Matters, and counsel their King with their best Advice, to make Laws for the Commonweal; and the Lower-House is also to Petition the King, and acquaint him with their Grievances, and not to meddle with their King's Prerogative. They are to offer their Lings Prerogative. They are to offer Supply for his Necefficy; and he to ditribute, in recompense thereof, Justice and Mercy. As in all Parliaments, it is the King's Office to make good Laws (whofe Fundamental Caufe is the Peoples ill Manners) fo at this time. They are the statement of the Caufe o time. That we may meet with the new Abuses, and the incroaching Crast of the Times, Particulars shall be read hereaster.

"As touching Religion. Laws enough are made already; it stands in Two Points, Per-Vol. II.

the Right-hand and Left-hand, are forward to perfwade unto their own Ends; and so ought you the Bishops, in your Example and Preaching; but Compulsion to obey, is to bind the Confcience.

'There is a talk of the Match with Spain: But if it should not prove a furtherance to Religion, I am not worthy to be your King. 'I will never proceed, but to the Glory of God, and Content of my Subjects.

'For a Supply to my Necessities. I have reigned Eighteen Years, in which time you have had Peace; and I have received far less Supply than hath been given to any King fince the Conquest. The last Queen, of Famous Memory, had one Year with another above a Hun-'dred thousand Pounds per Annum in Subsidies:
'And in all my time I had but Four Subsidies, and Six Fifteens. It is Ten Years fince I had a Subfidy, in all which time I have been sparing to trouble you. I have turned my felf as nearly to fave Expences as I may. I have abated much in my Houthold Expences, in my Navies, in the Charge of my Munition:

'I Imade not choice of an old beaten Soldier for 'my Admiral, but rather chose a young Man, whose Honesty and Integrity I knew; whose ' Care hath been to appoint under him fufficient 'Men to lessen my Charges, which he hath done.

'Touching the Miserable Dissentions in Chrifendom. I was not the Caufe thercof; for the appearing whercof, I fent my Lord of Doncafter, whose Journey cost me Three thou-' fand Five hundred Pounds. My Son-in-law fent to me for Advice, but within Three Days after accepted of the Crown; which I did never approve of for Three Reafons.

'First, for Religion sake, as not holding with the Jesuits disposing of Kingdoms, rather learning of our Saviour to uphold, not to overthrow them.

Secondly, I was no judge between them, * neither acquainted with the Laws of Bohemia.

* Just me judicem fecit?

Thirdly, I have treated a Peace, and therefore will not be a Party. Yet I left not to preferve my Childrens Patrimony; for I had a Contribution of my Lords and Subjects, which amounted to a great Sum. I borrowed of my Brother of Denmark Seven thousand five hundred Pounds to help him, and fent as much to him as made it up Ten thousand: And Thirty thousand I sent to the Princes of the Union to hearten them. I have loft no time; had the Princes of the Union done their Part, that Handful of Men I fent had done theirs. I intend to fend by way of Per-' swasion, which in this Age will little avail, ' unless a strong Hand assist. Wherefore I purpole to provide an Army the next Summer, and defire you to confider of my Necessities, as you have done to my Predecessors. Qui ein dat, bis dat. I will engage my Crown, my Blood, and my Soul in that Recovery.

You may be informed of me in things in course of Justice; but I never sent to any of my Judges to give Sentence contrary to the Law. Confider the Trade, for the making thereof better; and flew me the Reason why my Mint, for these Light or Nine Years, hath my Almr, for these Light or Nine Years, hath not gone. I confess, I have been Liberal in faid, Sir, This is but your Ordinary Diet; now you my Grants; but if the informed, I will a found have senseling Extraordinary Diet; now you mend all hurtful Grievances: But who shall an Extraordinary Ambassilador. The Prince think-himself Popular, he hath the Spirit of Satan.

If I may know my Errors, I will reform them.
I was in my first Parliament a Novice; and Ison. in my last, there was a kind of Beatls, called Undertakers, a Dozen of whom undertook to govern the last Parliament, and they led Me. I shall thank you for your good Office, and defire that the World may say well of our ' Agreement.

Physicians have an Aphorism, Si caput insimum, The Par-cetera membrum dolent. This Head is not a weak liament one, but fubtil enough for the Body. The comply Parliament knew well whom they had to with the deal with, and managed their Business in the King. Beginning, that they were the readier to grap-gle with him in the End. They would not fiir a Stone of that Foundation his Prerogative rested on; but those Men that had wrought themselves in, to supplant and undermine the Common Liberties, they fell fore upon them.

The King was modeft, and almost asham'd Doncaster's to tell the Parliament, how much Money the Ambaffy Viscount Doncaster's Journey cost; therefore he expensions it into a small Proportion. But this we know, when he landed at Rotterdam, the First Night and Morning, before he went to the Hague, his Expences those two Meals, in the Inn where he lay, came to above a Thousand Gilders, which is a Hundred Pounds Sterling.

And the Inn-keeper at the Peacock at Dorr (hoping he would make that his way into Germany) made great Provisions for him, upon no other Order, but a bare Fancy; and the Ambaffador taking his way by Utreebt, the Innkeeper of Dort followed him; complaining, That he was much prejudiced by his baulking that Town: For hearing of a great Ambassa-dor's coming, and what he had expended at Rotterdam, I made (faith he) Preparations func-able, and now they will lye on my Hands: Which coming to Doncafter's Ear, he comman-ded his Steward to give him Thirty Pounds Steeling, and never tafted of his Cup. And we Rotterdam, I made (faith he) Preparations suit-Sterling, and never tafted of his Cup. And we have been affured by fome of his Train, that his very Carriages could not coft fo little as Threefcore Pounds a Day; for he had with him a great many Noblemens Sons, and other Personages of Quality, that the Germans might admire the Glory of the English, as well as the French did in his last Ambassage. And he was out folong following the Emperor, in his Progreffes from City to Camp, and from Camp to City, a poor humble Sollicitor, if not Petitioner, that his Expence could not amount to less than Fifty or Threefcore thousand Pounds.

When he was at the Higue, had made his He is Vifits, and filled the Town with the Admira-feafled by tion of his Bravery and Feafts: Some intimates the Prince to Maurice Prince of Orange, advised him to of Orange. Feast the great English Ambassador. Tes, yes, (saith the Prince) bid him come. When the Prince's Steward had notice of the Invitation (from other Hands, for the Prince gave no Order in it) he comes to the Prince and tells him, There will be great Preparations expe-éted, for the Ambaliador's ordinary Meals were Feafls; and he had a numerous and fplendid Train of Nobles and Gentry that did accompany him. Well (faid the Prince) fit me a Dinner fuch as I used to have, and let me see the Bill of Fare. When the Steward brought the

we know not whether it were by Accident, or His flort on Purpole, to displease him. But this is well Character, known, there could be nothing more contemptible to the Morofe and Severe Temper of the Prince's Spirit, than this Comportment of Doncafter's, which most Men interpreted Pride and Prodigality. But truly (fet those Vanities of Grandure aside for the Honour, though not Profit of his Master) he was a Gentleman every way compleat. His Bounty was adorned with Courtesie, his Courtesie not affected, but resulting from a natural Civility in him. His Humbleness set him below the Envy of most, and his Bounty brought him into Esteem with many. A true Courtier for complying, and one that had Language enough to be Real as well as Formal; for he could Personate both to the height of Expression. So that he was very fit for his Employment, though it were purchased at a dear rate.

Digby Germany.

The King's

Want's.

But to leave this Digreffion. Some fmall goes into time after the Parliament began, the King, according to his Intentions and Expreffions in his Speech to them, dispatched away the Lord Digby Ambassador to the Emperor, where he was to press for a punctual Answer, whether the Palatinate might be recover'd by Peace, or War.

And now expecting his return, and the Emperor's Anfwer, the Parliament go on with their Work; receiving divers Pertitions from feveral Perfons imprison'd and ruined, by the violent Extortions of such Ministers and Informers, as were active to promote the illegal Exactions, that the King's Necessities and ill-advised Councils drive him to. For he was grown very low, not having had the Affilance of his People in Ten Years, (as he himself Notes) fo that he was forced to lessen his Houshold, and bring his Expences down, not being willing to call a Parliament to supply him. Like Hemy the Third, of England, whose Life and Reign, Sir Robert Cotton (that able Understander and Lover of Antiquities) wrote about this time, wherein he presents that King so fearful of calling Parliaments, that he would rather pawn his Crown Jewels, give over his House, & cum Abbatibus, & Prioribus prandere, Dine and Eat with the Monks, rather than be beholden to his People. And fome thought this Piece of Sir Robert Cotton's a Parallel for these Times. But our King was not so much neceffitated, though his Wants were the Greater, because they confined the Greatness of his Mind.

The Peo- The main Things which the Parliament in-ples Grie- fifted on (though many others came by the vances. by) were the Three great Patents; for Inns, Ale-houses, and Gold and Silver Thread. Upon every Inn, and Ale-house, there was a great Fine and Annual Revenue set throughout the Kingdom; and they that would not pay fo much as the Patentees affest'd them at, their Goods and Persons were seised on, till they gave them Satisfaction according to their Voraginous Humours. And they found out a new Alchimistical way to make Gold and Silver Lace with Copper, and other Sophisticate Materials, to cozen and deceive the People; and no Man must make, or vent any but such Factors as they employed; fo that they engroffed all the whole Trade of that Ages Vanity (which was enough) and gave them counterfeit Ware for their Money. And if any Man were found to make any other Lace than what was allowed A.Reg. 19. by them, they were made to know (to their dear Experience) the Power of these Engrof 1621. fers : And fo poisonous were the Drugs that made up this deceitful Composition, that they rotted the Hands and Arms, and brought Lame nefs upon those that wrought it; some losing their Eyes, and many their Lives, by the Ve-nom of the Vapours that came from it.

The chief Actors in this Peftilent Bufiness, Mompession

The chief Actors in this Politicat Buffnels, Monoglia were Sir Gilsa Monoglia, and sir Francis Michel: and Mi-Thefe two moved all the Under Wheels. Monachin them, politic had Fortune enough in the Country to make him happy, if that Sphere could have contained him; but the Vulgar and Univerfal Error of Satiety, with prefent Enjoyments, made him too big for a Ruffical Condition; and when he came at Court, he was too little for that. So that Grow Novalus until the for that: So that some Novelty must be taken up, to set him (if he knew his own Mind) in Aquilibrio to the Place he was in; no matter what it was, let it be never fo Peftilent and Mischievous to others, he cared not, so he found Benefit by it. To him Michel is made Compartner, a poor fneaking Juffice, that lived among the Brothels near Charkenwell, whose Clerk and he pick'd a Livelihood out of those Corners, giving Warrants for what they did; befides Anniverlary Stipends (the frequent Revenue of fome Justices of those Times) for Connivency. I know how necessary and how fplendent it is for Men of Publick Minds to flourish in the Execution of Justice, for weeding out, and extirpating Vitious Habits, radicated in every Corner; but this Thing was a poifonous Plant in its own Nature, and the fitter to be an Ingredient to fuch a Composition: Therefore he is brought to Court, Knighted, and corroborated by these Letters-Patents, whereby he took liberty to be more Ravenous upon poor People, to the grating of the Bones, and fucking out the very Marrow of their Substance.

These Oppressions were throughly ripped up, The Fatand laid open by the House of Commons. But, liaments together with these Proceedings, they took No-goodness. tice of the King's Wants, and thought fit fome-thing to sweeteen his Temper, that they might not take from him the little Profit he had by those Patents, but they would make it up some other way; therefore they gave him two entire Subsidies, which were very acceptable to him: For those Contributions that flow from the Peoples Love, come frely like a Spring-Tide; but illegal Taxes racked from their Bowels (coming through fo many Promoters and Catchpoles hands) run very low, and the King hath the least Share.

The King hearing these Patents were anatomized in the House of Commons, and willing to comply with his People, whom he found fo bountiful unto him; he comes to the House of Lords to close gently with them, and excuse the Granting of those Patents; shewing some Reasons why he did them, and the Instructions he gave for the Execution of them; by which he hoped to take off that fharp Reflection that might light upon him. But the Modesty of Parliaments seldom impute any of these Miscarriages to the Prince, but the Actors under him must bear the Burthen of it: And the time drawing near that the Lords affigned for judging the Malefactors, the King comes again to the House upon the Twenty Sixth of March; and thus passed his Sentence upon the Parents, before the Lords should pass theirs upon the Executioners of them.

A Rev. 19. An, Christi e 1621 The

Mr Lords. H E last time I came hither, my Errand was to inform you (as well as my Memory could serve me of things so long passed) of the Verity of my Proceedings, and the Cau-'tion used by me in passing those Letters Pa-King's 'tion used by me in paining the Speech to tents, which are now in question before you, the Lords, which are now in quetton be abufed in the Execution: And this I did by way of Declaration. But now I am come (underftanding the time of your Censure at hand) to express my readiness to put in Execution (which is the Life of the Law) those things which ye are to Sentence, (for even the Law it felf is a dead Letter without Execution) for which Office God hath appointed me in thefe King-doms. And the I affure my felf, That my former Behaviour, in all the Course of my Life, hath made me well known for a just King; yet in this special Case, I thought sit to express my own Intentions, out of my own Mouth, for Punishment of Things complain'd of: The first Proof whereof I have given, by the diligent Search I caused to be made after the Person of Sir Giles Mompesson, who tho' he were fled, yet my Proclamation pursu'd him instantly: And as I was earnest in that, so will I be to fee your Sentence against him put in Execution.

'Two Reasons move me to be earnest in the Ex-'ecution of what ye are to Sentence at this time.
'First, That Duty I owe to God, who hath made me a King, and tied me to the Care of Government, by that Politick Marriage betwixt me and my People: For I do affure you in the Heart of an honest Man, and by the 'Faith of a Christian King, (which both ye and all the World know me to be) had these 'Things been complained of to me before the ' Parliament, I would have done the Office of a just King, and out of Parliament have punished them, as feverely, and peradventure more than ye now intend to do. But now that they are discovered to me in Parliament, I shall be as ready in this way, as I should have been in the other: For I confess, I am asham'd (these Things proving fo as they are generally reported to be) that it was not my good Fortune to be the only Author of the Reformation and Punishment of them, by fome ordinary Courts of Justice. Nevertheless, since these Things are now discovered by Parliament, which before I knew not of, nor could so well have discovered otherwise, in regard of that Representative Body of the Kingdom, which comes from all Parts of the Country, I will be never a-whit the flower to do my Part for the Execution. For (as many of you that are here have heard me often fay, and fo I will stillfay) fo precious unto me is the publick Good, that no private Person whatsoever (were he never fo dear unto me) fhall be respected by me by many Degrees as the publick Good, not only of the whole Commonwealth, but even of a particular Corporation, that is a Member of it. And I hope that ye my Lords will do me that Right, to publish to my People rhis my Heart and Purpose.

'The Second Reason is, That I intend not to derogate or infringe any of the Liberties or Privileges of this House, but rather to for-tify and ftrengthen them: For never any King hath done fo much for the Nobility of England as I have done, and will ever be ready to do. And whatfoever I shall fay, and deliver unto you as my Thought, yet when I have faid " what I think, I will afterwards freely leave the ' Judgment wholly to your House. I know you A. Reg. 19 will do nothing but what the like hath been done before; and I pray you be not jealous that I will abridge you of any thing that hath been used: For whatsoever the Precedents (in Times of good Government) can warrant, I will allow: For I acknowledge this to be the Supreme Court of Justice, wherein I am ever present by Representation. And in this ye may be the better satisfied by my own Presence, coming divers times among you: Neither can I give you any greater Affurance, or better Pledge of this my Purpofe, than that I have done you the Honour to fer my only Son a-mong you, and hope that ye with him shall have the Means to make this the happiest Parliament that ever was in England. 'This I profess, and take Comfort in, That the House of Commons at this time have fhewed greater Love, and used me with more Respect, in all their Proceedings, than ever any House of Commons have heretofore done to me, or I think to any of my Predecessors. As for this House of yours, I have always found it Respective to me, and accordingly do I, and ever did, favour you, as you well deferved. And I hope it will be accounted a Happiness for you, that my Son doth now fit among you; who, when it shall please God to fet him in my Place, will then remember that he was once a Member of your House, and so be bound to maintain all your Lawful Privileges, and like the better of you all the Days of his Life. But because the World at this time talks so much of Bribes, I have just Cause to sear the whole Body of this House hath bribed him to be a good Instrument for you upon all Occasions: He doth so good Offices in all his Reports to me, both for the House in general, and every one of you in particular. And the like I may fay of one that fits there, Buckingbam: He hath been fo ready upon all Occasions to do good Offices, both for the House in general, and every Member in particular. One Proof thereof, I hope, my Lord of Arundel hath already witnessed unto you, in his Report made unto you of my Anfwer touching the Privileges of the Nobility, how earnestly he spake unto me of that Matter.

' Now, my Lords, the time draws near of your Recels; whether Formality will leave you Time for proceeding now to Sentence againft all, or any of the Perfons now in que-flion, I know not. But for my part, fince both Houses have dealt so lovingly and freely with me, in giving me, as a Free Gift, two Subfidies, in a more loving manner than hath been given to any King before, and fo accepted by me: And fince I cannot yet retribute by a General Pardon, which hath by Form ufually been referved to the end of a Parliament : the least I can do (which I can forbear no longer) is to do fomething in present, for the Ease and Good of my People. Three Patents at this time have been complained of, and thought great Grievances.

1. That of the Inns and Hosteries.
2. That of Ale-houses.
3. That of Gold and Silver Three.

That of Gold and Silver Thread. 'My Purpose is to strike them all dead; and that Time may not be loft, I will have it done prefently. That concerning Ale-houses, would have to be left to the managing of Juflices of the Peace, as before. That of Gold and Silver Thread was most vilely executed, ' both for Wrong done to Mens Persons, as al-' fo for Abuse in the Stuff; for it was a kind of

A. Reg. 19. false Coin. I have already freed the Persons that were in Prison, I will now also damn the An. Christic Patent; and this may feem instead of a Pardon. All these three I will have recalled by Pro-clamation, and wish you to advise of the sittest

Form to that purpole.

'I hear also, there is another Bill among you against Informers; Idesire you my Lords, that as ' you tender my Honour, and the Good of my People, ye will put that Bill to an end as foon as you can, and at your next Meeting to make it one of your first Works: For I have already fhew'd my Diflike of that kind of People open-'ly in the Star-Chamber, and it will be the great-eft Eafe to me, and all those that are near about me at Court, that may be: For I remember, that fince the beginning of this Parlia-" ment, Buckingham hath told me, he never found fuch Quiet and Rest, as in this time of Parlia-ment, from Projectors and Informers, who at other times milerably vexed him at all Hours.

And now I confets, That when I looked before upon the Face of the Government, I thought (as every Man would have done) that the People were never fo happy as in my time. For even as at divers times, I have looked upon many of my Coppices, riding about 'them, and they appeared on the outfide very thick, and well-grown unto me; but when I turned into the midft of them, I found them all bitten within, and full of Plains and bare ' Spots, like an Apple or Pear, fair and fmooth ' without, but when ye cleave it afunder, you ' find it rotten at the Heart: Even so this King-'dom, the external Government being as good 'as ever it was, and I am fure, as learned 'Judges as ever it had, and I hope as honeft,
'administring Justice within it; and for Peace, both at home and abroad, I may truly fay, more fettled, and longer lafting, than ever 'any before, together with as great Plenty as ever; fo as it was to be thought, that every Man might fit in Safety under his own Vine and Fig-tree: Yet I am asham'd (and it makes my Hair stand upright) to consider, how in this time my People have been vexed, and pol-'led, by the vile Execution of Projects, Patents, Bills of Conformity, and fuch like, which, besides the Trouble of my People, have more exhaufted their Purfes, than Subfidies would have done.

' Now, my Lords, before I go hence, fince God hath made me the great Judge of this Land under him, and that I must answer for the Justice of the same, I will therefore, according to my Place, remember you of some Things, tho I would not teach you; for no Mans Knowledge can be so good, but their 'Memories will be the better to be refresh'd. And now, because you are coming to give Judgment, (all which moves from the King) that you may the better proceed, take into your Care two Things.

1. To do Bonum.

' I call Bonum, when all is well prov'd, where-'upon ye judge, for then ye build upon a fure 'Foundation. And by Bené, I understand, that 'ye proceed with all Formality and Legality; wherein you have fit occasion to advise with the Judges, who are to affift you with their Opinions in Cases of that Nature; and woe be to them if they advise you not well. So the Ground being good, and the Form orderly, it will prove a Course sitting this High Court of · Parliament.

First, To recollect that which is worthy of A.Reg. 19-Judging and Censuring: And Secondly, To m. christic proceed against these, as against such like m. christic lice. ry Matters before you, some complained of out of Passion, and some out of just Cause of 'Grievance: Weigh both, but be not carried away with the Impertinent Discourses of them, that name as well innocent Men as guilty. Proceed judicially, and spare none, where ye find just Cause to punish: But let your Proceedings be according to Law, and remember that Laws have not their Eyes in their Necks, but in their Foreheads. For the Moral Rea-fon for the Punishment of Vices in all Kingdoms and Commonwealths, is, because of the Breach of Laws standing in force; for none can be punished for Breach of Laws by Predestination, before they be made.

There is yet one Particular that I am to remember you of; I hear that Sir Henry Yelverton (who is now in the Tower upon a Sentence given in the Star-Chamber against him for deceiving my Trust) is touched concerning a Warrant Dormant, which he made while he was my Attorney: I protest I never heard of this Warrant Dermant before, and I hold it as odious a Matter, as any is before you. And it for Respect to me ye have forborn to meddle with him, in Examination, because he is my Prisoner, I do here freely remit him unto you, and put him into your Hands.

And this is all I have to fay unto you at this time, wishing you to proceed justly and nobly, according to the Orders of your House: And I pray God to bless you, and you may affure your felves of my Affishance; wishing, that what I have faid this Day among you, may be entred into the Records of this House.

Thus the King strove to mitigate the Asperity The and Sharpnefs of the Humours contracted in the King's

Body of the Kingdom, that they might not Speech break out to difgrace the Physician: For he defeated looked upon himself as an able Director, and yet he found he might be deceived: And therefore he brings the Lords into a Wood, comparatively to tell them, That they appeared to him well grown, and fair; but fearthing into them, he found them otherwise. But he that pretended to the Knowledge of all things, (as, give him his due, he was well known in most) could not be ignorant that the Patents he granted were against the Libertics of the People; but whether the Execution of them to that Extremity came within his Cognizance, cannot be determined: His damning of them shews his Dislike at present, condemning that which he knew would be done to his hand, if he had not done it; and this must not be known only at Westminster, and left upon Record to Posterity there, but he commanded his Speech to be Printed, that all his People might know how willing and forward he was to abolish any Act of his that tended to a Grievance. And tho he did not accuse the Marques of Buckingham for giving way to Informers, yet he was much troubled with them till the Parliament began; and in that numerous Crowd, those that brought Profit were doubtless admitted with the first.

These Considerations upon the King's Speech buzzed up and down, and many of the Parliament-Men looked upon the Marques as the first Bucking.

Mover of this great Machine; but the Wisdom ham Maof the House did not rise so high as to strike as there of the the uppermost Branches; but they pruned those Werk,

'In Sentence, ye are to observe Two Parts: roundly they could reach. Bucking ham, tho'

little Weed a dangerous and poyfonous Plant, being fubtile enough (yet) to crop off any, that might appear venomous in relation to him-felf, that the mischievous Operations might work upon others: For all the World knew Momposson was his Creature; and that notwithstanding the King's Proclamation for his Interception, he got out of the Kingdom by his Key: For Buckingbam ruled as a Lord Paramount, and those that complied with him, found as much Refuge as his Power could fecure unto them; those that oppos'd him, as much Mischief as Malice could pour upon them. Sir Henry Pelverton, the King's Attorney, had found the Effects of his Anger, by not cloting with his Defires in fuch Patents as he required: So that all his Actions being anatomiz'd, some Miscarriages are made Criminal; he is committed to the Tower, and another put in his Place that should be more observant. The King now lays upon him a Warrant Dormant, which did not much flartle him; for he was not long after releafed, and made a Judge, carrying with him this Character of Honesty, That he was willing to lay down his Preferment at the King's Feet, and be trod upon by the growing Power of Buckingham, rather than profecute his Patron Somerfet, that had advanced him, as his Predecessor Bacon had spitefully done his. But whether that Dialogue betwixt Buckingham and Yelverton in the Tower, mentioned in our king's Court, have any thing of Truth, cannot be afferted here, Buckingham being not arrived yet to the Meridian Height of his Greatness, tho' the King had afterwards Cause enough to be jealous of his Actions.

Michell But now comes the old Justice, Sir Francis confured. Michell, to his Cenfure; and the Crime he had committed arguing a base Spirit, he is sitted with as suitable a Punishment. First, he is degraded, with all the Ceremonies of Debasement; but that being most proper to his Nature, he was but eas'd of a Burthen, his Mind fuffer'd not: But then his keckfy Carcafs was made to ride Renvers, with his Face to the Horfe-tail, (with a Paper on his Breaft and Back, that pointed at the Foulhels of the Caule) through the whole City, fuffering under the Scorn and Contempt of Boys, and Rabble of the People, besides the squeezing of him by Fine and Confinement to Prison, that he might never be more capable of Mischief. The same Sentence had Sir Giles Mempession; but he was so provident as not to be found to pay it in his Person, tho' he paid it in his Purse. Some othersalso, their Inftruments, tho' not fo sharply dealt with, had great Mulêts laid upon them, according to their Demerit; and so this Gangrene was healed up.

The Lord Not long after, comes the great Lord Chan-Chancel cellor Bacon to a Cenfure, for the most simple overfion and ridiculous Follies that ever entred into the Heart of a wife Man. He was the true Emblem of Humane Frailty, being more than a Man in fome Things, and lefs than a Woman in others. His Crime was Bribery and Extortion, (which the King hinted at in his Speech, when he facetiously faid, He thought the Lords had bribed the Prince to fpeak well of them) and these he had of-ten condemned others for as a Judge, which now he comes to suffer for as a Delinquent:

A.R.g.19. he were well grown, had not yet Sap enough ception of them, and his Expending of them: A.R.g.19. to make himfelf fwell into Exuberancy, as he for that which he raked in and ferued for one for the state of the state o For that which he raked in and ferred for one way, he feattered and threw abroad another; an Christian way, he feattered and threw abroad another; for his Servants being young, prodigal and expensive Youths, which he kept about him, his Treafure was their common Store, which they took without flint, having free Access to his most retired Privacies; and his Indulgence to them, and Familiarity with them, open'd a Gap to infamous Reports, which left an unfavoury Tincture on him; for where fuch Leeches are, there must be putrid Blood to fill their craving Appetites. His Gettings were, like a Prince, with a ftrong Hand; his Expences, like a Prodigal, with a weak Head; and 'tis a wonder a Man of his Noble and Gallant Parts, that could fly fo high above Reason, should fall so far below it; unless that Spirit that acted the first, were too proud to floop to fee the Deformities of the last. And as he affected his Men, so his Wife affected hers: Seldom doth the Husband deviate one way, but the Wife goeth another. The Things came into the publick Mouth, and the Genius of the Times (where Malice is not corrival) is the great Dictator of all Actions: For Innocency it felf is a Crime, when Calumny fets her Mark upon it. How prudent therefore ought Men to be, that not to much as their Garments be defiled with the four Breath of the Times!

This poor Gentleman, mounted above Pity, fell down below it; his Tongue, that was the Glory of his Time for Eloquence, (that tuned fo many fivect Harangues) was like a forfaken Harp, hung upon the Willows, whilft the Wa-ters of Affliction overflowed the Banks. And now his high-flying Orations are humbled to Supplications; and thus he throws himself, and Cause, at the Feet of his Judges, before he was condemned.

To the Right Honourable the Lords of the Parliament in the Upper House assembled.

The humble Submission and Supplication of the Lord Chancellor.

May it please your Lordships,

Shall humbly crave at your Hands a benign His Sup-Shall humbly crave at your manage of the Shall now plication, Interpretation of that which I shall now plication, write: for Words that come from wafted Spirits and oppressed Minds are more safe, in being deposited to a Noble Construction, than being circled with any referved Caution. This being moved (and, as I hope, obtained of your Lordhips) as a Protection to all that I fliall fay, I shall go on; but with a very strange Entrance, as may feem to your Lord-ships at first; for in the midst of a state, of as a constant of the protection of the state great Affliction as I think a mortal Man can endure, (Honour being above Life) I shall begin with the professing of Gladness in some Things

The first is, That hereafter the Greatness of a Judge or Magistrate shall be no Sanctuary or Protection to him against Guiltiness, which is Protection to him against Guiltines, which is the beginning of a Golden Work.

'The next; That, after this Example, it is like that Judges will fiy from any thing in the likeness of Corruption, (tho'it were at a great distance) as from a Serpent; which tends to the purging of the Courts of Justice, and reducing them to their true Honour and Splendour. And in these two Points (God is my Wirness) they it be my Engrupe to be the App. And they were proved, and aggravated againft of witness; the they fell witness the many Circumstances, that they fell vil upon which these two Effects are broken very foully on him, both in relation to his Re-16 and wrought, I take no fmall Comfort. But e to

A. R. 19. (to paß from the Motions of my Heart (whereof God is my Judge) to the Merits of my floating (Canfe, whereof your Lordships are Judges, fland, there hath been heretofore expected from me fome Justification; and therefore I will be placeful to be helded your Chief Patron. to pals from the Motions of my Heart (where of God is my Judge) to the Merits of my form of God and his Lieutenant; I do underfrand, there hath been heretofore expected

from me fome Justification; and therefore I have chosen one only Justification, instead of all others, out of the Justification of feb: For after the clear Submission and Confession which Jackshare and the submission and Confession which Jackshare are the confession of feb: For which I shall now make unto your Lordships, I hope I may fay and justify with fob, in these Words, I have not hid my Sin, as did Adam, nor conceal d my Eults in my Bosem. This is the on'ly Justification which I will use.

It restets therefore, that without Fig-leaves, 'I do ingenuously confess and acknowledge, That having understood the Particulars of the 'Charge, not formally from the House, but e-' nough to inform my Confeience and Memory, 'I find Matter fitth ient and full, both to move 'me to defert my Defence, and to move your 'Lordfhips to condemn and cenfure me. Neither will I trouble your Lordships, by fingling those Particulars, which I think might fall off. Quid te exempla juvant spins de pluribus Uva? Neither will I prompt your Lordflips to ob-ferve upon the Proofs, where they come not home, or the Scruple touching the Credits of the Witneffes. Neither will I reprefent to 'your Lordships, how far a Defence might in divers things extenuate the Offence, in respect of the Time, and manner of the Guilt, or the of the Time, and manner of the Gauly of the like Circumstances; but only leave these things to spring out of your own more Noble. Thoughts, and Observations of the Evidence, and Examinations themselves; and charitably to wind about the Particulars of the Charge, here and there, as God shall put into your Minds, and so submit my self wholly to your ' Piety and Grace.

' And now I have spoken to your Lordships as 'Judges, I shall say a few Words unto you as Peers and Prelates, humbly commending my Caufe to your Noble Minds and Magnanimous 'Affections.

'Your Lordships are not simply Judges, but Parliamentary Judges; you have a further Ex-'tent of Arbitrary Power than other Courts; and if you be not tied by ordinary Course of Courts, or Precedents in Points of Strictness "and Severity, much less in Points of Mercy and Mitigation. And yet if any thing which I shall move might be contrary to your ho-nourable and worthy End, (the Introducing a Reformation) I should not feek it; but herein "I befeech your Lordships to give me leave to tell you a Story.

Titus Minilius took his Son's Life, for giving Battel against the Prohibition of his General. Not many Years after, the like Severity was pursued by Papirius Curfor the Distator, against Quintus Maximus; who being upon the Point to be fentenced, was, by the Interceffion of fome particular Perfons of the Senate, fpared. Whereupon Liey maketh this grave and gracious Oblervation, Neque minus firmata est Disciplina Militaris, periculo Quinti Maximi, quam miserabili supplicio Titi Manlii; The Discipline of War was no less established by the questioning of Quintus Maximus, than by the Punishment of Titus Manlius. And the same will be pleafed to behold your Chief Pattern, the King our Sovereign, a King of incompa-rable Clemency, and whole Heart is infertua-ble for Wifdom and Goodneß. And your Lordships will remember, there fate not these Hundred Years before a Prince in your House, and never fuch a Prince, whose Presence deferveth to be made Memorable by Records and Acts, mix'd of Mercy and Juftice. Your felves are either Nobles (and Compassion ever beateth in the Veins of Noble Blood) or Reverend Prelates, who are the Servants of him that would not break the bruifed Reed, nor quench the finoaking Flax. You all fit upon a high Stage, and therefore cannot but be fenible of the Changes of Humane Conditions, and of the Fall of any from high Place.

Neither will your Lordinips forget, that Extortion there are Vitia Temporis, as well as Vitia Homi- and Bribems; and the beginning of Reformation hath Ty the Vi-the contrary Power to the Pool of Betbefds; Times, the contrary Fower to the Foot of Danguin, for that had Strength to cure him only that was first cast in, and this hath Strength to hurt him only that is first cast in: And for my part,

I wish it may stay there, and go no further.

'Lastly, I assure my self, your Lordships have a noble Feeling of me, as a Member of your own Body, and one that in this very deffion had some tast of your loving Affections, which I hope was not a Lightning before the Death of them, but rather a Spark of that Grace, which now in the Conclusion will more ap-Lordflips is, That my penitent Submiffen may be my Sentence, the Lofs of my Seal my Punishment, and that your Lordships would recommend me to his Majesty's Grace and Pardon for all that is past. God's Holy Spirit be among you.

April 22. 1621.

Your Lordships Humble Servant, and Suppliant,

Fran. St. Albans, Can.

Thus was his great Spirit brought low, and His Cene this Humiliation might have railed him up a-fure. gain, if his Offences had not been so weighty as to keep him down. He loft his Pecrage and Seal, and the Scale was wavering whether he should carry the Title of Viscount of St. Albans to his Grave, and that was all he did; having only left a poor empty Being, which lasted not long with him, his Honour dying before him. And to heighten his Mifery the more, many others were crush'd to pieces by his Fall; for he thers were cruind to pieces by his rait; for he had a vaff Debt lay upon him, which they were forecd to pay; and tho' he had a Penino allow'd him by the King, he wanted to his laft, living obfcurely in his Lodgings at Gray-lm, where his Loneness and deblate Coudition wrought upon his Ingenious, and therefore then more melancholy Temper, that he pined away. Reason is in the Reformation of Justice: For And had this Unhappines, after all his Height the questioning of Men in eminent Places, of hath the same Terrour, tho' not the same Rigour with the Punishment. But my Cause like the Beer of the Heuse, but fent to Sir Fush stays not there; for my humble Desire is, That Grevil, Lord Brook, in Neighbourhood (now his Maightment to the State of the Lord Brook). his Majesty would take the Seal into his Hands, and then) for a Bottle of his Beer, and after

I me grumbling, the Butler had Order to deny him. so fordid was the one, that advanc'd him-I riendless was the other, after he had dejected himfelf from what he was.

Parliament.

He was of a middling Stature; his Countefurption nance had indented with Age before he was and Cha- old, his Profence grave and comply of a bight nance nau machine with Age before he was old; his Prefence grave and comely; of a high-flying and lively Wit, ffriving in fome things to be rather admir'd than underflood; yet fo cuick and eafy where he would express himfelf, and his Memory fo ftrong and active, that he appeard the Mafter of a large and plenteous Storehouse of Knowledge, being (as it were) Nature's Midwife, stripping her Callow Brood. and cloathing them in new Attire. His Wit was quick to the last; for Gondemar meeting him the Lent before his Confure, and hearing of his Mifcarriages, thought to pay him with his Spanish Sarcafms and Scoffs, faying, My Lord, I wift you a good Easter; And you my Lord, reply'd the Chan-cellor, a good Passwer: For he could neither close with his English Buffonry, nor his Spanish Treaty, (which Gondemar knew) tho' he was fo wife as publickly to oppose neither. In fine, he was a fit Jewel to have beautified and adorned a flourishing kingdom, if his Flaws had not difgraced the Luftre that should have set him off. In this very time of Parliament, when the Parties in King carried all things with a full Sail, the Pilots of the Commonwealth had an Eye to the Dangers that lay in the way; for in both Houfes the King had a strong Party, especially in the House of Lords: All the Courtiers, and most of the Bishops, steer'd by his Compass, and the Prince's Prefence (who was a constant Member, did cast an Awe among many of them; yet there were some gallant Spirits that aim'd at the publick ! iberty, more than their own Interest. If any thing were spoken in the House that did in the least reflect upon the Government, or touch (as the Courtiers thought) that Noli me tangere, the Prerogative, those that moved in it were fnapt up by them, tho' many times they met with flout Encounters at their own Wespon; among which the Principal were, Henry Earl of Oxford, Henry Earl of Scuthampton, Robert Earl of Effen, Robert Earl of Warnick, the Lord Say, the Lord Spencer, and divers others, that supported the old English Honour, and would not let it fall to the Ground.

Oxford was of no Reputation in his Youth, being very debauched and riotous, and having no Means, maintain d it by fordid and unworthy Ways; for his Pather, hopeless of Heirs, in Dif-content with his Wife, squandred away a Princely Effate; but when the and his great Fortune were both gone, he married a young Lady of the ancient Family of the Trenthams, by whom he had this young I ord, and two Daughters; the having a Fortune of her own, and Industry with it, after her Husband's Death married her Laughters into two Noble Tamilies; the Earl of Aboutgomer married the one, and the Lord Norm, after Earl of Berkflire, married the other. And finding her Sen hopelefs, let him run his Swing till he grew weary of it; and thinking he could not be worfe in other Countries than he had been in his own, the fent him to travel, to try if change of Air would change his Humour. the fweet Refreshments of Court Favours, that

He was not abroad in France and Italy above A. Reg. 19. three Years, and the Freedoms and Extravagancies there (that are able to betray and infinare distributions) for the greatest Modellies) put such a Bridle upon the greatest Modellies) put such a Bridle upon this Inordinateness, that look how much before he was derived for a man faith. he was decry'd for a mean and poor Spirit, to much had his noble and gallant Comportment there gain'd, that he came over refin'd in every Efteem; and fuch a Valuation was fer upon his Parts and Merit, that he married the Lady Diana Cecil, Daughter to the Earl of Exeter, one of the most eminent Beauties and Fortunes of the Time.

† Southampton, tho' he were one of the King's Privy-Council, yet was he no great Courtier; Salisbury kept him at a bay, and pinch'd him fo, by reason of his relation to old Essex, that he never slourish'd much in his time; nor was his Spirit (after him) fo fmooth shod, as to go always the Court pace; but that now and then he would make a Carrier that was not very acceptable to them; for he carried his Bufiness closely and flily, and was rather an Adviser than an Actor.

Effect had ever an honest Heart; and the Nature had not given him Eloquence, he had a strong Reason that did express him better: His Countenance to those that knew him not, appear'd formewhat term and folemn; to Intimates, affable and gentle; to the Females, obligingly courteous; and the unfortunate in fome, yet highly respected of most, happily to vindicate the Virtue of the Sex. The King never affected him, whether from the Bent of his Natural Inclination to Effeminate Faces, or whether from that Inflinct or fecret Prediction that Divine Fare often imprints in the Apprehension, whereby he did foresee in him (as it were) a Hand raifed up against his Posterity, may be a Notation, not a Determination: But the King never liked him, nor could he close with the Court.

Warnick, tho' he had all those excellent Endowments of Body and Fortune, that gives Splendour to a Glorious Court, yet he used it but as his Recreation; for his Spirit aimed at more publick Adventures, planting Colonies in the Hefton World, rather than himself in the king's Favour: His Brother Sir Henry Rich (about this time made Baron of Kenfington) and he, had been in their Youths two emulous Corrivals in the publick Affections, the one's Brownness's ing accounted a lovely Sweetness, transcending most Men; the other's Features and pleasant Afpect equalled the most beautiful Women; the younger having all the Dimentions of a Courtier, laid all the Stock of his Fortune upon that Soil, which after fome Years Patience came up with Increase; but the elder could not so stoop to Observances, and thereby became his own Supporter.

This hit Arundel home, and it grew to fome Heat in the House; whereupon they were separated, and commanded both out of the House, and the Lords began to consider of the Offence. There was much bandying by the Court Party, to excuse the Earl of Arandel; but the Heat and Rash Part of it beginning with him, laying such a Brand upon a Peer that was nobly descended, he could not be justified, but was enjoined by the House to give the Lord Spencer such Satisfoner to the Tower, and Spencer re-admitted into the House again.

When Arundel was well cooled in the Tower, and found that no Power would give him Liberty, but that which had restrain'd him, (rather blaming his Rashness, than excusing his Stubbornness) his great Heart humbled it self to the Lords, betwixt a Letter and a Petition, in these Words.

Upon this Submiffion, the Lords commanded him to be fent for, and prefenting himfelf at the Bar of the House, with the accustomed Humility that Offenders do, he thus express'd himfelf, Because I have committed a Fault against this House, in not obeying all the Order that your Lordships commanded me, I do here acknowledge this my Fault, and ask your Lordhips Pardon for the same, and am ready to obey all your Lordhips Commands. Thus this great Lord (the' he flutter'd in the Air of the Court, and mounted by that means

The King pleafed with it

The King took this Declaration of the Commons in very good Part, and meant, when Occasion ferv'd, to make good use of it: For as he found them forward enough to begin a War, fo he knew his own Conflitution backward enough, (the Sword being in his Hand) and did foresee an Advantage ariting from a Medium betwixt the Parliament and him, if he could bring his Ends about, which he after put in practice; but it broke all to pieces; and now away he goes on his Progress.

Towards Winter the Lord Digby returns from his foliciting Journey in Germany: His first Addresses he made to the Emperor, his second to the Duke of Bavaria, and his last to the Infanta at Bruffels, and all to as little purpose as if he had ftay'd at home; that three-fold Cord, twisted by the Power of Spain, was not easily to be broken. Some little Twilight and Scintil of Hope was given him by the Emperor for Restitution of the Palatinate, yet not so much as would discover the Error of our easie Belief: But the Bavarian had already swallowed the Electorate, and his Voraginous Appetite gaped after the Possession of the Country, tho the English there were Bones in his way.

Digby being arriv'd at Court, and bringing with him doubtful Answers from the Emperor, and fullen ones from the Duke of Bavaria, the King thought it good Policy to shorten the long Recess till February, and to re-affemble the Parliament the 20th of November; that meeting before their Time, it might more amaze them, and intimate fome extraordinary Cause, which happily might produce some extraordinary Effect, if well manag'd. And, incident thereunto, he gave Order to Digby, foon as the Parliament affembled, to make Relation to the Houses of his Proceedings there;

which he did in these Words:

Albeit, slow in giving Audience, by reason that the Diet in Germany was deserted, and he depended upon some Answer from the Princes. But in Conclusion, I received such Saxistastion, an expensive Restitution of the ceiv'd such Satisfaction, as promis'd Restitution of the Palatinate, which only was granted by Commission to the Duke of Bavaria, until it was settled by absolute Peace, or structure War. And being address by the Emperor with Letters to the Duke of Bavaria, wherein he wish'd his tractable Condescent to all good Terms of Peace; Upon which Occasion I urged, That I had Authority from the Count Palatinate, to cause the Count Mansfield to defift from Wor, and likewife from the King to his Body of Wor under the Govern-ment of Sir Horatio Vere. The Duke of Bavaria reply d, That he had becalmed Mansfield with great Sums of Money; and when he is quiet, my Peace is made. To which scornful and slight Reply scontining d.Reg.19

I answerd, and departed to the Infanta to Brussells, who scened to underscand by the Emperor's Letters,

Which Relation of Digby's being seconded by Seconded fome of the King's great Ministers of State, who had Instructions suitable to their Errand they let the Parliament know, how justly and necessary it was, and how forward the King would be to accomplish that by War, which he could not recover by Peace; and they fet it off with all the flippery Oratory they could to draw in Money; for that being the main Ingredient, if that were provided, the rest of the Simples would eafily be purchased, to make up the Com-

This almost universal Aversion of the gaintest People had a natural Instunce upon the Reprefentative, the Parliament; who confidering that the King (by Digby and others) did inform them how formidable the King of Spain was, and did require them to apply themselves to the Necesfity of the Times, and further him with Help to re-invest his Son in his Inheritance, thought there was no better Means to be used than to try effectually the King's Spirit, and stir him up to a War; for fo they should know which way their Money went, at leastwife his Mind, before they tainely parted with it. The King hearing that the House of Comvext at it. mons were hammering upon this Remonstrance, went to Newmarket, a cold and bleak Air, in as cold and bleak a Season, pretending his Health, but indeed to be further from the sound of that Noise (which perpetually possessed his Ears) of the Discontent of the Commons for the intended Match with Spain. And as the Business grew up, he had latimation of it from his Creatures in the Houle; for it vex'd his Popish Secretary Sit George Colvert, Westen, and others, to find the Houle so bitter against their Profession, (though they were cunning Underminers, and put on a smooth Face there) yet their Duties to let the King see how inclinative aggravated the Matter to the King with all the Acrimony they could, so far, as to rested of it with their Lives and Fortunes: But the

And what is there in this Remonstrance (at an. Christian) fuch a time when the Protestant Religion was in Danger of being extirpated) that put on fo horrid a Vizard as to affright or exafperate the The Pro-King? The Emperor had prevailed in Germany, testant the Protestant Princes either subdued, or ac Religion quiesced, and laid down their Necks to the Yoak. in danger. The Protestants were persecuted in France, befleged and ruined by the youthful Fury of Lewis XIII. And notwithstanding our King's Solicitations by Sir Edward Herbert, fince Baron of Cherbery, his Resident Ambassador there, who (after his Conslict with Luynes the youthful Constable of France, and Favourite to that King) being fent for home, the Viscount Doncafter was fent again into France, upon one of his mediating Imployments, who also followed that King from Camp to City, and from City to Camp, with as little Success, this being no Journey of Bravery, for it almost cost him his Life there by a tedious Sickness.

Rochel and Montaban were belieged at one time this very Year, Rochel by the Count of Soissons and the Duke of Guise, and Montaban by the King, a great distance one from another; but Doneaster could prevail for neither, yet the French King did not do his Work. When Man hath vented all his Malice, he can go no further than the Line God hath fet him. One fad Story intervenes, which had a various Countenance, mixt with Bravery and Bafeness, fo that it was doubtful which was most prevalent. One Hicks an Englishman under-Hicks and took to carry a Letter from Rochel to Montaban, Fairfax through both Armies, to let them know the good State and Condition of the Rochellers were in (maugre the Fury and Violence of their Enemies) that those of Montaban might be encouraged to hold out against the King's Affaults. Hicks makes a clear Passage through the Army before Rochel, and came to Thoulouse, where the Viscount Doncaster was, there he conforted with the English, infinuating with a young Gentleman, one Fairfax, of that noble Family in Yorkshire, who was for that Journey one of the Lord Ambaffador's Train; and Hicks finding him willing (being a young and gallant Spirit) to fee the King's Leagure at Montaban, they rode thither together, and, under the Notion of being of the Ambassador's Retinue, they had free Admittance to view all the Works and Avenues. Hicks, whose Eye was fixt upon his opportunity to fly into the Town, made use of Fairfax to take his Advantage with the least Suspicion, and, in the instant of time, purs spurs to his Horfe, and got into the Town through a Shower of Bullets, leaving Fairfux (aftonish'd at the Attempt) to be wrack'd and tornented to Death (as he was by the French Fury) to confess what he never knew; fo that Hicke's Bravery deserves a Brand of Infamy, and Fairfax's Innocency a Memorial of Pity. A noble Spirit must not dare to do a gallant Action an unworthy way.

But our King's Intentions aiming at Peace, Our King he took, as he thought, the best way to it, which a King o was, to Intreat for it; but that would not Peace. prevail, for the Voice of Intreaty cannot be heard for the Trumpet. In War, one Noise must expel another. The Parliament saw the Danger the Protestant Religion was in, (for in many Counsellors there is wisdom) and thought it

A.Reg. 19 King would be called Rex Pacificus to the laft; An Christi His Heart was not advanced to glorious At 1621. chievements, God will not (many times)
make use of some Men to do great Things by The Parliament did not defire to make this a War for Religion only, though they faw it suppressed; for so all Popiss Princes (which was the King's Fear) might have combined against him: But though the true End was Religion, the outward Aim was to hinder the Progress of the victorious Spanish Power, which was likelieft to do most Mischief. Many times the Divine Goodness puts an Opportunity, as a Price, into Mens Hands, which, if they fail to make use of, redounds to their Prejudice. If the King's Spirit had been rai-fed up to a War, when the Voice of God (the Voice of the People) called him to it, happily it might have hindred the great Effusion of Blood amongst our Selves, that happened after in his Son's time: But he was not the Man, the Work was referved for Gustavus, not Jacobus; and these Conflicts of our Kings formerly, and at this time with his People (alienating their Affections) did not only leave fad Impressions upon their Spirits, of Rancour and Malice against Monarchy, but taught his Successor the Pattern of breaking Parliaments, and contesting with his Subjects, till Ruin succeeded to him and his Posterity.

But when this Remonstrance was brought to Perfection, the King had a Copy of it before the House had time to fend their Messengers with it; in which fomething fo highly dif-pleafed him, that he inftantly difparched a Letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons to forbid the fending of it.

To Our Trusty and Well-beloved, Sir Thomas Richardson Kt. Speaker of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker,

The King's Letter to the Speaker.

WE have heard by divers Reports, to Our great Grief, That Our distance from the Houses of Parliament, (caused by Our Indisposition of Health) hath imbolden'd fome fiery and popular Spirits of some of the Commons, to argue and debate publickly of Matters far above their Reach and Capacity, tending to Our high Dishonour, and Breach of Prerogative Royal. These are therefore to Command you, to make known in Our Name unto the House, that none therein shall presume henceforth to meddle with any thing concerning Our Government, or deep Matters of State, and namely not to deal with our dearest Son's Match with the Daughter of Spain, nor to touch the Honour of that King, or any other Our Friends or Confederates. And also, not to meddle with any Man's Particulars, which have their due ' Motion in Our ordinary Courts of Justice. And whereas We hear they have fent a Meffage to Sir Edwin Sandis, to know the Reafons of his late Reftraint, you shall in Our Name resolve them, That it was not for any Misdemeanor of his in Parliament: But to put them out of doubt of any Question of that Nature, that may arise among them hereafter, you shall resolve them in Our Name, That We think Our Self very free and able to punish any Man's Misdemeanors in Parliament, as well during their Sitting, as after; which we mean not to spare hereafter upon any Occasion of any Man's info- A.Reg. 19. lent Behaviour there, that shall be ministred unto Us. And if they have already touched any of these Points, which We have here forbidden in any Petition of theirs, which is to be fent unto Us, it is Our Pleafure that you shall tell them, That, except they reform it before it come to Our Hands, We will not deign the hearing nor answering of it. Dated at Newmarket, Decemb. 3. 1621.

This was the effect of the Letter.

When the House had duly and weightily considered the just Reasons they had to draw up this Remonstrance, in discharge of their Consciences and Duties to God, and the King, and found how fruitless their Labours were; having (as it were) cast out one Anchor in a tempestuous Season which would take no hold, they were forced to cast out another, that both together might better faften on the King's good Affections: Therefore they framed this following Petition, and fent the Remonstrance with it, hoping yet to fave the beaten Bark of the Commonwealth from Ruin in fo great a time of Danger. And thus they address themselves to their great Pilot.

Most dread and gracious Sovereign, VE Your most humble and loyal Sub-The Par-

V jects, the Knights, Citizens, and liament's Burgesses, affembled in the Commons House of Parliament, full of Grief and unspeakable Sorrow, through the true Sence of Your Majesty's Displeasure expressed by Your Letter lately fent to our Speaker, and by him related and read unto us; Yet comforted again with the Affurance of Your Grace and Goodness, and of the Sincerity of our own Intentions and Proceedings, whereon with Confidence we can rely, in all humbleness Befeech Your most Excellent Majetty, that the Loyalty and Dutifulness of as faithful and loving Subjects as ever served or lived under a gracious Sovereign, may not unde-fervedly fuffer, by the Mif-information of partial and uncertain Reports, which are ever unfaithful Intelligencers: But that Your Ma-jefty would in the clearness of Your own Judgment, first vouchsafe to understand from our Selves, and not from others, what our humble Declaration and Petition (refolved upon by the Universal Voice of the House, and proposed with Your Gracious Favour to be presented unto Your Sacred Majesty) doth contain. Upon what Occasion we en-Tred into Confideration of thole Things which are therein contained, with what dutiful Respect to Your Majetly, and Your Service, we did consider thereof, and what was our true Intention thereby. And that when Your Majetly shall be the same than the confideration of the confideration of the contained the confideration of the contained that when Your Majetly shall be the contained to the contained the contained the contained that when Your Majetly shall be the contained to the contained that the contained that the contained the contained that the contained th Your Majefty shall thereby truly differn our dutiful Affections, You will in Your Royal Judgment free us from those heavy Charges wherewith some of our Members are burthened, and wherein the whole House is involved.

And we humbly Befeech Your Majesty, that You will not hereafter give Credit to private Reports against all, or any of the Members of our House, whom the whole have not Cenfured, until Your Majesty have been truly informed thereof from our selves; and that in the mean time, and ever, we may fland upright in Your Majesty's Grace and good Opinion, than which no worldly Congood Opinion, man which he fideration is or can be dearer unto us.

When

'When your Majesty had reassembled us in Parliament, by your Royal Commandments, An. Christic fooner than we expected, and did vouchfafe fooner than we expected, and did vouchfafe the Mouths of Three Honourable Lords, by the Mouths of Three Weighty Occasions moto impart unto us the weighty Occasions mo-' ving your Majesty thereunto; and from them we did understand these Particulars.

That notwithstanding your Princely and Pious Endeavours to procure Peace, the Time is now comethat Janus Temple must be open'd.
That the Voice of Bellona must be heard, and not the Voice of the Turtle.

'That there was no hope of Peace, nor any 'Truce to be obtained; no, not for a few Days. 'That your Majesty must either abandon your own Children, or engage your felf in a War, wherein Confideration is to be had, what Foot, what Horfe, what Money, would be ' fufficient.

That the Lower Palatinate was feized upon by the Army of the King of Spain, as Executor of the Ban there, in quality of Duke of Burgundy, as the Upper Palatinate was by the Duke of Bavaria.

'That the King of Spain, at his own Charge, had now at least Five several Armies on foot. That the Princes of the Union were Difbanded; but the Catholick League remained firm, whereby those Princes fo diffever'd, were ' in Danger one by one to be ruined.

That the Estate of those of the Religion in Foreign Parts was miferable. And,

'That out of these Considerations we are called to a War, and forthwith to advise for a Supply, for keeping the Forces in the Palatinate from Disbanding, and to fore-fee the Means for raising and maintaining the Body of an Army for the War against the Spring. We therefore out of our Zeal to your Majesty and your Posterity, with more Alacrity and Celerity than ever was precedented in Parliament, did address our felves to the Service commended unto us. And although we cannot conceive, that the Honour and Safety of your Majesty, and your Posterity; the Patrimony of your Children, invaded and posfess'd by their Enemics; the Welfare of Religion, and State of your Kingdom; are Mat-ters at any time unfit for our deepest Consideration in time of Parliament. And though before this time we are in some of these Points filent; yet being now invited thereunto, and led on by fo just an Occasion, we thought it our Duties to provide for the present Supply thereof, and not only to turn our Eyes on a War abroad, but to take care for the fecuring of our Peace at home, which the dangerous Increase, and Infolency of Popish Recusants, apparently, vifibly, and fenfibly did lead us unto. The Confideration whereof did neceffarily draw us truly to reprefent unto your Majesty, what we conceive to be the Causes; what we seared would be Effects; and what we hoped might be the Remedies of these growing Evils. Among which, as incident and unavoidable, we fell upon fome Things which feem to touch upon the King of Spain, as they have relation to Popish Recusants at home, to the Wars by him maintained in the Palatinate against your Majesty's Children, and to his several Armies now on foot; yet, as we conceived, without touch of Dishonour to that King, or any other Prince your Majetty's concerner.

' In the Discourse whereof we did not assume ble Parlia to our Selves any Power to determine of any ment.

Part thereof; nor intend to Incroach or In-

trude upon the Sacred Bounds of your Royal & Reg. 19, Authority, to whom, and to whom only, we acknowledge it doth belong to refolve of Peace and War, and of the Marriage of the most Noble Prince your Son. But as your most loyal and humble Subjects and Servants, reprefenting the whole Commons of your Kingdom (who have a large Interest in the happy and prosperous Estate of your Majesty, and your Royal Posterity, and of the slourishing Estate of our Church and Commonwealth) did refolve, out of our Cares and Fears, truly and plainly to demonstrate these Things to your Majesty, which we were not affured could otherwise come so fully and clearly to your Knowledge; and being done, to lay the same down at your Majesty's Feet, without expectation of any other Answer of

'This being the Effect of that we had formerly refolved upon, and these the Occasions and Reafons inducing the fame, our humble Suit to your Majesty, and Confidence is, That your Majesty will be graciously pleased to re-ceive at the Hands of these our Messengers our former humble Declaration and Petition; and to vouchfafe to read, and favourably to interpret the fame. And that to fo much thereof, as containeth our humble Petition concerning Jeluis, Priefts, and Popili Recu-fants, the Paffage of Bills, and granting your Royal Pardon, you will vouchfafe an An-

' And whereas your Majesty, by the general 'Words of your Letter, feemeth to restrain us from intermeddling with Matters of Government, or Particulars which have their Motion in the Courts of Justice; the generality of which Words in the largeness of their Extent thereof, (as we hope beyond your Majesty's Intention) might involve those Things, which are the proper Subjects of Parliamentary Occasions and Discourse.

'And whereas your Majesty doth seem to abridge us of the ancient Liberty of Parliament for Freedom of Speech, Jurisdiction, and just Censure of the House, and other Proceedings there, (wherein we trust in God we fhall never transgress the Bounds of Loyal and Dutiful Subjects) a Liberty which we affure our selves so wise and so just a King will not infringe; the fame being our Ancient and Undoubted Right, and an Inheritance received from our Ancestors, without which we cannot freely Debate, nor clearly difcern of Things in question before us, nor truly inform your Majesty; in which we have been confirmed by your Majesty's most gracious former Speeches and Meffages: We are therefore now again inforced in all Humbleness to pray your Majesty to allow the same, and thereby to take away the Doubts and Scruples your Majesty's late Letter to your Speaker hath brought upon us.

So shall we, your loyal and loving Subjects, And a ver acknowledge your Majesty's Justice, Pious.

Grace and Goodness, and be ready to perform the continuous and beauty to perform the continuous and the state of the continuous and the state of the continuous and the state of th form that Service to your Majefty, which in the true affection of our Hearts we profes, and pour out our daily and devout Prayers to the Almighty for your Majesty's long Life, happy and religious Reign, and prospective from the control of th Eftate, and for your Royal Posterity after you fer ever.

A. Reg. 19. Money not Advice.

The Parliament thought it strange that the King in a Recess should call them together bean Confliction as A Recess mount can uch Systems for the appointed Time of Meeting; preten-form ding Emergent Occasions, and (by his Mini-The King flers of State) perfivade and incite to a War, and when in Obedience to this Command) they shall proceed in their Advice, only to prevent the Dangers abroad, and establish Security at home, they shall be accounted Presumptuous and Insolent. But by this they discover, (and which the King plainly expresses in his Answer) that he required none of their Advice, he wanted only their Money; if they had furnish'd him with that, instead of Counsel, it would have been a golden Remonstrance. They are to be his Bank, his Merchants, he needs no other Directions; let them find Money, he knows how to dispose of it. the great Fault, which this Petition strives to mitigate, accompanied with the Remonstrance it felf, and the Petition against Recusancy, for both which it was an Intercessor; but it could not with all its Humility procure Acceptance for its Companions, though fent by Twelve felect Members of the House, and the leading Man Sir Richard Weston (who was really the King's) chosen by the Commons to make their Petitions the more acceptable. And the House finding it a great Discouragement to them to proceed in any Buliness, when there was so great a Distance betwixt the King and them, (the King thinking their Actions an Intrenchment upon his Prerogative, and they thinking the King's Expreditions an Infringement of their Liberties) they refolved to give over all Business, till they had an Answer of their Petitions; for they thought they had as good do nothing, as have that they do undone again. Which the King hearing of, was vexed at the Heart, and entertained their Meffengers very roughly; and forme fay,he called for Twelve Chairs for them, faying, Here are Twelve Kings come to me. But after he had confider'd their Defires in their last Petition (rejecting the others) he returns them this Answer to all.

The King's Answer. E must here begin in the same Fashion that we would have done, if your first Petition had come to our Hands before we had made a ftay thereof, which is to re-peat the first Words of the late Queen, of Famous Memory, used by her in Answer to an 'infolent Proposition, made by a Polonian Ambassador unto her; that is, Legatum expectaba'mus, Heraldum accipinus. For we had great 'Reason to expect, that the first Message from 'your House should have been a Message of 'Thanksgiving for our continued Gracious Behaviour towards our People fince your last Recefs: Not only by our Proclamation of Grace, wherein were contained Six or Seven and thirty Articles, all of feveral Points of Grace to the People; but also by the Labour we took, for the Satisfaction of both Houles, in those Three Articles recommended unto us in both their Names by the Right Reverend Father in God the Archbishop of Canterbury, and likewise for the good Government of Ireland we are now in hand with at your request. But not only have we heard no News of all this, but contrary, great Complaints of the Danger of Religion within this Kingdom, tacitly implying our ill Government in this Point.
And we leave you to judge, whether it be your Duties, that are the Representative Body of our People, fo to diffafte them with War, and all Things depending thereupon our Government; whereas, by the contrary, it But yet not contenting your felves with this is your Duty, with all your Endeavours, to hin- A. Reg. 19. dle more and more a Dutiful and Thankful Love in the Peoples Hearts towards us for our Just and Gracious Government.

Now whereas in the very Beginning of this your Apology, you tax us in fair Terms of trusting uncertain Reports, and partial Informations concerning your Proceedings: We wish you to remember that we are an Old and Experienc'd King, needing no fuch Leffons, being in our Conscience freest of any King alive from hearing or trufting idle Reports, which fo many of your House as are nearest us can bear witness unto you, if you would give as good ear to them, as you do to fome Tribunitial Orators among you. And for proof in this Particular; We have made your own Meffengers confer your other Petitions fent by you with the Copy thereof, which was fent us before, between which there is no difference at all, but that fince our receiving the first Copy you added a Conclusion unto it, which could not come to our Hands, till it was done by you, and your Messengers fent, which was all at one time. And if we had had no Copy of it before-hand, we must have received your first Petition to our great Dishonour, before we had known what it contain'd, which would have inforced us to have returned you a far worse Answer than now we do. For then your Messengers had returned with Nothing, but that we have judged your Petition unlawful and unworthy of an Answer: For as to your Conclusion thereof, it is nothing but Protestatio contraria fatto, for in the Body of your Petition you usurp upon our Prerogative Royal, and meddle with Things far above your reach, and then in the Conclusion you protest the contrary; as if a Robber would take a Man's Purse, and then protest he meant not to rob him. For first, you presume to give us your Advice concerning the March of our dearest Son with some Protestant, we cannot say Princess, for we know none of these fit for him, and disfuade us from his Match with Spain, urging us to a present War with that King, and yet in the Conclusion, forsooth, ye protest ye intend not to press upon our most Undoubted and Regal Prerogative; as if the Petitioning of us in Matters that your felves confess ye ought not to meddle with, were not a meddling with them.

And whereas ye pretend, that ye were invivited to this Course by the Speeches of Three Honourable Lords; yet by so much as your selves repeat of the Speeches, nothing can be concluded, but that we were resolved by War to regain the Palainate, if otherwise we could not attain unto it. And you were invited to advise forthwith upon a Supply for keep-ing the Forces in the Palainate from Disbanding the Forces in the Palatinate from Diseanc-ing, and to forefee the Means for the raifing and maintaining of the Body of an Army for that War againft the Spring. Now what In-ference can be made upon this? That there-fore we muft prefently denounce War againft the King of Spain, break our deareft Son's Match, and Match him to one of our Religi-on, Let the World judge! The difference is no reasent than if we would tell a Merchant greater, than if we would tell a Merchant that we had great need to borrow Money from him for raifing an Army; that there-upon it should follow, that we were bound to follow his Advice in the Directions of the

A.Reg. 19. Lxcute of yours, which indeed cannot hold Water, you come after to a direct Contradian Christi ction to the Conclusion of your former Petition, faying, That the Honour and Safety of its and our Pofferity, and the Patrimony of our Children invaded, and poffeffed by their Enemies, the Welfare of Religion, and State of our Kingdom, are Matters at any time not unfit for your deepest Comiderations in Parliament. To this Generality, we Anin rarnament. To this ocherancy, we Allifiver with the Logicians, That where all things are contained, nothing a omitted. So as this Plenipotency of yours invests you in all Power upon Earth, lacking nothing but the Puerican have the Kent of the Allification of the Control of the Allification of the Control of the Contr the Pope's, to have the Keys also both of the Popes, to nave the Keys allo both of Heaven and Purgatory. And to this vaft Generality of yours, we can give no other Anfiver; for it will trouble all the best Lawyers in the House, to make a good Commentary upon it: For 6 did the Puritan Ministers in Scotland bring all kind of Gaufes within the the compass of their Jurisdiction, saying, That it was the Churches Office to judge of Slander, and there could no kind of Crime or Fault be committed, but there was a Slander in it, either against God, the King, or their Neighbour; and by this means they hooked into themselves the Cognizance of 'all Causes. Or like Bellarmine's distinction of the Pope's Power over Kings, in ordine ad Spiritualia, whereby he gives them all Tem-poral Jurisliction over them.

But to give you a direct Answer to the Matter of War, for which you are so earnest;

"We confess, we rather expected you should have given us Thanks for the fo long maintaining a fertled Peace in all our Dominions, when as all our Neighbours about are in miserable Combustion of War. But Dulce Bellum inexpertis: And we indeed find by Ex-But Dulce perience, that a Number of our Subjects are fo pamper'd with Peace, as they are defirous of Change, though they know not what.

'It is true, that we have ever profess'd (and in that Mind with God's Grace we will live and die) that we will labour by all Means possible, either by Treaty, or by Force, to restore our Children to their ancient Dignity and Inheritance; and whatfoever Chriftian Princes, or Potentates, will fet them-felves against it, we will not spare any Lawful Means to bring our fo Just and Honourable Purpose to a good End. Neither shall the Match of our Son, or any other Worldly Refpect, be preferred to this our Resolution For by our Credit, and Intervention with the King of Spain, and the Arch-Dutchels, and her Husband now with God, we preserved the Lower Palatinate one whole Year, from any further Conquering in it; which in any Eight Days space in that time, might have eafily been fivallow'd up by Spinela's Army, without any Refistance: And in no better Case was it now at our Ambassador the Lord " Digby's coming through Heidleburgh, if he had 'not extraordinarily fuccoured it.

But because we conceive, that we couple this War of the Palatinate with the Cause of Religion, we must a little unfold your Eyes herein. The Beginning of this Miferable War, which hath let all Christendom on fire, ' was not for Religion, but only caufed by our Son-in-Law's hafty and rath Refolution; following Evil Counfel, to take to himfelf ' the Crown of Bohemia: And that this is true,

'King and State of Venice, that his accep-A.Rig.19. ting of the Crown of Bolemia had no reference to the Cause of Religion, but only by reason of his right of Election (as he called it.) And we would be form that the A. C. it.) And we would be forry that that Afperfion fhould come upon our Religion, as to make it a good Pretext for Dethroning of Kings, and Ufurping their Crowns. And we would be loth that our People here should be taught that Doctrine: No, let us not so far wrong the Jesuits, as to rob them of their sweet Pofitions, and Practice in that Point. sitions, and Practice in that Point. And upon the other Part, we affure our self so far of your Charitable Thoughts of us, that we would never have Constantly denied our Son-in-Law both the Title and Affistance in that Point, 'if we had been well perfwaded of the Juftice of his Quarrel. But to conclude, this Unjust Usurpation of the Crowns of Bohemia and Hungaria from the Emperor, hath given the Pope, and all that Party, too fair a Ground, and open'd them too wide a Gate, for curbing and oppressing of many Thousands of our Religon in divers Parts of Christendom.

And whereas you excuse your touching upon the King of Spain, upon occasion of the Incidents by you repeated in that Place, and yet affirm, that it is without any touch to his 'Honour; we cannot wonder enough that ye are so forgetful, both of your Words and Writs: 'For in your former Petition ye plainly affirm, that he affects the Temporal Monarchy of the whole Earth, than which there can be no more Malice uttered against any great King, to make all other Princes and Potentates both Envy and Hate him. But if ye lift, it may be easily tried, whether that Speech touched him in Honour or not: If we shall ask him the Question, whether he means to assume to himself that Title or no? For every King can best judge of his own Honour. We omit the Particular Ejaculations of fome Foulmouth'd Orators in your House, against the Honour of his Crown and State.

And touching your Excuse of not determining any thing concerning the Match of our dearest Son, but only to tell your Opinions, and lay it down at our Feet: First, We defire to know how you could have prefumed to determine in that Point, without committing of High-Treafon. And next, You cannot deny, but your talking of his Match after that manner, was a direct breach of our Commandment and Declaration out of our own Mouth, at the first sitting down of this Parliament; where we plainly professed, that we were in Treaty of his Match with Spain, and wished you to have that Confidence in our Religion and Wisslom, that we would so manage it, as our Religion should receive no Prejudice by it. And the fame we now repeat unto you, professing that we are so far engaged in that Match, as we cannot in Honour go back, except the King of Spain perform not fuch Things as we expect at his Hands: And therefore we are forry that ye should show to have so great Distrust in us, or to conceive that we should be cold in our Religion; otherwise we cannot imagine how our former publick Declaration should not have ftopp'd your Mouths in this Point.

' And as to your Request, That we would 'now receive your former Petition, we wonder what could make you prefume, that we would not receive it; whereas in our former himself wrote Letters unto us at that time. Letter, we plainly declar'd the Contrary undefining us to give Assurance both to the French to you; and therefore have justly rejected that

d. Reg. 19. that Suit of yours. For what have you left un-Chrift attempted in the highest Points or sovereign1611.

Coin? For iccontains the Violation of Leagues, the particular way how to govern a War, and the Marriage of our dearest Son, both Negation with 5. Son with any other Points Prince

Coin With 5. Son with 4. Son With 1. Son tive with Spain, nay with any other Popish Prin-cels. And also Affirmatively, as to the Matching with one of our Religion; which we confess is a Strain beyond any Providence or Wisdom God hath given us, as Things now fland.

'These are unfit Things to be handled in Parliament, except your King flould require it of you; for who can have Wifdom to judge of Things of that Nature? but floth as are daily acquainted with the Particulars of Treaties, and of the variable or fixed Connexion of Affairs of State, together with the Knowledge of the fecret Ways, Ends, and Intentions of Princes in their feveral Negociations; other-wife, a small mistaking in Matters of this Nature may produce more Effects than can be imagined. And therefore, Ne sutor ultra creviimagined. And therefore, Ne futor ultra crepi-dam. And befides, the intermeddling in Parliament with Matters of Peace or War, and Marriage of our dearest Son, would be such a Diminution to us, and to our Crown, in Foreign 'Countries, as would make any Prince neglect to treat with us, either in Matters of Peace or Marriage, except they might be affured by the False Play Affent of Parliament. And fo it proved long infly rejuffly re- ago with a King of France; wuo, upon a procuring his States to diffent from fome Treawhich before he had made, was after refused treating with any other Princes, to his great Reproach, unless he would first procure the Affent of his Estates to their Proposition. And will you cast your Eyes upon the late Times, you shall find that the late Queen, of Famous Memory, was humbly petitioned by a Parliament to be pleased to marry: But her Answer was, That she liked their Petition well, because it was simple, not limiting her to Place or Response or personal trips her Liking Place or Person, as not besitting her Liking to their Fancies; and if they had done other-wife, she would have thought it a high Prefumption in them. Judge then what we may do in such a Case? having made our publick Declaration already (as we faid before) di-rectly contrary to that which you have now rectity contrary to that which you have petitioned.

Now to the Points in your Petition, whereof you defire an Answer, as properly belonging to the Parliament. The first and the greateff Point is that of Religion, concerning which at this time we can give you no other ' Answer than in the general; which is, That you may rest secure, that we will never be weary to do all we can for the Propagation of our Religion, and Repressing of Popery. But the Manner and Form you must remit to our ' Care and Providence, who can best consider of Times and Seafons; not by undertaking a publick War of Religion through all the World at once; which, how hard and dangerous a Task it may prove, you may judge. But this puts us in Mind how all the World complain'd the last Year of Plenty of Corn, and God hath fent us a cooling Card this Year for that Heat. And fo we pray God, that this Defire among you of kindling Wars (flewing your Wearinefs of Peace and Plenty) may not make God permit us to fall into the Miferies of both. But, as we already faid, our Care of Religion must be such, as on the one part we must not, by the hot Persecution of our Recufants at home, irritate Foreign Princes of contrary Religion, and teach them the way to A. Reg. 19 plague the Protestants in their Dominions, an Christian with whom we daily intercede, and at this time principally for Ease to them of our Profeffion, that live under them. Yet upon the other Part, we never mean to spare from due and severe Punishment any Papist that will grow infolent, for living under our fo mild Government. And you may also be affured, We will leave no Care untaken, as well for the good Education of the Youth at home, espe-cially the Children of Papilts, as also for preferving at all times hereafter the Youth that are or shall be abroad, from being bred in dan-gerous Places, and so poison'd in Popish Seminaries. And as in this Point, namely, concerning the good Education of Popish Youth at home, we have already given fome good Proofs, both in this Kingdom and in Ireland; fo will we be well pleased to pass any good Laws that shall be made, either now, or any time hereafter, to this purpose.

And as to your Request of making this a Seffion, and granting a general Pardon, it shall be in your Defaults, if we make not this a Seffion before Christmas.

But for the Pardon, ye crave fuch Particulars in it, as we must be well advised upon, left otherwise we give you back the double or treble of that we are to receive by your entire Subfidy, without Fifteens. But the ordinary Course we hold fittest to be used still in this Case, is, That we should of our Free Grace fend you down a Pardon from the Higher Houle, containing such Points as we shall think fittest, wherein we hope ye shall receive good Satisfaction.
But we cannot omit to shew you how strange

we think it, that ye should make so bad and unjust a Commentary upon some Words of our former Letter, as if we meant to restrain you thereby of your ancient Privileges and Liberties in Parliament. Truly, a Scholar would be ashamed so to misplace and misjudge any Sentences in another Man's Book. For whereas in the end of our former Letter we discharge you to meddle with Matters of Government and Mysteries of State; namely, Matters of War or Peace, or our dearest Son's Match with Spain; by which particular Denominations we interpret, and restrain our former Words: And then after, we forbid you to meddle with fuch Things as have their ordinary Course in Courts of Justice; yet couple together those two distinct Sentences, and plainly leave out these Words, Of Mysteries of State; so as ye err, à benè divisis ad male conjecta. For of the former part, concerning Mysteries of State, we plainly restrained our Meaning to the Particulars that were after mentioned. And in the latter, we confess we meant it by Sir Edward Coke's foolish Business. And therefore it had well become him, especially being our Servant, and one of our Council, to have complained unto us; which he never did, tho he was ordinarily at Court fince, and never had Access refus d unto him.

'And altho' we cannot allow of the Stile, calling it, Your ancient and undoubted Right and canning it, tour ancient and undensited Right and Inheritance, but could rather have wished that ye had faid, That your Privileges were derived from the Grace and Permission of our Ancesors and me store most of the grow from Precedents, which shews rather a Toleration than Inheritance, it was more related to the control of the property of the control of the con which mews tance it are pleased to give you our 'Royal Affurance, That as long as you shall contain your selves within the Limits of your Yol II. Ccccc 'Duty,

Wars good to prevent Wars. an Christis as ever any of our Predecessors were; nay as to preferve our own Royal Prerogative: 50 'as your House shall only have need to beware to trench upon the Prerogative of the Crown; which would enforce us, or any just King, to retrench them of their Privileges, that would pare his Prerogative and Flowers of the Crown. But of this, we hope there shall be never Cause given. This was the Effect of never Cause given. This was the Effect of the King's Answer, which was dated at Newmarket the 11th of December, 1621.

Thus the King acted his part; and the his Answer might be the Refult of his Thoughts, ple Com-yet it was some transcendent Cause that put it petitors, into Words; for his Nature was apt enough to fear the Sound of its own Impressions. now his Spirit was mounted, either the Breach of the Treaty with Spain, or the Breach (as he thought) upon his Prerogative, gave Wing to raise his Anger higher than his Fear. Princes that never knew how to obey, ride their Paffions with a loofe Rein, and are easiest carried by that Impulsion. The Prince and the People are here Competitors, both jealous of Encroachments, both striving to prevent them. Liberty is a Power that gives a Well-being and Life to the People. Power is a Liberty that Princes take to be the very Life of their Being. Kings are like the Sea, and the People like the Land, the Industry of the one striving with the Piles, and Banks of good Laws and Precedents, to bound the often Spring-Tides, and over-flowing of the other. In Scotland the Land was high, Rocky, and inacceffible for his Waves, tho' never fo boifterous: Here he finds a fmooth Shore, and the People as tame in their Obedience, as they were in their Sufferings, which makes him the bolder with them.

Difcours But the Parliament (weighing the King's An-fes upon fiver by the Ballance of Reason, not Passion) the King's found that there was little for them to do. For Answer. how is this a mix'd Government, when Kings do what they please? They call their People to a Parliament, where the three Effates are faid to be the mix'd Government; but what is their Errand? To get Money. If they touch upon Mifearriage in Government, it disparages him to his People (for now the infide of his Copfes are well grown again). If upon Religion, he knows well enough how to order that, if the Treaty with Spain goes on. And for the Affairs of State, he feems to imply, as if there were some hidden and secret Art in those Mysteries of King-craft, that the Parliament's Apprehension cannot reach. For, who can have Wisdom (faith he) to judge of Things of that Nature, but those that are traded in them? Every Man in his Profession! So the Priests by their old Oracles did strive to keep the World in Ignorance, as the Romish Factors do now. Whereas the true way of Treaties is with Chrithem. The King thinks it Prefumption in the quire, this Answer we expect, you shall have this Retribution from us. If you go about to Good of Religion) to permit his Son to marry cozen and cheat us by Delays, and fpin out Time for Ends, fuch Syrens must not be liften'd after. Every State must stand upon the Foundation of its own Reason and Power, and not build Castles of Paper-Hopes upon deceitful Promifes, unless there be fuch redundant Caufes of Dependency upon them, as it is impoffi-

Alexander, or his Nephew Cafar Borgia. Scipio, tho' a Heathen, in his Pactions with Spain and Carthage, scorn'd it; and the old Roman Senate were so Gallant, as to rebuke Lucius Marcius, their Ambassador and General, because, in the managing of his Wars and Treaties with Per-Sem King of Macedon, he went about by Subtilties to circumvent him. And now an Ambaffador (as one faith) lies abroad, Reipublica Caufa, for the Good of his Country, which tends rather to the Hurt of it.

But now they find that the King would only The Parmake Merchandize of the Commonwealth; yet liament Merchants look for their Money again with the King's Advantage, and therefore their Counfel in dif-Merpoing it may be well spared. But the Parlia-chants, ment, if they raise Money from the People, (which is never to be repay'd) there is good Reason they should know, not only to what purpose it is levied, but how prudently and fitly laid out; otherwise, as the King tells them in the Comparison of the Robber, (tho' in relation to his Prerogative) if they should be sum-mon'd to levy Money of the People without Confideration of what it is for, or how it shall be dispos'd for the Good of the Kingdom, they may very well fay and protest, That they meant not to take it from them fo; that is, not to rob them of it. But the King's Necessities must come under the Common Emergencies, which he would not have known; and what will one Subfidy without Fifteens do? The Protestants want in the Palatinate, so doth he in England: But he had lately a great Affistance from his People; never King of England found greater Love, (as he faith of himself) yet he wants fill, and would have Supply for it under the Notion of a War. They must consider what Money is sit, what Foot, what Horse, is necesfary; but they must not know for what. All that they can imagine, is, that the King wants Money for his Favourite Buckingham, and his Kindred, to furnish them against Christmas, for Feasting, Gaming, and Bravery, the three main Pillars of the Times, Licentiousness raised up to a stupendious and excessive Height, or to fend out his Ambaffadors, or help his indigent and expensive Courtiers, and then the Wars are ended; for Want is a great War. But if the Good of the Kingdom, the Establishment of Religion, the Happines of the King and his Posterity, be not fit Themes for them to discourse of, why are they called?

The late Queen, (whose Memory will be for ever Famous) by the King's own relation, liked the Parliaments Perition well, when they humbly befought her to marry, because they did not prescribe her Place and Person, but lest that to her Election; if they had done otherwife, the would have thought it Prefumption in them. The King thinks it Prefumption in the Parliament, humbly to befeech him (for the with a Protestant Princess; if they had fix'd upon Place or Person, he would have thought it High Treason. So many Degrees high was the King's Spirit mounted above a Woman's to humble Subjects, and fo many Degrees lower than hers was his Spirit to daring Enemies. Some of these Things were publickly discour-

And who can tax any particular Member with Miscarriages that way, that the House hath not censured hitherto? for now the Heat is but new broke in among them, and this Liberty of Speech fluck moft with them; for it any Man should speak any thing to displease the King, (tho' it tended ne-ver so much to the Good of the Kingdom) it might be termed insolent Behaviour, and be liable to Punishment after Parliament, (if not then) as the King threatens in his Letter; which carried such a Terror and over-awing with it, that they refolved to give over all Bu-finess, Left they should offend: Which the King hearing of, writes again to his Secretary Calvert, and the Speaker, to take off the Edge of those fharp Expressions he used in his Letters, thinking to cool the Heat among them.

And after some Debate, and canvaffing in it, they refolved, That tho' they could not debar the King from making fuch Swarms of Nebles with Outlandish Titles, yet they would let him knowwhat Prejudice it was to them, and if it produced no other good Effect, the King might at least see they took Offence, and were not well pleas'd with it; which made them prefent him with this Petition, thus Subfign'd.

Thus we see the Errors of Princes are some- The King times put into the Scale, and they bring with angry. them so much Trouble and Vexation, that they often weigh down their Glory and Happiness; for no Man can feel the Load and Burthen of it, but he that wears a Crown. The King was conscious to himself that he had done these Noblemen Injury, especially the Barons, to advance their Inseriors above them, for a little Profit either to himfelf or his Courtiers. And if he had not heard of this Petition before, fuch a Troop of Attendance together might have startled him; but being prepard for it, he mu-fler'd up his Spirits, thinking it too great an Abasement for Majetty to stoop at their Summons, being so publick an Action; or to lessen or recall what he had done. Yet he was troubled, not knowing what Quarrels the Strife for Place and Precedency might produce; or what ill Blood the Difcontent of fo many of the No-bility at one time might ingender: Therefore he fent for them all, or the most eminent and leading Men of them, some Days after, and expostulated the Business with them, one by one, in private, knowing he could deal belt with them fo, beginning with some of them roughly; yet fill he closed with them at last, his Anger being (as it were) raised to make them humble, and reconcile themfelves to him, them humble, and reconcile them. Lives to him, that he might the better reconcile himfelf to them. And to the Earl of Effex he vented this Expredion, I fear the not Effex, if then wert as well below d as thy Father, and badft Forty thoufund Men as thy Heefs. Which Words he utterd, as if he had chid himfelf that they made an escape from him. And tho' this Petition did not decrease from the Dignity of those Cogarios progate from the Dignity of those Creations path, yet the King willingly restrain'd himself for the time to come.

But the House of Commons found the King's TheCom-Letters to entangle the Way, rather than make mons Difa free Passage to their Liberties; for that which content. a free Paliage to their Liberties; for that which was their Birth-right, would now come to be derived from his Ancestors. And for all the King's Finencises, they thought Religion very unsecure. For as long as the Bent of his Affections tended to the Spanish March, there must be a supported by the Proportion of the Pr needs be a wide Gap open as an Inlet to Popery; and if it may be made Treafon for his Parlia-ment to advise him from it, they faw but a very fmall Door left open to Liberty. But whatfoever befel them, they refolved to leave to Po-fterity fome Prints and Footsteps of their Parliamentary Rights and Privileges, left them by their great Ancestors, that they they could not preserve them entire, those that succeed them might at least find some Relicks and Ruines of what they had; which made them make this Protestation, Recorded in their Journal Book, 19 Dec. 1621.

The King was again alarm'd by this Protesta-Trouble tion, and he that naturany 10v a 1 cace, trouble home and abroad, found a loud War in his own tion, and he that naturally lov'd Peace, both at increates. Breaft, which indeed was in effect rais'd by himfelf; for no Wifdom could refolve the Intricacies of his Refolutions but his own; for he would have a War with the Emperor in Contemplation, and a Treaty with the King of Spain in Action, both at one time, who were (as it were) one Person; and because the Parliament, like wife Mathematicians, would use the Practical Part as well as the Theory, he was enraged against them, and his Prerogative stept in as a Stickler, and broke out, like an Exhalation, in Thundring and Terror, to the Afto-nifhment and Fear of his People, which made them fhrowd themselves from those Storms, by creeping under the Shelter of their Native Liberties. And now the King slies from his hor and intemperate Region, to some cool Considerations. If he should yield by Silence or Connivence to this Protestation, it would remain as an impregnable Bulwark for the People to Pofterity. And what is this terrible Thing? their just Liberties. If he should oppose it with Rigour, it might produce such an intestine Divifion at home, as with all Industry he strove to prevent abroad. Break the Treaty with Spain he would not, his Heart was too much fet upon it, for he could find no Pretestant Princess good trough; the high and elated Extraction of kings will raife the People up to a kind of Adoration (as the old Heathens did the Race of their Gods and Heroes,) Whereas true Honefty and Piety finds out fuch Matches, as may as well bring Glory to God as to Man; not Worldly Bleflings only, but Heavenly alfo. Lofe the Love of the People he was loth; for he thought his peaceable Reign gained upon them, and that no King had ever deferved better of a Peo-ple than he. When the King had weighed every particu-The Parhament is lar Scruple, by the Ballance of his own Readiffolved fon, and Council about him, he took a Refolution to dissolve the Parliament; which he did, by Proclamation, the 6th of January, being

Records for any of his Produces for a which he People for any of his Predecessors; which he implies in his Proclamation, laying there all the Blame upon the House of Commons, and not on them in general, but on some ill-temper'd Spirits, (as he call'd them) that sowed Tares among the Corn, and frustrated the Hopes of a plentiful Harvest: Striving by these Imputations to take away the Odium that fuch a Diffolution might produce.

The Parliament (and confequently the Union A Proclabetween the King and People) being thus dif-mation a-folved, every Man's Tongue is let loofe to run gainst Riot. And tho' the King loved Hunting above Talking. all other Exercises, and had many good Hunters about him; yet all those, and the Strength of a Proclamation, (put out to forbid talking of State Affairs) could not restrain them from mouthing out, That Great Britain was become less than little England; that they had lost Strength by changing Sexes; and that he was no King, but a Fidler's Son; otherwise he would not fuffer such Disorders at home, and fo much Difhonour abroad. So dangerous it is for Princes, by a flegmatick Remiffnels, to flacken the Ligaments of the Peoples Tongues; for fuch an overflux of bad Humour may bring their Obedience to a Paralytick! And the Story of David Ricius, written by the King's cwn Tutor, Buchanan, had died in every English Opinion, if it had not had a new Impression by thefe Miscarriages.

And they say further, Why should he assume to Sets Peo-himself the Title of Defender of the Faith, that ples fuffers the Protestants of Germany and France to be extirpated. That he might almost have pur- a-work chased such a Country as the Palatinate, with the Money fpent on Ambassages; and that his promising the French Protestants Assistance, (by their Agents that interceded for them) made them the more refolute, and confident to their Ruine: So that they might well call England the Lend of Promife. And all that he got by his Lip-labour Affistance from the French King, was, That his Ambassador Sir Edward Herbert was fnapp'd up by Luynes, the young Constable and Favourite there; with, What bath your Mester to do with us and our Business? Whereas the English Fleet's the Glory of the World, (if employ'd) would have taught the French Pride to know, that a Looker on fees more than the Gamester; and he that strikes with Passion, will many times thank them that take him off by Friendly Admonition. Such Discourses as these slew up and down from Lip to Lip, that it was almost

Sir Themas Crew, Sir Dudly Digges, Sir Nathaniel Rieb, and Sir James Perret, Men of great Repute and Knowledge, active in the House, were fent into Ireland, and joined with others in Commission, to enquire into Misdemeanours committed there, but (it was thought) as a Punishment for what they had committed here; for they were long detained from their own Occafions, under the Colour of an honourable Employment; and Sir Peter Hammon of Kent, and others, were fent into the Paletinate. This kind of Punishment beginning now to be in Fashion; and not long after this, Sir John Savile, the Knight of Yorkshire, that carried all the Country at a Beck, and a powerful Man in the House, is taken off by the King, made Comtroller of his Houshold, a Privy-Councellor, and not long after a Baron: So the King found out two ways of filencing these that were able to do him Missien. And these Preferments and Punishments were also practised by his Succeffor, with this Experiment in both, That the most popular Men, as soon as they wore the Court Livery, lost the Love of the People; but those that suffered for them, were the more beloved and admired by them: The Commons of England having more than an ordinary Genius to support and strengthen the Pillars of their Liberties. And as these Troubles bred Disturbance at home, so they begot Discredit abroad; for now (by this Breach) they undervalued the King's Power as much as they did before his Spirit; yea, even in the King of Spains own Towns, (whilft this beloved Treaty was in heat) they in their Comedies prefented Messengers bringing News in hafte, That the Palati-nate was like to have a very formidable Army fhortly on foot: For the King of Demark would furnish him with a Hundred thousand Pickel'd-Herrings, the Hellanders with a Hundred thousand Butter-Boxes, and England with a Hundred thousand Ambassadors. And they picture the King in one place with a Scabbard without a Sword: In another place with a Sword that no body could draw out, tho' divers fland pulling at it. At Bruffells they painted him with his Pockets hanging out, and never a Penny in them nor in his Purile, turned ver a Penny in them nor in his Purie, turned upfide down. In Aniwerp they pictured the Queen of Bobenia like a poor Lift Mantler, with her Hair hanging about her Ears, and her Child at her Back, with the King her Father carrying the Cradle after her; and every one of these Pictures had several Motto's, expressing their Malice. Such Scorns and Contempts were pure two the King, and in him the whole No. put upon the King, and in him the whole Na-

And now the Treaty goes on amain. The Lord Digby is fent into Spain Extraordinary Ambassador. Lordfhip. When his Expectations were tired with attending their Formalities, he fent his Secretary, Simon Digby, to Midrid, to be a Solicitor to the Duke of Lerma, (who then bore the Sway) that he might have his first Audience at Lerma. And after some waiting time, (tho' he had our King's Agent, Mr. Cottington, for his Affistant) he was returned with a Spanish Shrug, That the King would by no means admit of his Desire, because he knew the Ambassador came about Business, and he went to Lerma only for Pleasure. This was a Rub in his Lordship's way; and being impatient till it were removed, he fent again to Court a fecond Petition, which was to be presented with all the Power Cottington could make; and his Importunity got the upper Hand of the Spanish Refolution, (tho' much against their Minds) that he might come to Lerma; for which his Lordship was so elevated in his Spirits, that he pleased himself in an endeavouring way to express, That the King of Spain would not have done this Favour to any Ambassador, but the King of England's; nor to any that our King should have sent, but himself. any that our King inouid nave tent, but nimetr.
And it may be partly true, for none (it is hoped) would have begg'd it fo fhamefully as he did; for there was no Bufinefs to be expected; that muft be turned into Feathing and Jollity; and if he had not hunted after the King of Spain

But his Lordship made Bonne mine, and pleased himself with the great Favours he should receive at Lerma, and to came forward to Burgos, which is within 20 Euglish Miles of Lerma. And the the Court had been a Fortnight at Lerma, yet there was no more News of his Reception at Burges, than if he had been still at St. Andreo.

And now his Lordship fearing they would wholly neglect him, thought it his best course to fend Cottington (who met him at Burgos) to Lerma, to learn what their Pleasure was to do with him; who returning, brought word, that the next Day he should have advice what Order would be taken. And accordingly, one of the Duke of Lerma's Secretaries fent a poor Fellow with a Letter, that the next Day (being Sunday) there should be two Coaches sent, to bring his Lordship on Tuesday following to Villa Manza (a Village a Mile short of Lerma) where his Lodgings should be ready, and the King's Harbingers attending to prepare all Things with Diligence. This gave new Life to his Lordship's Spirits; the Coaches came according to the time, and to Villa Manza they went, every Man furnished in his best Accoutrements, hoping to fee the Court that Night : But they only found a pitiful, poor, ragged Village; where, enquiring for the Lord Am-baffador's House, the honest Country People tho' happily the Way may be smoother now, told them, surely they were mistaken; they

The English rouncd up and down the Town, and could discover no House fit for the Ambafflador to go into: fo that he was forced to fit in the Coach, and fent ||Waljingham Greisley in all hade to Lerma, to know how he should be difposed of: Greisley returned, and told the Ambaffador, They were all fo butie in feeing a Play, that he could not come to speak with any Man that understood any thing relating to his Lordship: Which so distracted him, that he began to doubt whether Villa Manza were the Place; and it begot a new Scrutiny; but the Scruple was quickly removed, by finding Villa Manza in the Letter in very legible Characters. And now he could no longer diffemble like an Ambaffador; but fupplying with Impatience what he wanted in Authority, commanded the Coachmen in a very hafty manner to drive back to Burgos, which they very punctually refused; whereupon his Lordship leap'd out of the Coach, and in a great Choler mounted on Horfetack, crying to his Company, Away. The Coachmen feeing him refolute, and fearing to lofe their Reward, told his Lordfhip, They would venture a Chiding to do him Service; which difmounted him again, and he entred the Coach; but before the Wheels turned about, his Mind changed, and by fome little whifpering Advice of Cottington's, he now determined to tarry there all Night: So that after fitting still four Hours in a Coach, he made a worse Choice, entring into a poor Cottage, where bare Walls, and want of fuch fitting Furniture as helps Nature's Weariness, might tell his Lordship, that the Commons of England stand on a better Foundation than wooden Shoes. Yet the Owner of this House welcomed his Lordship with as much Gravity, as if it had been a well provided Caftle; fo that there was little Pleasure to be taken, to hear one fo over-furnish'd with Words that had fuch empty Rooms.

But now News was brought, that a Harbinger was come, who faid, there was a House, and all things provided; fo that his Lordship composed his Countenance as well as he could upon fuch a fudden Warning, and commanded the Harbinger to be brought to him; who excusing himself for not coming time enough to attend hisLordship, faid, He was glad to fee his Lordship had lighted upon the right House. My Lord, something dashed with the ill Accommodation, asked him, How he knew it to be the right House? He answered, That himself and one of his Fellows had been there the Day before to befpeak it. The Mafter of the House being questioned a-bout it (having formerly deny'd it) made good his first Affertion, denying there was any Body at his House: Which put his Lordship into fuch a Fit of Anger, that he threatned to throw the Harbinger out of the Window for Lying. The Man, affrighted, quickly got down the Stairs. leaving his Lordflup to his shifts, and He and his Train that higher were but slenderly

The Duke, perhaps glad of the Occasion, gave (by way of Diversion) good Ear to the Fellows words; and putting on the feverest Countenance, told Cottington, He did not think that so great a Counsellor, as Don Juan, would have so miscarried with Passion, as to menace and affront the King's Officer in that manner: So that Cottington's Business was quite perverted; for whereas he came to complain of the Wrongs his Lordship had received, he was now driven to excuse the Error he had committed. Your loving Friend, JO. LINCOLN.

His Pre-

This Bishop succeeded the Lord Verulam, not Character he having been by Buckinghows means made and part Dean of Westminster, and Bithop of Lincoln, uptime had very gracious Acceptance with the Countels of Buckingham, who was a great Means to fimooth his Paffage to all these Places; and the Marquess her Son was the rather induced to it, because he was his Creature, and could mould him (as he thought) to ferve his own Turn; though when he had fifted and tried him, he found fome Pharifaical Leaven in him; and afterwards in the next King's Reign threw him by. For though, he were composed of many Grains of good Learning, yet the Height of his Spirit (I will not say Pride) made him odious, even to those that raised him; happily, because they could not attain to those Ends by him, that they required of him: For great and good Officers ought to be just to their own Principles, and not deviate from them for any Worldly Respects.

But being of a comely and stately Presence, and that animated with a great Mind, made him appear very proud to the Vulgar Eye; but that very Temper raifed him to aim at great Things, which he effected; for the old ruinous-Body of the Abbey-Church at Westminster was new clothed by him; The fair and beautiful Library of St. John's in Cambridge, was a Pile of his Erection; and a very compleat Chapel built by him at Lincoln-College in Oxford, meerly for the Name of Lincoln, having no Interest in, nor Relation to that University. These were Arguments of a great Mind, how far from Oftentation in this frail Body of Flesh, cannot be determined, because the Benefit of publick Actions fmooths every Stone that makes up the Building.

But that which heightned him most in the Opinion of those that knew him best, was his bountiful Mind to Men in Want, being a great Patron to support, where there was Merit that wanted Supply. Among the rest, Monsieur de Molin, a very samous Minister of France, (in the Persecution there) driven into England for Refuge. The Bishop hearing of him, spoke to Doctor Hacket, his Chaplain, to make him a Visit from him. And because (saith he) I think the Man may be in want, in a strange Country, carry him some Money, not naming the Sum, because he would sound the Depth of his Chaplain's Mind. Doctor Hacket finding the Bishop nominate no Proportion, told him, He could ing it the next way to Preferment; so that Arminot give him less than Twenty Pounds. I did nius's Tenets slew up and down from Pulpit to

But these great Actions were not publickly visible; those were more apparent that were looked on with an Envious, rather than an Emulous Eye. For the close and intimate Correspondence, that was betwixt this Bishop and the old Countels, fer many scurrilous Tongues and Pens a-work, though he was (as I have been affured) Eunuchus ab Utero; which shews, that nothing can prevent Malice, but fuch an Innocence as it cannot lay hold on. For it hath ever been accounted a Crime, not to endeavour to prevent the Voice of Calumny.

His Breach with Laud Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Difgraces put upon him by the Court, will not fall in here; nor his closing again, and struging when he saw the Axe laid to the Root of Episcopacy. But by this Man's Actions (as in a Mirror) may be seen, that a great Estate which (besides his Bounty) his Places procured him, is a liquorish Temptation to make a Man, Protess-like, vary from one Shape to another, and to shape no direct Course, but to go still as the Wind blows.

Not long before this, that Reverend Prelate Archbi-George Archbiftop of Camerbury, a Man of a flop the Holy and Unblamable Life (meddling with is kills; edged Tools that he used not to handle in his Keeper. Study) by a fad Accident killed a Keeper with a forked Arrow as he was shooting at a Deer. This was a great Perplexity to the good Man, and a heavy Knell to his Aged Spirit, which he petitioned the King might ring a Requiem to his retired Thoughts at Guildford, his Place of Birth, where he had built a very Munificent Alms-house for poor People, and where he went to bring his Spirit under, to make it more blessed than the Glories of the World can contribute to it. There were very many willing to have him retire to his Rest, that gaped after his Dignity more than Defert; and though Doctor Land was but newly initiated into his Bishoprick of St. David's (by other Hands, because those of the Archbishop were tinctured with Blood, as he saith himself) yet his Enmity was not small against him, for being a Means to let the King know, he was reputed a Papist in Oxford, and a dangerous turbulent Spirit:
But the King granted out a Commission to enquire, Whether casual Homicide did make the Årchbishop irregular? And in the Disquisition of it, he found many Friends that reftor'd him from his Alms-house to his Palace. But this he did, and would have done in either Condi-tion. The Widow of the Man that fell by him, was raifed by him; and fhe and her Children (as may be faid) built a commodious Being upon his Grave.

2. That no Parson, Vicar, Curate, or Le-Aurer, shall Preach any Sermon or Collation hereafter, upon Sundays and Holidays in the Afternoon, in any Cathedral or Parish Church throughout the Kingdom, but upon some part of the Catechism, or some Text taken out of the Creed, Ten Commandments, or the Lord's Prayer (Funeral Sermons only excepted) and that those Preachers be most encouraged, and approved of, who fpend the Afternoons Exercife in the Examination of Children in their Catechism, which is the most ancient and laudable Custom of Teaching in the Church of England.

3. That no Preacher, of what Title foever, under the Degree of a Bishop or Dean at the leaft, do from henceforth prefume to Preach in any Popular Auditory the deep Points of Predeffination, Election, Reprobation, or of the Universality, Efficacy, Resistibility, or Irresistibility of God's Grace, but leave those Themes rather to be handled by the Learned Men, and that moderately and modeftly, by way of Use and Application, rather than by way of Pontive Doctrines, being fitter for the Schools then for simple Auditories.

4. That no Preacher, of what Title or Denomination foever, from henceforth shall prefume in any Auditory within this Kingdom to declare, limit, or bound out, by way of Positive Doctrine, in any Lecture or Sermon, the Power, Prerogative and Jurisdiction, Authority or Duty of Sovereign Princes, or otherwise meddle with Matters of State, and the Differences between Princes and the People, then as they are Inftructed and Precedented in the Homilies of Obedience, and the rest of the Homilies and Articles of Religion, fet forth (as before is mentioned) by publick Authority, but rather confine them-felves wholly to those Two Heads of Faith and Good Life, which are all the Subject of the ancient Sermons and Homilies.

65. That no Preacher, of what Title or Denomination foever, shall presume causelesty, or (without Invitation from the Text) fall into bitter Invectives, and undecent railing Speeches against the Persons of either Papists or Puritans, but modeftly and gravely, when they are occasioned thereunto, by the Text of Scripture, free both the Doctrine and the Discipline of the Church of England from the Afpersions of either Adversary, especially when the Auditory is suspected to be tainted with the one or the other Infection.

Laftly, That the Archbishops and Bishops of the Kingdom (whom his Majesty hath good Caufe to blame for this former Remissness) be more wary and choice in their Licenfing of Preachers, and revoke all Grants made to any Chancellor, Official, or Commiffary, to pals Licences in this kind. And that all the Lecturers throughout the Kingdom of England (a new Body fevered from the ancient Clergy, as being neither Parsons, Vicars, nor Curates) be Licensed henceforward in the Court of Faculties, but only from a Recommendation of the Party from the Bishop of the Diocese, under his Hand and Seat, who as a Confirma-Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, a Confirma-tion under the Great Seal of England. And then may be observed, that the King's Affections Directitended to the peaceable Comportment of his People, that both Papist and Puritan might have a quiet Being; which preponderation of his puts them in Agui-librio; nay, the Papist was in the prime Scale. But this new thing called a Lecturer, he could by no means en-dure, unless he pass'd through all the Briers of his feveral Courts to the Broad Seal, which was as kind of pungent Ordeal Tryal, to which he must put his Teste me info, and then it was Orthodox; so that though Lecturers were not absolutely forbidden, yet the Charge and Trouble to come to it, made the way inaccess. fible. But this Animofity of the King's against Puritans, was thought to be fomented by the Papists, whose Agent Bishop Land was suspected to be, though in Religion he had a Motley Form by himfelf, and would never (as a Prieft told me plainly in Flanders) bring his Neck under the Obedience of the Roman Yoak, tho under the Obedience of the Roman Yoak, tho he might flickle for the Grandure of the Clergy. And now he began to be Buckingham's Confeffor, (as he expressed in his own Notes) and wore the Court Livery, tho' the King had a fufficient Character of him, and was pleafed with Affeveration to protest his incentive Spirit should be kept under, that the Flame should not break out by any Preferment from him. But that was now forgotten, and he crept fo into Favour, that he was thought to be the Bellows that blew these Fires. For the Papists used all the Artifices they could to make a Breach between the King and his People, that they might enter at the fame for their own Ends: Which, to accomplish, they slily close with the Chief Ministers of State, to put the King upon all his Projects and Monopolies displeasing to the People, that they might the more Alienate their Affections from him: Sowing their Seeds of Division also betwixt Puritan and Protestant; fo that (like the second Commandment) they quite exclude the Protestant; for all those were Puritans with this Highgrown Arminian-Popish Party, that held in Judgment the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches, or in Practice live according to the Doctrine publickly taught in the Church of And they attribute the Name of England. Then they firive to make a Division of Regians and Republicans: The Regians are the great Dependents upon the Crown, both in Regians Church and State, who fivell up the Preroga. and Retive, preaching and diffilling into the King publicans the Almightiness of his Power. That all that the People hath is the King's, and that it is by his Mercy they have a bare empty Being. And this hoifting up of the King, they knew, would flir up the Republicans to oppole him in his Designs, by which they pinch (as the King thinks) his Prerogative; seeding a Strife betwixt Law and Prerogative, whereby they e-fcape the Dint of both, and hope the Fire they kindle will break out at last to consume their Adverfaries. That these Things were acted and somented by Papists, was very probable, for they were great Sticklers about the Court and Council-Table. But it was too apparent that fome of the Clergy (to make their way the fmoother to their wished End) began so to adore the King, that he could not be named, but more Reverence was done to it than to the Name of God; And the Judges in their itine-rant Cirouits (the more to enflave the People to Obedience) being to fpeak of the King, would give him fuch Sacred and Oraculous Ticles, as if their Advancement to higher Pla-

On the other side: The well-affected to Religion (that knew no other Inclination than the Dictates of their own Reason, Experiences of former Times, and the constant Practices of the Romanists for propagating their own Defigns) did, by their Writings and Discourses, strive to warm the King's cold Temper, and put fresh Spirits into his chilled Veins; shewing the Tyranny of the incroaching Monarchy of the House of Austria, (who was Rome's great Factor) and how just and secure the opposing of such a growing Power will be; That no Sword is fo sharp, nor Arms to strong, as those that are cemented with true Religion. Therefore he plied it make the Error theirs. Therefore he plied it by his Ambassadors and Agents, and all Indulgences to Recufants were admitted to fweeten their Addresses. The Lord Vaux, a Papist, had freedom to transport Four thousand Englift, to reinforce the king of Spain's Armies, both against our King's Confederates of Holland, (under whose Protection his banished Children had Refuge) and against their Country it felf the Palatinate, which the King fo much endeavoured to preferve.

Ight Trufty, &c. Your Dispatch of the 9th of August gave us so much Contentment, and so great Hopes of Satisfaction, in all those Businesses, which you have there to Treat with that King, as we could not expect any further Difficulties: Notwithstanding by that which hath come to our Hands imme-6 diately after, as well by George Gage from Rome, as by our Ambaifador Sir Richard Weston at Brusfels, and our Ministers in the Palatinate; We find that neither the Dispensation is granted for the Match, nor the Treaty of Ceffation fo near a Conclusion, as we conceived it would have been, now that the Auxiliaries and all other Obstacles are removed. But on the contrary fide, that new Delays and Excufes are invented, our Garifons in the Palatinate in the mean time blocked up, Heidelberg it felf trully befieged: Which Proceeding, tho our Ambassador hath expostulated with the Infanta and the Commissioners, as injurious to A. This Dealing feems the more strange unto us, for that the late Dispatch of the King of Spain was (before the News of the Siege, and that our Ambassador had propounded any concerning it) come unto the Infanta. But Spanish because you shall be particularly informed of Juggling the whole Carriage of the Bufiness, we have given Order, that Copies shall be sent you of all the Dispatch, and then you shall see how these Proceedings agree with the Hopes and Promifes which are given us from thence. 'Hereupon therefore our Pleafure is, That you shall immediately, and with as much speed as you may, crave Audience of that King, and represent unto him the Merit which we may justly challenge unto our felf, for our fincere Proceedings with the Emperor, and him, in all the Course of this Business, notwithstanding the many Invitations and Temptations which we have had, to engage our felf on our Son-in-Law's Part. That we have had, both from the Emperor and him, Hopes given us, from time to time, of extraordinary Respect, howfoever our Son-in-Law had deferved, which we have attended, and expected even to the very laft, with much Patience, and in defpight (as it were) of all the Opposition that hath been made to shake our Resolution in that behalf. If now when all Impediments are removed, and that the Way is fo prepared, as that the Emperor may give an End unto the War, and make fome present Demonstration of his Respects towards us, in leaving us the Honour of holding those poor Places, which yet remain quietly and peaceably, until the general Accommodation, the same shall nevertheless be violently taken from us, what can we look for when the whole shall be in his Hands and Poffession? who amusing us with a Treaty of Ceffation, and protracting it in-duftriously, (as we have Reason to believe) doth in the mean time feize himfelf of the whole Country; which being done, our Am-' baffador shall return with Scorn, and we remain with Dishonour.

'I shall not need to furnish you with Arguments for the unfolding and laying open this unfriendly Dealing more plainly unto them; your own Reafon and Observation will find enough out of the Dispatches, whereof Copies are fent unto you; as namely, The withdrawing of the Spanish Forces, and leaving the Business wholly in the Hands of the Emperor and the Duke of Bavaria; The Stile of the Infanta, in answering our Ambassador with Recrimi- Austrian nations, which was not her manner heretofore; Juggling The flight and frivolous Answer given by the Marquis of Bedmar unto our Ambassador, when he acquainted him with the Siege of ' Heidelberg; The quarrellous Occasion taken by the Emperor for calling the Diet at Ratisbon, contrary to his own Promife, which, in his Dispatch to us, he confesseth to have broken,

† There is oftener than once mention made of the King's and Buckingham's Correspondence with the Cardinals Ludevice and Burkerin, in the Collection of Original Letters above-mentioned. A.Rig. 20. c as you will fee by the Copy. All which, and many more, which your own Judgment (in the perusal of the Dispatches) will suggest unto you, do minister unto us Cause sufficient of Jealoufy on the Emperor's Part, as you shall plainly tell that King; although we will not do him that Wrong as to mifruft, that he gives the leaft Confent to it. In this Confidence, with much Earnestness, we shall still solicite That, for the Affection he bears us, and the Defire which we suppose he hath, that there may continue for ever a perfect Amity betwixt us and the whole House of Austria, he will not cease to do all good Offices herein; fletting him know directly, That in these Terms we cannot stand with the Emperor; but that 'if Heidelberg be won, or the Siege continue, or the Ceffacion be long unneceffarily delay'd, we must recall our Ambassador from Brullels, and treat no more, as we have already given Order; hoping, that whatfoever Unkindness we shall conceive against the Emperor upon these Occasions, it shall not be interpreted to reflect in any fort upon the entire Affection that is at this present, and as we hope shall always continue, betwixt us and the Crown of Spain. And therefore, as we have heretofore fundry times promifed, in Testimony of the Sincerity of our Proceedings, and of our great Defire to preferve the Amity inviolable between us and the whole House of Austria, That in case our Son-in-Law would not be governed by us, that then we would not only forfake him, but take part, and join our For-ces with the Emperor against him; so you may fairly represent unto that King, That in like manner we have Reason to expect the same Measure from him, that (upon the Emperor's Averfeness to a Cessation and Accommodation) he will likewise actually affift us, for the Recovery of the Palatinate, and Electoral Dignity, unto our Son-in-Law, as it hath been oftentimes intimated from

Spain.
To conclude, we fhall not need to fay any you fee, That our Meaning is, to carry all Things fair with that King, and not to give him any Caufe of Diftruft or Jealoufy, if you perceive that they intend to go really and roundly on with the Match: Wherein nevertheless we must tell you, that we have no great Cause to be well pleased with the Diligences used on that part, when we observe, that after so long an Expectance of the Difpensation, upon which the whole Business (as they will have it) depends, there is nothing yet returned but Querics and Objections. Yet because we will not give over our Patience a while longer, until we understand more certainly what the Effect thereof is like to be, wherein we require you to be very warry, and watchful, confidering how our Honour is therein engaged; we have thought fit to let you know, how far we are pleafed to enlarge our felf, concerning those Points demanded by the Pope, and fet down by way of Postil unto the Articles agreed upon betwixt Spain and us, as you shall see by the Power which Gage brought us from Rome, whereof we have fent you a Copy, and our Refolutions thereupon figned with our own Hand, for your Warrant and Instruction. And further than Iffue, without further Delay, which you are AR's 20 to prefs with all Diligence and Earnefines, that you may prefently know their final Refo.

Justines and what we may expect thereupon.

But if any Refpite of Time be carneftly demanded, and that you perceive it not possible for them to refolve until an Answer come from Rome, we then think it fit that you give them two Months time after your Audience, that we may understand that King's final Resolution before Christmas next at the furthest. Wanfted, 9 Sept. 1622.

This Letter doth not only discover the Shuf-The King fling and Fox-like Contrivances of the House abused of Auftria to Work and Earth themselves in the Palatinate, but also the Scorns and Reproaches put upon our King, and (if I may fo call them) his Terriers, who (with little Bayings only) let them work till they had got into their Faftneffes and ftrong Flolds, and then they may bay at leifure, and blame their lazy Belief. But notwithflanding our King threatens in his Letter if Hallback he had been dead for the form of the ter, if Heidelberg be loft, and the Ceffation delay'd, he will Treat no more; yet the Defire of the Match was fo radicated in his Heart, that neither the Lofs of Heidelberg, or Manheim that fucceeded it, nor the Blocking up of Franken-dale, (the last strong Hold of his Son-in-Law's Inheritance) could mortify his Hopes: But as the Emperor besieged those Towns with his Armies, so he beset the King of Spain with his Treaties. And the Lord Digby, tho' quicken'd Digby by this Letter, did not lay open the cunning faulty. Carriage of these Contrivers, (which tended to root out the Reformed Religion in Germany) nor press home these Particulars, as he was enjoined; but only let the King of Spain know, That his late Father, by the Advice of his Ecclefin-ficks in Spain, had consented to the Articles of Marriage, in Matters of Religion, five Months fince; yet there were Demurs upon those Points, notwithstanding that the King of Great Britain complied in all things, then demanded particularly, what he would do in Favour of the Catholicks; But now, after two Years time, the Pope, of his own accord, (without any Intimation to Spain) had fent directly for England, propounding to the King his Mafter, not only many Alterations in the Capitulations, (before a Dispensation could be granted) but intruded fomething new, which the King would by no means yield unto: Wherefore, to expedite the Business, (the King having neglected all other Treaties of Marriage for his Son these fix Years past, only in respect of this Treaty) he is commanded to declare plainly to the King of Spain, how far the King his Master may condescend in Matters of Religion; and if that will give Content, to proceed to a Conclusion of the Marriage, without more Delays (feeing he hath yielded to much more than was capitulated in the late King of Spain's time); if this will not fatisfy, that then, without Lofs of more Time, the King his Master may dispose of his Son, and the King of Spain of the Infanta,

Thefe Things were ruminated on by the flowpac'd Spanish Gravity, and fair and plautible An-twers prefented, that, like Fruits of Diffimula-tion, gave but finall Nourishment to Hope, yet it kept it alive, (tho' in a drooping Condition) and it was only fuffain'd till they could bring their Ends about. Second Letter to Digby.

R Ight Trufty, &c. There is none better knoweth than your felf, how we have laboured, ever fince the beginning of these unfortunate Troubles of the Empire, (notwithstanding all Opposition to the contrary) to merit well of our good Brother the King of Spain, and the whole House of Austria, by a long and lingering Patience, grounded ftill upon his Friendfip and Promifes, that Care frould he had of our Hopour and of should be had of our Honour, and of our Childrens Patrimony and Inheritance. We have acquainted you also from time to time, fince the beginning of the Treaty at Bruffels, how crofly all Things have there proceeded, notwithflanding all the fair Professions made unto us, both by the King of Spain and the Infunta, and all his Ministers, and the Letters written by him unto the Emperor, and them written by find find the Emperor, and them effectually, (at leaft as they endeavoured to make us believe); but what Fruits have we of all these? Whilft we are Treating, the Town and Castle of Heidelberg are taken by Force, our Garison put to the Sword, Manhiem bestieged, and all the Hostility used that is in the Power of an Enemy, as you may fee by the Relation which we have commanded our Secretary to fend you. Our Pleafure therefore is, That you immediately, as foon as you can get Audience, let that King understand, how fensible we are of these Proceedings of the Emperor towards us; and withal are not a little troubled to fee, that the Infanta (having an absolute Commission to conclude a Cessation and Sufpension of Arms) should now at last, when all Objections were answer'd, and the former (folely) pretended Obstacles removed, not only delay the Conclusion of the Treaty, but refuse to lay her Command upon the Emperor's Generals, to abstain from the Siege of our Garifons during the Treaty, upon a Pretext of want of Authority: So as for avoiding of further Difhonour, we have been forced to recall both our Ambaffadors, as well the Chancellor of our Exchequer, (who is already returned to our Prefence) as also the Lord Chichefter, whom we intended to have fent unto the Emperor to the Diet at Ratisbon. Seeing therefore that, meerly out of our extraordinary Respect to the King of Spain, and the firm *Confidence we ever put in the Hopes and Promifes which he did give us, (defiring no-thing more than for his Caufe principally to avoid all Occasions that might put us in ill avoid all Occasions that migut put us in in Understanding with any of the House of Auffria) we have hitherto proceeded with a stediest Patience, trusting to the Treaties, and neglecting all other Means, which probably " might have fecured the remainder of our Childrens Inheritance, (these Garisons which we maintained in the Palatinate being rather for ' Honour fake, to keep a Footing until the general Accommodation, than that we did rely fo much upon their Strength, as upon his Friendship) and by this Confidence and Security of ours, are now exposed to Distribution and Reproach. You shall tell that King, That mar's Ma-feeing all those Endeavours and good Offices which he hash used towards the Emperor in this Business, on the behalf of our Son-in-Law, (upon Confidence whereof that Securiget and confirm in us) have not forted to any A. Reg. 20. other Issue, than to a plain Abuse, both of his Irust and ours, whereby we are both of us highly injured in our Honour, tho' in a different Degree; we hope and defire that, out of a true Sense of this Wrong offered unto us, he will, as our dear and loving Brother, faithfully promise, and undertake upon his Honour, confirming the same also under his Hand and Seal) either that the Town and Castle of Heidelberg shall, within Threescore and ten Days after your Audience, and Demand made, be rendred into our Hands, with all Things there-in belonging, to our Son-in-Law, or our Daughter, (as near as may be in the State they were when they were taken) and the like for Manbeim and Frankendale, if both or either of them shall be taken by the Enemy while these Things are in Treaty: As also that there shall be within the said Term of Seventy Days a Cossation and Suspension of Arms in the Palatinate for the future, upon the feveral Articles and Conditions last propoun-ded by our Ambassador Sir Richard Weston; and that the general Treaty shall be set afoot again, upon such Honourable Terms and Conditions as we propounded unto the Emperor in a Letter written unto him in November last, and with which the King of Spain then (as we understood) feemed fatisfied. Or elfe, in case all these Particulars be not yielded unto, and performed by the Emperor, as is here propounded, but be refused or delayed beyond the time afore-mentioned; that then the King of Spain do join his Forces with ours for the Recovery of our Childrens Honours and Patrimony, which upon this Trust hath been thus lost. Or if so be his Forces at this present be otherwise so employed, as that they cannot give us that Affiftance which we here defire. and (as we think) have deferved, yet that at the least he will permit us a free and friendly Paffage through his Territories and Dominions, for fuch Forces as we shall fend and employ in Germany for his Service. Of all which distinctively, if you receive not from the King of Spain (within ten Days at the furthest after your Audience) a direct Assurance under his 'Hand and Seal, without Delay, or putting us off to further Treaties and Conferences; that is to fay, of fuch Restitution, Cessation of Arms, and proceeding to a General Treaty, as is before-mentioned; or else of Assistance, and joining his Forces with ours against the Emperor; or, at the leaft, Permission of Passage for our Forces through his the faid King's Dominions; that then you take your Leave, and return to our Presence, without further stay; otherwise to proceed in the Negociation for the Marriage of our Son, according to the 'Instructions we have given you.

This Letter was dated the 3d of October: And prefently after it was fent away, the King re-collected himfelf, and thought it good Policy to make fome Advantage of this Breach with Spain, (if there were one) by letting his People fee, he would no longer wait the Spanish Delays; (which they were impatient enough of) therefore his Ambaffadors (to hinder the Knowledge of it at home) must conceal the Breach abroad. flay still in the Spanish Court, as if the Business were in full Motion, and ripe for Projection: And he must break it to pieces here himself, to make it the more acceptable; either to get the 'ty of ours depended, which he continually by more Love or Money from the People, or his Letters and Ministers here laboured to be- for what other Intention is unknown. 1622 Third Letter to Digby.

R Ight Trufty, &c. We have given you certain Instructions, signed with our Hand, to direct you how to express unto the King of Spain the Feeling we have of the Dishonour put upon us by the Emperor, through our Trust and Confidence in that King's Promises, wherein you have Order to come away with-out further Delay, in case you receive not Sa-tisfaction to your Demands, in such fort as we have commanded you to propound them. Nevertheless, we are to put you in remembrance of that which we have heretofore told you; in case a Rupture happen between the King of Spain and us, that we would be glad to manage it at our best Advantage. And therefore however you do not find the Satisfaction which we in those Instructions crave from the King of Spain, and have Reason to expect, yet would we not have you instantly come away upon it, but advertise us first, letting us know privately (if you find fuch Cause) that there is no Good to be done, nor no Satisfaction, as 'you judge, intended us, (tho' publickly and outwardly you give out the contrary) that we may make use thereof with our People in Parliament, as we shall hold best for our Service. And this fee you do, notwithstanding any thing in your other Instructions to the contrary. Dated Octob. 4. 1622.

Our King's Patience.

The King, in the first of these two Letters, gives Thirty Days more to the King of Spain to repent of his bad Dealing with him than was given to the great City, and yet he repented not. And this positive Command, (limiting but Ten Days after Audience for a Refolution in these Points) one would have thought should have produced an absolute Breach, or a perfect Conclusion. But the Spaniard continues in his old Pace still, and would not be spurr'd up, and Digby (now made Earl of Briftol for his good Services) whittles after him his old Note ftill, aftering our King, That the King of Spain (tho' flow) was real in his Intentions. And if our King had not had a great good Stomach to the Match, he would never have digested this Dealing from a Brother and a Servant; the Pope alfo at the same time giving him a Bit to chew on, interpreting the Articles where the Children of Marriage were to be brought up, Ufque ad Annos nubiles, to be Fourteen Years old, which our King would not confent to, in respect of the Scandal it might produce: For he knew Impreffions in Youth, fettled by Custom, are not eafy to remove, especially where they make Dints upon the Conscience; therefore he pressed the King of Spain, that the Children might not fuck in their Mothers Instructions fo long time, being less for his Honour: And they, with much Importunity, brought it down from Four-teen to Ten, and there they stuck. Our King expressed himself willing to have them brought up, fub regimine matris, for Seven Years, and that Time should be limited in the publick Capitulations; but if more time were infifted on by the Pope, he would oblige himself privately by a Letter to the King of Spain, that they shall be under their Mother's Regiment for Two Years longer. And feeing there is but One Year more that is betwixt them, the King, in another Letkee, Now. ter to the Earl of Briftol, tells him, That if they not stick to give them another Year.

The Palatingte loft. Fortress in the Palatinate, was taken by Tilly, the Emperor's General, whereof Sir Horatio Vere 1622. was Commander, furrendred upon honourable Conditions, having neither Strength of Men, or Means to refift an Enemy. Heidelberg before it (as the King expressed) was taken by Assault, Sir Gerard Herbert, the Commander of the Ca-ftle, flain, after he had repulfed the Enemy from the Affault, breaking Six Pikes upon them with his own Hand. And now Tilly, (Winter conting on) greedy to finish his Work, sits down before Framkendale, whereof Major Burrenes had the Command, a Man of as much Valour and Lxperience, as Time the Director, and Spirit the Actor, could make a Man capable of. But all this, and the Strength of the Town to boot, could not have protected them, (their Wants being stronger than their Enemy) if Tilly had not been drowned up in his Trenches, which forced his Remove.

And tho' our King said in his last Answer to The Palathe Parliament's Petition, That the Enemy tinate a would have fwallow'd up his Forces in the Pala-frong tinate in Eight Days, if my Lord Digby had not Country. fuccour'd it; yet the weakest of the Three Places, which is Heidelberg, was not taken in a Moment: For Tilly in June last fer down before it, and was constrain'd to raise his Siege, being not fitrong enough; and coming again with a great-er Power in the end of July following, he was there above Two Months before he took fo much as any of their Outworks. And Manheim and Frankendale are Two fuch strong Holds, that, if they had been well furnished with Men and Provisions, they might have stood out against Tilly; nay, the Great Turk, as well, if not better than Vienna the Imperial City.

As foon as the King had Notice of the taking Our King of Manheim, he gives Bristol Intimation of it, fitissifed and was very well farissied of the King of Spain's Spain's Good In good Intentions for the Relief of it, though Or- good Inder sent to the Infanta arrived not there till the tentions. Town was surrendred: Which was the old *Spa*nish Plot of Philip the Second to get Portugal into his Hand; wherein he cheated the Pope him-felf, delaying his Solicitations, by his Legate Cardinal Riario, (for Don Antonio, Bastard of Portugal) with specious and pleasing Entertainments, till he had gotten the Castle of St. 7ulians, the greatest Strength of the Kingdom, (then besieged by him) into his Power. yet our King looked upon this Apparition as real, and thanked the King of Spain for the Good he never intended.

And now the Articles of Marriage, that had Articles been long hatching, flew up and down from of Mar-Hand to Hand: The French Historians mention riage. them; so doth Mr. Pryn in his Hidden Works of Darkness, as they were found among the Lord Cottington's Papers. These came to me from the Neft, and I have kept them till this time; and comparing them with other Copies, there is fcarce a Feather amifs. Nor should they have pestered this Paper, but to shew what great Pains was taken to little purpose; what huge Pretences shoulder'd in to make way for the Spanish Designs, which at last dwindled to nothing.

The Articles are thefe:

"Hat the Marriage be made by Dispensation of the Pope; but that to be procured by the Endeavour of the King of Spain.

What rested but a Closing of both Parties? Yet all would not do; for the Spaniard never intended the Match at all, as is evident by a Letter of the King of Spain's, written to his Favourite the Conde of Olivares, dated the Fifth of November, 1622. found among the Lord Cottington's Papers.

The King of Spain's

THE King my Father declared at his Death, That his intent never was to marry my Sifter, Letter to the Infanta Donna Maria, with the Prince of Clienter: Wales, which year Uncle Don Baltazer underflood, and so treated this Mitch, ever with intention to delay it, notwithstanding it is now so far advanced, that (considering all the Avershels of the Instanta to it) it is time to feek some means to divert the Treaty, which I would have you find out; and I will make it good what force you find out; and I will make it good what force it be. But in all other things, procure the Sattifaction of the King of Great Britain (who hath deferved much) and it shall Content me, so it be not in the Match.

> Thus was our King's Plain-Heartedness deluded, his Honour blemished, his Love among his Subjects diminished, the Time for a positive Answer for the Dispensation from Rome long expired and prolonged; his Childrens Patrimony deftroyed, and he left fo unfatisfy'd, that the Prince himself, and the Marques of Buc-kingbam, must go into Spain to unfold this Riddle; where they found it as full of Anigma's as at first. The Marquis Spinola having long since left the Palatinate to the Imperial Generals, with a great Army, confifting of above Thirty thousand Men, the last Summer sits down before Berghenep-Zone, a Town of very great Strength and Importance, upon the Borders of Braban, and incloses himself with two strong Lines of Circumvallation, notwithstanding all the Power the Town could oppose from within, or Prince Maurice General of the States Army without. And though he were well intrenched for his own Security, yet the Works of the Town were fo Impregnable, that he could find no way to gain it, but by flavring them; and that could not be done, but by commanding the River; and those Batteries that he planted, to hinder the Access of Shipping with Relief into the Town, were within reach of their Cannon; for that he found there was little good to be fo that he found there was little good to be done, tending to the Reducing of it. This struck the Marquis to the Heart, that he should

> But while he lay there digging Graves, Count Manifeldt Manifeldt's ranging Army that he brought out comes in of Bohemia, and those Forces that remained of to Branch Bohemia, Christian Duke of Brunswick's after he was bea-bane. ten by Tilly and Cordova, meeting in the Palati-nate, and finding themselves able to do little good there (the Country being ruined, and wanting Providens to Supply them) resolved to bring their Army into the Low-Countries, being invited thereunto by the Prince of Orange and the States, to counterpoise the formidable Armies that the King of Spain had then in Motion; for though Spinela's Hands were ty'd to the Trenches, yet Corduba with one Army on one fide, and Count Henry van de Berg with another Army on the other fide, were dreadful to the Netherlands. The Manifeldters were not above Twelve thousand fitrong, Horse and Foot; the Horse were only arm'd with Pistols, the Foot with Muskets; fcarce a Pike, or Corflet among them (for Brunfwick's Men upon their Defeat for the most part had thrown away their Arms) Money and Provisions they had very little (their Store being now spent) but what they could get by the Sword, or purchase from the Towns and Cities (by Terror) as they paffed; Order there was little among them, for makes Men Brutish and Ravenous; and there was no way for them but to cut themselves out a Passage into a plentiful Country. On their way, divers of Mansfeldt's Horse mutiny'd for Money, and came swarming about his House where he was quartered, threatning Violence, and were ready to break open his Doors. and were ready to break open his Doors. Mansfeld having a Spirit full of Magnanimity (and finding Courage best able to quail such Attempts) would not stay so long as to have his Doors broke open, but opened them himself (attended only by those of his Family) with a Case of Pistols in his Hands, and presented himself before them, and his very Presence daunted them; for he did with sweet and affable Language let them know, his own Wants were as great as theirs; and thus when they wanted other Provisions, he fed them with Hopes. But many of these Brunts he had born formerly. Soldiers are like Gamefters, they get a deal of Money at one time, and have none at all another; and when Want pinches, it rages; his House hath been often befer by Mutineers, that threatned to tare him in pieces; and he hath opened his Doors, thrown himfelf (as it were) among them, and demanded floutly, What they would have? and having a Case of Pistols a ways by him, those near him bury his Honour, as he had done a great part floutly, What they would have? and having a of his Army, in those bloody Trenches; and Case of Pittols always by him, those near him therefore he gave scope to his Resolution, to that called for Money were fire to have those make use of his Time, for he converted his In through Lerrain and Lutzenburgh, they came to Fl.1877, within Eight Miles of Namur, where Corduba with a Spanish Army strove to hinder their Paffage; The Conflict was great betwixt them, and many Slain on both fides, and both triumphed in the Victory. For Corduba kept the Field, and Mansfeldt kept his way. But Mansfeldi's Victory was the compleatest, because he attained to his End, which was, to break through Corduba; But Corduba did not attain to his End, which was, to hinder Mansfeldt. Yet the Spanish Bravery was highly exalted with Bonfires, and Rejoyeings both at Madrid and Bruffelt. The Duke of Bruffelte loft his Bridle Arm in that Service, and many Gentlemen, both English and Scots, out of Love to the Queen of Bohemia, behaved themselves gallantly, and let the Spaniard know, it was more than an ordinary Shock they encountred with. Among whom, Sir Charles Rich, Brother to the Earl of Warwick, was a principal Person, whose voluntary Spirit, not Necessity, made Danger his Companion where Honour attended it. Spinola hearing that Mansfeldt was broken through Corduba's Army and come into Brahant, made the Court Splendour of Corduba's Conquest appear but Ignes f...ii, which also fomething extinguish'd the Glory of his own For he thought it good Policy (feeing Fame. he should be necessitated to leave the Siege of Bergben) to do it at that time, when there might be cause to think it occasioned by that Accident more than his Default. And therefore as foon as the Prince of Orange and Mansfilds had joined Forces, though Corduba came to him and reinforced his Army, yet Winter drawing on, and his Army almost wasted, he trussed up his Baggage in haste, fet, his Camp a-fire and departed, leaving to his hungry Enemies good Store of Wine, and other Provifions, in his burning Quarters. And thus flood the Ballance this Year betwixt the King of Spain and the Netherlands.

Bucking-bam's Medicine to King's Melancholy.

But our King receiving fo many Delays and Diffatisfactions from Spain and Rome, they begot him fo much Trouble and Vexation, that crowding into his Thoughts, press'd upon his Natural Temper some Fits of Melancholy, which those about him with facetious Mirth, would strive to mitigate; And having exhausted their Inventions, or not making use of such as were more pregnant, the Marquis and his Mother (instead of Mirth) fell upon Prophannels, thinking with that to pleafe him, and perhaps they were only mistaken in the the King's Chamber, the King kneeled down unseasonableness of the time, being not then upon his Knees before Gib, intreating his Par-

For they caused A.Reg. 20. Mrs. Aspernham, a young Gentlewoman of the Am. Christie Kindred, to dress a Pig like a Child, and the old Countess, like a Midwife, brought it in to the King in a rich Mantle. Turpin that married one of the Kindred (whose Name was renowned for a Bishop in the Romances of the Emperor Charlemain) was drefs'd like a Bishop in his Sattin Gown, Lawn Sleeves, and other Pontifical Ornaments, who (with the Common Prayer Book) began the Words of Baptism, one attending with a filver Basin of Water for the Service; the King hearing the Ceremonies of Baptism read, and the squeaking Noise of that Brute he most abhorred, turned simfelf to see what Pageant it was; and finding Turpin's Face, which he well knew, drefs'd like a Bishop; and the Marquis, whose Face he most of all loved, stand as a Godfather; he cried out, Away for shame, what Blasphemy is this? And turning aside with a Frown, he gave them Caufe to think, that fuch ungodly Mirth would

Another time, at Theobalds, the King wanted The fome Papers that had Relation to the Spanish King's Treaty, to hot in Motion, which raifed him Choler. highly into the Paffion of Anger that he should not know what he had done with them, being things fo Material, and of fuch Concernment: And calling his Memory to a strict Account, at last he discharged it upon John Gib, a Scotchman, who was of his Bedchamber, and had been an old Servant to him. Gib is called for in hafte, and the King asks him for the Papers he gave him; Gib collecting himself, answer'd the King, he received no Papers from him. The King broke into extream Rage, (as he would often when the Humour of Choler began to boil in him) protesting he had them, and reviling him exceedingly for denying them; Gib threw himfelf at the King's Feet, protesting his Innocency, that he never received any, and defired his Life might make Satisfaction for his Fault, if he were guilty. This could not calm the King's Spirit, toffed in this Tempest of Passion; and overcharged with it, as he passed by Gib (kneeling) threw fome of it upon him, giving him a Kick with his Foot. Which Kick infected Gib, and turned his Humility into Anger; for, rifing inftantly, he faid, Sir, I Angel; for, hing initiative, the tade, Sit, I have ferved you from my Youth, and you never found me unfaithful; I have not deserved this from you, mer can I live longer with you with this Difgrace; Fare ye well, Sir, I will never see your Face more: And away he goes from the King's Presence, took Horse, and rode towards London. Those about the King put on a sad Countenance to see him displeased, and every Man was inquifitive to know the Caufe: Some faid, the King and Gib were fallen out; but about what? some Papers of the Spanish Treaty, the King had given him, cannot be found. Endimion Porter hearing it, faid, The King gave me those Papers, went presently and brought them to the King, who being becalmed, and Answer was made, he was gone to London: The King hearing it, commanded with all Expedition to fend Post after him to bring him back, protefting never to Eat, Drink, or Sleep His San-till he faw Gib's Face. His Fleg. Thus the King's Melancholy, Cholerick, and matick Sanguine Constitution appeared. But of all Humour, the Humours, Flegm was now the most predominant, which made him fo tamely fivalless those raw Fruits of Spain, that all his Exercise could not well digeft.

A Diet at In January this Year, the Diet which the mife, as our King intimates) met at Ratubone, where the Electors and divers other Princes of Germany affembled, either in their own Persons or by their Deputies. The Imperial Design was to take off the Edge of the Prince's Dis fatisfaction, for his harsh Proceedings against the Prince Palatine; wherein he makes him the Ground-work and Cause of all the Wars and Miferies that have happen'd in the Empire. And thinking no Man (as he faid) would take the boldness to mediate the Restitution of the proscribed Palatine into the Electoral College. he could do no less than dispose of the Electorate, now (pleno jure) devolved unto him, as Emperor, which he had bestowed on the Duke Emperor, which he had believed at the of Bavaria for fpending his Treasure, and hazarding his Blood in his Service, against his own Norbey the expulsed Palatine. Wherefore he requests the illustrious Presence of Electors and Princes, to give their Opinions, how the Peace of the Empire may be established to prevent all Commotions for the future.

The Opimon of the Pro-testant Princes.

The Princes took this Proposition of the Emperor into Debate, and the Protestant Princes defired Cafar to confider the Importance of the Business. That though his Imperial Majesty. in his own Judgment, may have had Caufe enough to publish the Ban against the Princ.

Palatine; yet they are of Opinion, that in hiparticular Cause, which so nearly concerned the disposing of an Electorate of the Empire, and so principal a Person of the Electora College, (the fudden doing whereof might occasion long and tedious Wars, dangerou to the Roman Empire) that Cafar should no of himfelf have proceeded fo rigorously, no: without the Advice and Confent of all the rest of the Electors, according as it was a greed upon in the Capitulation Royal, which is holden for a Fundamental Law of the Em pire. Which Courfe of Cafar's, even for th manner of proceeding in it, was diffafted by divers, because the Prince Palitine had never been legally summoned, but uncited and unheard without all knowledge of his Caufe. and contrary to all ordinary Course had been Condemned, and against all Equity oppreffed by the Publication of that Imperial Ban. We purpose not to call the Power Imperial into question, yet we cannot but re-member your Majesty of that Promise made in your Capitulation unto the Electors; and humbly we admonish Cafar to stand unto his own Word, and not to intermit the Performance of it. And as for the disposing of the Electorate, we defire nothing more, than that we could gratifie Casar with our Suffrages; but perceiving so many and so great Difficulties in it, we cannot but admonish your Majesty of the Danger of it. This being the A Reg 20 Opinion of our Electors, that fleing your Majesty hath graciously called the Diet for an Christi refforing Peace in the Empire, that it were altogether necessary first to remove the Obtacles of Peace. And teeing that all the cirs began in Bohemi, Cofer should do well to labour first for the calleing of that Kingdom, and command a rely to be made of the levere Reformation, and frequent Executions there; that so the Hearts of your Subjects, being overcome with Grace and Mercy, might be sweetly joined to you, and all Fear and Diffiust utterly taken away: Without which, we see no hope, either how your Majesty can Sit fure upon your Imperial Throne, or how the Electors and Princes can be freed of their Fears; being evident, that the Bebeniums, and others, made desperate by the Extremity of their Sufferings, will take any Occasion to begin new Troubles, and to involve the Empire with new Dangers. All the Lutheran States of the Empire likewife, which follow the Augustan Confession, have their Eyes upon this Bobomian Reformation, which though it were given out to be for private Justice, yet it is so link d with the publick Cause, that unless it be speedily ended, and the two Churches at iragus granted by Rodolphus II. not in favour of foinc private Men alone, but of Christian Elector of Santon and which had continued free until of late) were again opened, and the free Exercise of Religion generally permitted, we fee no fure Peace likely to be in the Empire, but utter Ruine rather, and final Defoiation, may every day be feared. Seeing it was apparently known, that it was not these that professed the Reformed Religion, who begun these Troubles; but the Noblemen and great Officers, whose Designs the other were compelled to

And for the Prince Palatine, feeing he is already fufficiently punished, it were far more commendable in your Majesty, that now at alt, upon his Submittion, you would be plea-Ld to restore him to his Lands and Dignities, otherwise there is no likelihood of restoring Peace to the Empire. And in the transferring of the Electorate, this main thing were fit to be confidered; Whether the Prince Pullitine, excluded in his own Person, doch debar his Children, who (by the Providence of their Ancestors) had, before this Act of their Father, jus adquisitum, an Heredicary Right unto the Electorate; or the Brother of the Prince Palatine, who hath no way offended your Majetty, nor, by reason of his Minority, could not; Or others of the Kindred of the Prince Palatine, should be, or ought to be, in this Case neglected? If they be, it will be hardly taken of other Electors and Princes, and occasion various Distrusts betwixt the Head and the Members. For the Princes allied unto the Prince Palatine, who have been quiet hitherto, (upon Confidence of Cafar's Clemency) now perceiving all hope of that Dignity unto their Family taken away, must needs have Recourfe unto Arms, and endeavour the Recovery of it by force. And if Cicfar should die, this Congresserie being not compounded, it may well be feared, many Inconveniences will fall out concary to Cossa's Desire. For though upon the Advantage of his Victories he hath had the Law in his own hand, if the Wheel should turn, that his own hand, it the whole side which is lowest will get up again.

There-

A. Reg. 20.

'Therefore we hold it more Wisdom to ad-' vife Cafar, not to proceed too fuddenly, an. Christ but rather to accept the Intercession of other Electors and Princes, as in fuch Cases hath hitherto been done. Considering the Prince Palatine was then but young, abused by ill Council, and no ways the Author of those Stirs in Bohemia, they being in an Uproar before his coming among them. And if his Majesty would Pardon the Prince Palatine, he should ever oblige the whole Electoral College, and all the Kings and Princes allied unto him; and the Prince himself, and all his Posterity, would be advised (when they remember their Exile) how they Embroil them-felves in fuch Business. Whereas if he faw the Door of Mercy quite shur, and nothing left him but his Life, it would make both him, and his, desperate to attempt, so as there would be no end of the Troubles in the Roman Empire. Cafar therefore should do far righter, if for his own Honour, and the Publick Good, he would prefer Mercy before Severity, and not purfue thefe Extremities.

To these things, the Catholick Princes said, The Opinion of That Cafar had flearn Caufes enough which be had the Polhi to deprive the Palatine, and the Palatinate being Princes.

devolved to him, he might dipple of it, without having regard to the Palatine Line, according to his and the Palatine Line, according to his the Cafar That his Mittelly could not well hold. ring regards to the Fatasine Line, according to his own Pleafine. That his Misjeffy could not well hold any Terms of Amity with him, though he were reford; and this Impurity would give occasion unto others to offend. As for the matter of Puniflment, there would be little difference between the Emperor and the Palatine, seeing that his Majesty's Lands and Dominions are no less wasfed than the others, and yet there is great difference in the Cases; for the fell out to Casas without his Demerit, and the Pala tine did the other, having no necessity to it. That he had refused Mercy, in not acknowledging ha he had refused Mercy, in not acknowledging his Seadt, nor Jecking for Evoure. And it is an unequi-Request for Casar to accept of any Reconciliation whilf his General Mansieldt as yet in the Field and professites his Cause by force of Arms. The Jasety of the Empire consisting in the filling up of the Electoral College, Casar barts done very well in a speedy resolving on it, and other Emperors in the like Causes have done the same before.

The Re-Prote-Princes.

To which, the other Party answered, That for ply of the the Security of the Imperial Dignity, and Safety of toe Section of the imperial Dignity, and Safety of the Empire, there is no question, but that it consfited in the Concord of the Electoral College, with the Em-peror. And the Prince Palattine both (as you say) done amils, yet if Casta shall fill use Rigean, by Princes of the Lower Saxony are of Opinion, then Princes of the LOWET SANDIY are of September 18 and the no Peace established in the Empire, the good of which being most worthy to be preferred, Castar should do wifely to suffer himself to be intreated, and change Rigour into Clemency, making the Empire by the suffer peace of the wife won that means glad with a defined Peace, otherwise new Flames were likely to break out in those Places which yet are preserved from burning. That Cæsar had now, by the Aid of the Electors and Princes, recovenow, by the size of the electric and trines, recovered his left frewines, and wanting nothing but quiet Possession of them, which, this defined Reconciliation was the best Means to effect. The hand of War may be listed up, but who knows where the Stroak may fall? And Victory is so long uncertain, as the adverse of the size of th Jaus And Victory is so long invertain, as the adverse Party bath power to reinferce his Arms. And for the rencening of the War, there is yet a fair Pretence less, for that in bestowing the Electorate, the Prince Palatine's Sons and Brother have been neglected, and with these Principles are the Minds of many of the Princes of the Empire already possessing the King of Great Britain besides could not but take it ill, that he should now see all his Federabuse.

Children left in Exile. And as for the manner of a.Reg.20. this Reconciliation, there might be a particular Treaty and Confutation, wherein Caclar's Prerogative Imperial being reserved, all Parties might receive Satisperial vering rejerves, an territer influence very saint-faction, and the Empire once again fluentifle in Peace. If the fe Remedies he not applied, it will produce ill Bloods, year Heart-hurnings and Diffrusts, in the Ele-deral College is felf.

These several Answers, delivered to the Em-The Em-

But as we have no ways gone beyond this our Capitulation, but even, before we fet out the Ban, punktually confidered all that was necessary to be taken notice of; so did we also desire nothing more than that a Dict might be convoked, for the due treating and advising upon this Russels; Which Meeting hing impeded by the Profecution of the War by the Palattine, we could do no less, to take down his Convage, than publish the Ban against him: his Courage, than publifs the Bam againf him: Which Courfe of ours, (ceing it was never intended to be professed to the prejudice of the Electronal College, or againft our own Capitulation, we hope that the Electors will not take it otherwise; being that we promise withal so to moderate it, that no Detriment or Prejudice shall result thereby unto the Dignity Electroal.

As for the Translation of the Electroate, and your Advice for Reserving of the Palatinate, there is I precieve some disference in your Opinions. One Part wisely, and in survour of its, assuming the great Reason we have to do it: But for the other Party, which the state to do it: Resign we have to do it: But for the other Party, which advised his Referring, we purpels not for a Confern unto it, as to the reflering of him to the Relational Dignity, feing that in the differing of it ther where, we are refeloved that we full do no more than we have just reason to do; nor will we lefer the filling up of the Electroni College, because the dispatching of it doth so much concern the Common Good. But for the Restitution of the Person of the Palatine, von shall see how much our Atted it. the Palatine, you shall see how much our Mind is inclined towards Clemency, and bow far we will declare our self to gratifie the King of Great Britain, the King of Denmark, the Elector of Saxony, and other Electors and Princes, interceding for him.

And as concerning our forbidding the Exercise of the Lutheran Religion in the City of Prague; we do not fee how it any way concerns this Diet to enquire of, our Letter baving fignified the Caufes that moved us to begin it unto the Elector of Saxony; nor can we think that what we have done there, my of the Neighbour States or Territories need be my of the Neighbur States or Territories need be subjected of, feeing that we have Sworn oftner than cone, in the Word of an Empereur, that we will most Religiously observe the Peace, both of Religion and Civil Government, throughout the Empire. And thus much we could not but advertise this Illustrious Presence of Electors and Princes, and you the Ambossidiors of those that are absent. The Proceeding technical Resolution, That the Emperour restants could not translate the Electorate legally; the Answer. Words of the Capitulation being clearly these:

Words of the Capitulation being clearly thefe:

In all difficult Bussellis, no Process ought to be made, without the Knowledge and Consent of the Elector; and that, without ordinary Process, no Profeription should go out against any one of the States of the Empire, before the Cause were heard. This is the fundamental Law of the Empire, which retake it ill, that he should now see all his Endeavours quired no more but to be constantly observed, take no good effect, but his only Daughter and her nor is to be drawn into surther Dispute, or Austrian Policy.

The

But the Emperor would not be persuaded Refult of from his own Refolution; yet in Conclusion, to gratise the Princes, he was contented to confer the Electorate with a Proviso, that the Investiture of the Duke of Bavaria should not be prejudicial to the Children of the Palatine; and so the Diet ended.

The Duke of Saxony was one of the first that executed the Imperial Ban against the Prince Palatine, affifting the Emperor with a great Army, to level the Power of his fellow Elector when he mounted to be a King, and came fo near him as Prague; but when he was brought rhus low, he would willingly have raifed him up again, and then the Hand that had done him fo much Mischief, was not permitted to do him any Good. But by the Carriage of the Business (though the Emperor gave fair words) it did after appear, the zinfrian Policy aimed at the Extirpation of Religion, as well as at the Exclusion of the Palatine and his Children; for he never meant them Title, nor Territory, unless he could settle both upon a Popish Foundation: And to that end there was a private Treaty broached in England, and carried on by fome of our King's Ministers of State; That the young Prince Palatine should be bred up in the Emperor's Court, under pretence of marrying his Daughter, but in effect to be trained up in the Pepiß Religion: And our Prince Charles at the same time must feech his Wife in Spain; where they hoped the Influence of that Air, their visible Piety, and their invisible Plots, would sweetly infinuate their Popish Principles into him. So imploufly cunning they are to make others as miferable as themselves. The ending of the Diet in Germany, and our Prince's Prince's Journey into Spain, were much about a Journey time. He went with the Marquels of Buckingham into Spain. privately from Court the 17th of February to New-Hall in Effex, the Marquess's House, (purchased of that unthrist, Robert Earl of Suffex) and from thence the next day by Gravefend, the ftraight way to Dover, attended only by Sir Ri-chard Graham, Master of the Marques's Horse; where they were to meet Sir Francis Cottington, who was thought fit to be the Prince's Secretary, and Endimion Porter, who was then taken from the Marquess's Bed-Chamber to wait upon the Prince. Cottington was, at first, Clerk to Sir Charles Cornuallie's Secretary, when Cornuallie's Secretary, when Cornuallie was Ambassador in Spain; and being left there an Agent, in the Intervals of Ambassadors; was by that means trained up in the Spanish Affairs: Porter was bred up in Spain when he was a Boy, and had the Language, but found no other Fortune there, then brought him over to be Mr. Edward Viller's Man in Fleetstreet, tended to vilifie the Persons, being Men (in Areg. 20 this World's Lottery) as capable of Advancement as others; but to she's in how poor a feet of the feet f Bark the King ventured the rich Freight his Son, having only the Marquess to steer his Courfe.

The Prince and Euckingham had falso Beards By Dover. for Disguises to cover their smooth Faces, and the Names of fack Smith and Tom Smith, which theypass'd with, leaving behind them Impressions in every Place (with their Bounty and Presence) that they were not the Persons they presented; but they were not so rudely dealt with as to be questioned till they came to Dover, and there the Mayor in a Supercilious Officiousness (which may deferve the Title of a careful Magistrate) examined them so far, (being jealous they were Gentlemen going over to Fight) that the Marques (though ing over to Fight) that the Marquels (though Admiral) was glad to veil his Beard to him in private, and tell him he was going to vifit the Fleet; fo they had liberty to take Ship, and landed at Bulleign the fame day, making flwift Motion by Poft Horfes (which Celerity leaves the leaft Impression) till they came to Paris; paris, There the Prince spent one day to view the City and Court, shadowing himself the most he could near a buffey Perrike, which pose is he could under a bushy Peruke, which none in former times but Bald People used, but now generally intruded into a Fashion; and the Prince's was so big, that it was Hair enough The Marquess's fair Face for his whole Face. was shadowed with the same Pencil, and they both together faw the Queen-Mother at Dinner, the King in the Gallery after Dinner, and to-wards the evening they had a full view of the Queen Infanta, and the Princess Hemietta Maria, with most of the Beauties of the Court, at the Practice of a Masking Dance, being admitted by the Duke of Montbason, the Queen's Lord Chamberlain, in Humanity to Strangers, when many of the French were put by. * There the Prince faw those Eyes that after inflamed his Heart, which increased so much, that it was thought to be the Cause of setting Three Kingdoms a-fire: But whether any spark of it did then appear, is uncertain; if it did, it was closely raked up, till the Spanish Fire went out ; the Heat whereof made him neglect no time till he came to Madrid.

At Boardeaux, the Duke d'Espernon, Governor Boardeaux, there, out of a noble freedom to Strangers, offered them the Civilities of his House, which they declined with all bashful Respects; and Sir Francis Cottington, who always looked like a Merchant, and had the least Mien of a Gentleman, (fitteft for fuch an Imployment) let him know, they were Gentlemen that defired to improve themselves, and had not Breeding fuitable to his Grandure; which took off the edge of his Invitation, whose subtle Eye by Converse might have pried through those sections Out-sides, to discover more than did appear.

They passed with some Difficulties also at Boyontle.

Count de Gramont was Go. to be Mr. Edward Viller's Man in Fleetfreet, Bayone, where the Count de Gramont was Gowhich was before either the Marques or his vernor, (being the utmost part of France, and Mastler were acceptable at Whiteball. [&]quot; In one of the Original Letters of the Prince and Buckingham to the King, in the Collection abovementioned, the Prince tells him he had been at this Ball, and fays, Of all that Court there was some to be compared for Bennix to the young Queen, which made him more earuff to fee her filler, bit lang addred Miffred. So that these not appear (at leaft by that Letter) he had any particular regard to the Princess Hunrietta Maria at that time, as the Author supposes.

AReg. 20 Mafter, Jealousie the Pragmatical Usher hath little to do; therefore out of common Civility And within a small time after they had taken Post, (before they had well passed the Bounds of France) he had Notice by a Courier (that brought Advice thereof to the King of Spain) from Don Carlot de Coloma, Extraordinary Ambaffador in England (Gondemar, for his good Service, being fent for home, and advanced) that the Prince of England was among them. * This Hazard the Prince ran, upon Post-Horses, that if he had been discovered, it would not only have questioned his Judgment in the managing of fo great an Affair, but he must have remained at the Fench Mercy, which would have given an Eclipse to the Glory he shined in, in the Court of Spain; for they looked upon this spritely Journey as a high Remark of a Gallant and Noble Spirit: And happily some Spanish Fancy may now be framing, how many Giant Difficulties he conquer'd in the way, and what Inchantments he passed among the Beauties of France; for such Romances are frequent among those barren Rosemary Mountains, the Fume whereof is pleasant and helpful to the Brain.

At Madrid

Upon Saturday the 6th of March, they arrived at Madrid. The Prince and Marquess came thither one Day before Cattington and the others, to make the lefs Noise in Appearances. They lighted at the Earl of Briffol's House in the Evening, and the Marquess brought in the Port-montua; but his Master stay'd without with the Guide, till he had prepar'd a Way for Privacy. The Earl of Briftel was aftonish'd at the Sight; but after he had collected himfelf, his Diligence attended his Duty, and the Prince wanted nothing but Counsel how to order himself, which they took time (till the next Day towards the Evening) to deliberate on. All that Morning the Town was filled with Rumours of the Arrival of fome great Prince; and tho the King of Spiin had Intimation by his Letters, yet he kept all private till the Prince express d himself, which was done that Evening : For Buckingham and Briftol went to the Court, and had private Audience of the King, who fent his Grand Fa-vourite Olivares back with them to congratulate the Prince's coming, who let the Prince know, how happy the King his Master was in the En-joyment of him there, and what Addition of Grandure his Presence would contribute to the Court of Spain; and that the Obligation was fo thrown into his Arms. All this while kneeling, kiffing his Hands, and embracing his Thigh! the huge and swelling Expressions of Spanish Humility. And from him he went to the Marquess of Buckingham, telling him, That now the Prince of England was in Spain, his Mafter and he would divide the World betwixt them, with other Rodomontado Fancies. And after he was gone, about Ten of the Clock that Night, the King of Spain came in a close Coach to visit the Prince, who having Intimation of his coming, (fuch fecret Hints among Princes being fuitable Invitements) he met him in the Way, and there they spent some time in those sweet, Gondemar, in Confort, was not without his Strain A. Rog. 20. of Compliment: For he told the Prince upon a Visit next Day, That he had strange News to tell him; which was, That an Englishman was Sworn a Privy-Councellor to the King of Spain; meaning himfelf, who he faid was an Englishman in his Heart, and had lately receiv'd that Honour.

The next Day the King and Prince had some Rides in Interviews in their Coaches passing to the Para State to da to take the Air, where also he had a Glimpse the Court of his fair Mistres; but the Formality of the Prince's Entertainment was deferred till his Lodgings were made ready in the Court, which was the Sunday following, being that Day invited to Dinner to St. Hierome's Monastery, where the King commanded divers of his Great Officers to attend upon the Prince, which they did bare Headed, and they fay it was according to the old Cuftom of Cafile; but King Philip when he was in England found that Relpect, and re-tain'd it ever after in Spain. The Prince would have prevented their Ceremony to him; but they are stubborn, and pertinacious in their very Humility. After Dinner the King came in Perfon, with his Favourite Olivares, and divers others of the Nobility, in Coaches, with Intention on Horfeback (for the more State) to conduct the Prince through the Town to the Court, having Horfes and all Accoutrements fit for fuch a Royal Train. And thus mounted they rode in great Glory through the Streets, (being adorned with rich Tapiftry and rare Pictures) as their Kings do to their Coronation. The Spanish Civility plac'd the Prince on the Right Hand of the King, under a rich Cloth of State, supported by many Persons of Quality; Olivares and Buckingbam went next the Canopy, and after them the rest of their Grandees in their several Degrees, most Glorious every where to behold, the choice Beauties of the Town and Court prefenting themselves to see, and to be seen. At the Court-Gate they difmounted, and then a new friendly Strife began who should enter first; and because that should breed no Disference, they went both together. The Queen and the befainta, from a Window in the Court, saw them forme riding in Triumphant Equipage; and when they alighted, the Infanta retired, and the Queen went to her Chamber, expeding a Vifit; and when the King and Prince entred her Chamber, she rose to meet them, making an Obeisance to the Prince suitable to her Greatgreat, that he deserved to have the Infinita ness and his; and he bowing to the Ground almost in Obedience to her, were both as great Patterns of Civility and Courtefy to the rest of their Train. And after some Compliments, they sate down in Three Royal Seats prepared for them, the Queen in the Middle, the Prince on her Right Hand, and the King on her Left. And in this Stately Posture they discours'd away some half an Hour's time, and then they parted. The Queen brought the Prince to the utmost extent of her Chamber, and the King to a Chamber prepar'd for him, (with many Rooms of State, fumptuoufly adorned) where he left him to his own Attendance, and some great Spa-nish Condes, as Principal Officers of his Houyet formal, Careftes and Embraces, that are Incidents to the Interviews of great Princes, the Two Days after the Prince was invited to run their Hearts and Tongues do feldom accord, at the Ring, where his fair Miftres was a shold, Gondemar ever being one about him.

^{*.} That the King was in great Perplexity lest the Prince might be discovered and arrested in France, appears by a Letter in the forefaid Collection, fent by Greffy the next Day after he left Door; in which he encloies one to the Fand King, which he defires the Prince to deliver in safe he be discovered. But if otherways, the defires him, whenever he arrives in the Spanish Territories; to write toak to that King a Letter of Excuse, for not waiting on him in his Pallage. shro' his Country, Specta-

So feafonable are these little empty Joys, when they are fuitable to our Minds and Wishes.

All that the Spanish Court could do, was al Enter- heighten'd into Gallantry and Civilities to the Prince; yer he faw not his fair Miftrefs but at an undifferning Diffance, and in transfirm, as the came from Church. But after all these Splendid and Glorious outfide Ceremonies of Entertainment were grown a little old, the Prince began to mind the Business he came about, and defired a more intimate Access to his beloved Infanta, which Olivares promised from Day to Day to accomplish, but still delay'd; and at length, when unperform'd Promifes were heighten'd into thame, he plainly confess'd, That it was agreed by the King and his Council, that he might not see her as a Lover till the Dispensation came, for it would give Scandal to admit him before; yet not to flarve 1-im quite in his Defires, (but to keep him fhort, that he should not surfeit) he had now and then Accefs to her as a Prince, in a publick way, the King of Spain being always prefent, and the Larl of Briftol Interpreter; lo that nothing could be fpoken but those little superficial Compliments, that ferved as Baits rather to nibble on, than fatisfy. But thefe finall Repafts kept up the Appetite.

And now the Glories of the English Court The Butter Alba How the Chorles of the English Court Lish Nobi- left the Northern Sun declining to the Weft, liky flock and came to fee the Sun rising in Spain. The into Spain Marquels of Bucking 5.2m's new Title of Duke came to him also, (that he might be in the highest Rank among the Spanish Grandees) to beard the proudest or them; which afterwards he did. And the Viscount Doncaster (lately made Earl of Carlile) came in all his Glories; of which Two, it was observed by knowing Men, That Buckingham came into Spain of the Spanish Faction, and returned into England of the French Faction: Carlile came into Spain of the French Faction, and returned into England of the Spanish: Thus varying the Scene by Fits, and acting their Parts as the present Fancy moved The Lord Kenfington, Captain of the Guard to our King, came alfo to fee the Prince; fo did the Earl of Denbigh, Edward, Son and Heir to the now Earl of Manchefter; the Vifcount Mandevill, the Vifcount Roclford, and divers o-thers of the Nobility: And the Prince was fo circled with a fplendid Retinue of his own People, that it might be faid, There was an English Court in the King of Spain's Palace.

Prince.

The Spa. But, together with these specious Entertain-nish strive ments, there were underworking Hopes to have the Prince turn Papist; for (in intervenient Discourses) Olivares and others would press him (with all the Arguments the Court had inftructed them in) to a Conversion; intimating, how sinooth a Path it would make to the Infanta's Affections; for when he, that was to be Lord of her Heart, and the best Friend she had, would be an Enemy to her Religion, it could not but be a great Obstacle to her Love. And when the Danger of it was proposed to them, as likely to bring a Rebellion in the Nation, if their Prince should be perverted; they promised to affift him with an Army against such Rebellious People. But if he would not admit of a prefent and fudden Alteration publickly, yet that he would be fo indulgent, when the Infanta came into England, as to liften to her in Matters of Religion; which the Prince promifed to do:

Articled against him afterwards by Buckingham) did ftrive with a gentle Hand to allure him that to Chris way, as bringing with it an Addition to the Grandure of the Kings of England, That none of them could ever do great Things that were not of that Religion.

Thus was the Prince befet, and Time ran away in Discourses; the Dispensation being purpofely delay'd; for some at that time in the Spanish Court faid it was come, and fent back again to Rome, (being too forward and active) that it might have more Weight put upon it, and then it would not make fo much haft; for now it came too foon to difpatch their Work: For they Subtily confider'd, that Time and continual Dropping might leave those Impressions upon the Prince's Spirit, that Dispatches cannot effect. Therefore they made new Queries, and clapp'd new Remora's upon the Articles, that being tangled in Disputations betwixt England and Spain, and in Controversies of Religion betwist the Prince and fome of their cunning Sophisters, (which they fet a-work) that before the Way could be well cleared on both sides, their Defign (which was the Prince's Pervertion) might mature and ripen. For the Earl of Bil-fol confessed afterwards, That it was a general received Opinion in the Spanish Court, that the Prince came thicher with Intention to be a Roman Catholick: And Gondonar preffed Briftol not to hinder fo pious a Work, affuring him, they had the Duke of Buckingham's Affiftance therein.

And it was evident enough their Hopes were So doth great, by the Pope's Letter to the Bishop of the Pope. Conchen, Inquisitor-General in Spain; wherein tements, inquintor-teneral in spain; wherein he excites him not to flip the Opportunity Providence had put into his Hand, of extending his Piety to the outermost Nations. The Prince of England being now in the Court of Spain, that glorious Temple (as it were) that hand a Published to the Positional Published hath been a Bulwark to the Pontifical Authority, and an Academy for Propagation of Religion, he defires he may not flay there in vain; but that some of the Impressions of the Piety of fo many Catholick Kings as have lived there may be imprinted on him, that he may be won with all Sweetness, as many of his Noble An-cestors have been, who have submitted their Crown'd Heads and Imperial Power to the Roman Obedience. And to this Glorious Victory, and Eternal Triumph of Celestial Beatitudes, the Treasures of Kings, and Legions of Soldiers, cannot contribute; but the Weapons of Light, that must come from Heaven, whose Splendour enlightening the Prince's Eyes, shall dazle his Errors, and establish his Mind in Meekness. And he charges the Bishop and all his Fraternity to use the best Strength and Industry they can to this purpose. So that the Prince was continually laid at, by the infinuating Orations of cunning Jesuits; the feigned and couzening Miracles of reclused Holiness; the fplendid and specious Solemnities of their formal Processions; the rare and admirable Pictures of their reputed Saints; besides many other painted Devices and subtle Artifices brooded among them.

And the Pope used all the Rhetorick of his him to his Obedience, as may be feen by this Letter, which he writ to him himfelf.

MOst Noble Prince, Health and Light of By into Divine Grace. Forasmuch as Great Bris Letter. tain bath always been fruitful in Virtues, and

And indeed the Church ration of her brailes. And indeed the King was but then in her Infancy, when the King of Kings did choose her for his Inheritance, and so affectionately, that it is thought the Roman Eagles prevailed not so much as the Banner of the Cross. Besides, that many of her Kings, instructed in the Knowledge of the true Salvation, have preferred the Cross before the Royal Scepter, and the Discipline of Religion before Covetoufness, leaving Examples of Piety to other Nations, and to the Ages yet to come; fo as having merited the principal and chief Places of Bleffednes in Heaven, they have obtained on Earth the Triumphant Ornaments of true Holines. And altho' now the State of the English Church be alter'd, yet we fee the Court of Great Bri-tain adorn d and furnish d with Moral Virtues, which might ferve to support the Charity that we bear unto her, and be an Ornament to the Name of Christianity; if withal she could have for her Defence and Protection the Orthodox and Catholick Truth. Wherefore, by how much the Glory of your most Noble I'ather, and the Apprehension of your Royal Disposition, delights us, with so much more Zeal we defire that the Gates of the Heavenly Kingdom might be open'd unto you, and that you might purchase to your self the Love of the Universal Church. Moreover, it being certain that Gregory the Great, of most blessed Memory, hath introduced to the English People, and taught their Kings the Law of the Gospel, and the Respect to Apostolical Authority; we as inferior to him in Holinefs and Virtue, but equal in Name and Degree of Dignity, it is very reafonable that we, follow-ing his bleffed Steps, should endeavour the Salvation of those Provinces, especially at this time, when your happy Defign (most Noble 'Prince) elevates us to the Hope of an extraordinary Advantage. And as you have taken a Journey into Spain to the Catholick King, with Defire to Ally your felf to the House of "Auftria; fo we do commend your Defign, and indeed do teftify openly in this prefent Business, That you are he that takes principal Care of our Prelacy. For feeing that you defire to take in Marriage the Daughter of Spain, we may eafily from thence conjecture, that the ancient Seeds of Christian Piety, which have so happily flourish'd in the Hearts of the Kings of Great Britain, may (God profpering them) revive again in your Soul. And indeed it is not to be believed, that he that loves fuch an Alliance, should hate the Catholick Religion, and delight to oppress the Holy Chair. To that purpose we have commanded to make continually most humble Prayers to the Father of Lights, That he would be pleafed to put you as a fair Flower of Christendom, and the only Hope of Great Britain, in Pof-fession of that most Noble Heritage that your Ancestors have purchased for you, to defend the Authority of the Sovereign High Prieft, and to fight against the Monsters of Herefy. Remember the Days of old, enquire of your Fathers, and they will tell you the Way that leads to Heaven, and what Way Temporal Princes have taken to gain an Eternal King-dom. Behold the Gates of Heaven opened, the most Holy Kings of England (who came the most Holy Kings of England (who came to dispatch the Dispensation, when he should from England to Rome accompanied with An-find so little Cause for Delays, by his closing so

Behold how they tender you the Hand of this truly happy Inheritance, to conduct you fafe and found to the Court of the Catholick King; and now defire to bring you back again into the Bosom of the Roman Church; beseeching, with unspeakable Sighs and Groans, the God of all Mercy for your Salvation, and do stretch out to you the Arms of the Apostolical Chatity, to embrace you with all Christian Affection; even you, that are her defired Son, in shewing you the happy Hope of the King-dom of Heaven. And indeed you cannot give a greater Confolation to all the People of the Christian World, than to put the Prince of the Apostles in possession of your most Noble Island, whose Authority hath been held so long in the Kingdom of Britain for the Defence of Kingdoms, and for a Divine Oracle; the which will eafily arrive, and without Difficulty, if you open your Heart to the Lord that knocks, upon which depends all the Hap-pinels of that Kingdom. It is from this our great Charity that we cherish the Praises of the Royal Name; and that which makes us defire that you and your Royal Father might be stiled with the Name of Deliverers and Reforers of the Ancient and Paternal Religion of Great Britain. This is it we hope for, trufting in the Goodness of God, in whose Hands are the Hearts of Kings, and who caufeth the People of the Earth to receive Healing; to whom we will always labour with all our Power to render you gracious and favourable. In the interim take notice by these Letters the Care of our Charity, which is none other than to procure your Happiness; and it will never grieve us to have written them, if the reading of them ftir but the least Spark of Catholick Faith in the Heart of fo great a Prince, whom we wish to be filled with long continu-'ance of Joy, and flourishing in the Glory of 'all Virtues. Given at Rome, in the Palace of St. Peter, the 20th of April, 1623. in the Third Year of our Popedom.

This Letter of the Pope's expresses not only The the fleek and fmooth Ways that Soul-Merchant Pope's takes to purchase his Proselytes, but the End he Cunning. proposes to himself; which is, to bring them under the Roman Obedience; otherwise, what-foever they do or profess is Herefy. And to build up the Towers of this great Babel, the Name of the most high God is brought down among them, and used as a Master-Builder. Every Profession lays that Name as a Foundation, the' the Superstructure be but Straw and Stubble of Hypocrify, which a Whirlwind shall fcatter; and the Time is coming that her Lovers shall be destroy'd, and stery-cloven Tongues shall confound their Language. The Prince was not slack in answering this Letter, which happily he might think would quicken the Pope with that Respect which the Piety and Care where-with your Holiness writes doth require. It was an unspeakable. Pleasure to me to read the generous Exploits of the Kings my Predecessors, to mbose Memory Poste-rity bath not given those Praises and Elogies of Honour that were due to them. I do believe that your Holineß hath set their Example before my Eyes, to the end ness hath let their Example before my Eyes, to toe chat that I might imitate them in all my Actions; for in Truth they have often exposed their Estates and Lives for the Exaltation of the Holy Chair: And the Cou-rage with which they have csaulted the Enemies of the Cross of Jesus Christ, hath not been less than the Care and Thought which I have; to the end that the Peace and Intelligence, which hath hitherto been wanting in Christendom, might be bound with a Bond of true Concord: For like as the Common Enemy of Peace watcheth always to put Hatred and Diffention between Christian Princes, fo I believe that the Glory of God requires that we should endeavour to unite them. And I do not esteem it a greater Honour to be descended from so Great Princes, than to imitate them in the Zeal of their Piety: In which it helps me very much to have known the Mind and Will of our Thrice Honoured Lord and Father, and the Holy Intentions of his Catholick Majesty, to give a happy Concurrence to so laudable a Design: For it grieves him extreamly to fee the great Evil that grows from the Division of Christian Princes, which the Wildom of your Holiness forefave, when it judged the Murriage, which you pleafed to defign, between the Infanta of Spain and my felf, to be necessary to procure so great a Good: For Its very certain, that I shall never be so extreamly affe-elionate to any thing in the World, as to endeavour Alliance with a Prince that hath the same Apprebenfion of the true Religion with my felf. Therefore I far from encouraging Novelties, or to be a Partifar of any Esction against the Catholick Apostolick Roman Religion : But on the contrary, I have fought all Occafiors to take away the Sufficien that might rest upon me; and that I will employ my self for the time to come to have but one Religion and one Faith, feeing Madrid, fix Months after the Prince's Arrival

It feems he had either a good Will to write this Letter, or a bad Council to indite it, or both conjoined, that were as careful to please the Pope, as they were hopeful it would never come to see the Light, till the Flame of it would be too visible. For if the Prince intended really (when he had Power) to introduce Popery into England, this Letter in a bloody Colour too apparently would have been discovered; and if his Intentions were formal, and only to close with the Pope for his present Accommodation, How black would every Character of this Letter look to the Roman Rubrick, and what a Tincture of Scandal would it leave upon the true Religion? for Fallwould in the second second to the second lentem may be a fit Motto for a bad Man, not a good Christian; so that whatsoever his Intentions were, the Act was evil: And I could fufpect it is a forged Letter, but that it hath been afferted by fo many Authors both at home and 111 I shall not venture to say any thing for or against the Truth of this Letter to the Pope, it being generally agreed upon, that there was one in Answer to another of the Pope's.

But it's but doing Juftice to the Memory of this Prince to take Notice, that in all that Collection of Original Let-ters I have so often quoted, there is no mention made of any Letters from the Prince to the Pope, not of the Pope to him, though at the same time the most minute Accedents that happened to the Prince at Madrid are there see cown.

It's likewise observable, that in all that Collection, and in all the other Letters I have seen of King Charles, when Prince of Wales, he constantly subscribed Charles P. and never Charles Suares.
It's true, there is in that Collection a Letter of Buckingham's before the Prince went to Spain, wherein, as I said elsewhere, he defires the King's Amendments to one of his to Cardinal Ludovicis, but not a Word of any to the elfewhere, he defires the King's Amendments to one of his to Cardinal Landoviero, our not a work of any to we Pope.

Le's likewife true, that in a Letter in that Collection, dated at Madrid, March 10, 1623, the Prince and Buckingham, after having told the King all the Remora's they net with in their Bufinels, and how difficult it would be to get the Pope's Dipentation; the they add this Expedition, if the Pope will not great the Differential, then we differ to know how far we may engage you in the Advantalegment of the Pope's Spiritual Power: For we along find, if you will be contend to a charm-ledge the Pope Collif Head andor Chrift, that the Match will be made without hims. But what Ansiver King James made to this Letter, does not appear in that Collection. It must also be own'd, That the Truth of the Conceffions mentioned by our Author to have been made by King James to the Court of Rome, in order to facilitate the Spanish Match, were never call'd in queltion by any other Author of Repute. And in a Letter contain'd in the aforefall Collection, King James acquisits the Prince and Buckingham, then as Madrid, with his fending over Two Chaplains, Man and Wren, with Ornaments for the Prince's Chapel, whom he had fully infructed how to dement themselves there; That fo (lays he) their Buberiuse and Sections when the had fully infructed how to dement themselves there; That for (lays he) their Buberiuse and Sections and agreeable to the Prince's Chapel, whom he had fully infructed how to dement themselves there; That for (lays he) their Buberiuse and Sections are sections and sections and sections and sections are sections and sections are sections. the Alrar exclusive.

There must certainly have been Transactions on foot at that time that were not fit to be made publick, nor even to be communicated to the Council. This is clear from another Letter in that Collection of King James's, wherein he defires the Pince and Buckingham to continue to write to him always in one and the fame Letter; sfliring them, He would be every vary not to acquaint his Council with what Secret the Iphald write. But (lays he)? have been troubled with Hamilton (meaning the Mrquels) who him project him project the council with what Secret the Iphald write. AREALI there, with a little Bob at the Tail of it, yet and learnedly written against these wicked Heresies, A. Regar to amuse them; which was, That the King of south now show your self a Patron of those Doctrines, and compile forest Evitain and the Prince should give Caution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitutions to perform what was stipulated between them and the King of Sprin, especially in those Arricles which were in Favour of the Roman Calles which were in Favour of the King of Sprine which was still now should now show your self a Patron of those which and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and your Constitution which your Pen hash told the World, and you ticles which were in Favour of the Roman Catholicks in England, and other his Majesty's Dominions; requiring at least fome Sovereign Catholick Prince should engage for them by Oath. This made some little Demur; for being sent into England, the King answered, That he could give no other Caution but his own and the Prince's Royal Words and Oaths, confirmed by his Council of State, and exemplified under the Great Seal of England: But this would not fatisfy: Therefore the King of Spain undertook it; and it was thought a Spanish Device, That, by undertaking such an Engagement, he might not only the more endear himfelf to the King of Great Britain, and to the Prince his Brother, but have a more colourable Pretext to make War against England, if the Roman Catholicks there had not full Satisfaction and Freedom according to the Articles: And the King of Spain, knowing or affuring himfelf that no Catholick Prince would take fuch an Oath, offered himfelf to fatisfy the Pope. And a Committee of Ecclesiasticks in Sprin were appointed to debate the Case in relation to the King's Conscience. Whether he might take such an Oath for them? and they (being doubtlefs, refolved on it be-fore) concluded affirmatively: And that if the King of Great Britain and Prince should fail in the Performance of these Capitulations, the King of Spain might fave his Oath, by vindicating the Breach thereof upon them with his Sword. And now this Monster-difficulty being overcome by the Spanish Bravery, the very same time, Articles, that our King and Prince had figned, (as are before related) were fent into England for our King and his Privy Council to fwear to; and there was not a Rub left for either Party to stumble at.

But whilft thefe things were in motion in Spain, they were much regretted and badly re-fented in England; the Spirit almost of the whole Nation being averse to this Union, which made many vent their Passion by their Pens, as well as their Tongues. Amongst the rest, the Archbishop of Canterbury, knowing that a Toleration was to be admitted, (though he stood tottering in the King's Favour, and had the Badge of a Puritan clapt upon him) thought it better to discharge his Conscience, though he hazarded all, rather than be filent in fuch a Caufe, where the Glory of God, and the Good of the Kingdom, were so highly concerned. Therefore he writes this Letter to the King.

The Archbifhop's Letter to the King againíl Tolersrion.

May it pleafe Your Majesty, Have been too long filent, and am afraid by my Silence I have neglected the Duty of the Place it hath pleased God to call me unto, and Your Majesty to bath pleafed God to call me unto, and four Masfelfy to place me in. And now I humbly crave Leave I may difebarge my Confeience towards God, and my Duty to Your Mojesty; and therefore I befeech Your Majesty give me Leave freely to diver my felf, and then let Tour Majesty do with me mhat You pleafe. Your Majesty hath propounded a Toleration of Religion: I befield you, Sir, take into your Consideration what the the wear when the Confedence was the Paragraph. Act is, next what the Confequence may be. By your Act You labour to fet up that most Damnable and Hereical Destrine of the Church of Rome, the Whore your Council, the Privity and Approbation of your your Councit, toe Privity and Approvation of your People. And though, Sir, You have a large laterest in the Prince, as the Son of your Flesh, yet both the People a greater, as the Son of the Kingdom, upon whom (next after Your Mayesty) their Eyes are sixed, and Wisfare depends: And so tenderly is his going appropriate to the desired in Sir the Approximation for the Property of the State of th prehended, as, believe it, Sir, however his Return may be safe, yet the Drawers of him to that Action, To dingerous to himself, so desperate to the Kingdom, will not pass away unquestioned and unpunished. Besides, this Toleration which you endeavour to set up by Proclamation, cannot be done without a Parliament. unless your Majesty would let your Subjects see, That You will take unto your felf a Liberty to throw down the Larus of the Land at your Pleasure. What dread-ful Consequence these things may draw after them, I beseech Your Majesty to consider. And, above all, left by this Toleration, and Discontinuouse of the true Profession of the Gospel, whereby God bath blessed us, and under which this Kingdom bath for many Years flourified, Tear Majesty do not draw upon the King-dom in general, and your self in particular, God's beavy Wrath and Indignation. Thus, in Discharge of my Duty towards God, to Your Majesty, and the Place of my Calling, I have taken humble Boldness to deliver my Conscience. And now, Sir, do with me what You please.

(though he had fought with the Beafts at Epbe-ius, as one faith of him) incline a little too much to the Beaft; yet he made his Tale fo good to the Archbishop of Canterbury, (what Refervations foever he had) that he wrought upon the good old Man (afterwards) in the Conclusion of the Work, to fet his Hand as a Witness to the Articles. And his Desires were Arguboil'd him to fuch a Diftemper) that he would againft a liften to nothing, and almost yield to any thing. Tolerarather than not to enjoy his own Humour, tion. Divers of his intimate Council, affecting Popery, were not flack to urge him to a Toleration, and many Arguments were used inciting to it; as, That Catholicks were the King's best and most peaceable Subjects, the Puritans being the only Sticklers and the greatest Distur-bers of the Royal Peace, trenching too boldly bers of the Royal Peace, trenching too bondy upon the Prerogative, and firting to leffen the Kingly Power: But if the King had Occafion to make use of the Catholicks, he should find them more faithful to him than those that are ever contesting with him. And why should not Catholicks with as much Safety be permitted in England, as the Protestants are in France? That their Religion was full of Love and Charity, (where they could enjoy it with Freedom;) and where Charity lays the Foundation, the upper Building must needs be Spiritual. these Arguments were answer'd, and many Reasons alledged against them, proving the Nature of the Protestant Religion to be compatible with the Nature of the Politick Laws of any State, of what Religion foever; because it teacheth, That the Government of any State, whether Monarchical or Aristocratical, is Supream within it felf, and not Subordinate to any Power without; fo that the Knot of Allegiance thereunto is fo firmly tied, that no huof Babylon. How hateful will it be to God, and giance thereunto is fo firmly tied, that no hugrievens unto your good Subjects, the true Profession of mane Power can unloose or distolve it. Where-the Coffes, that your Majesty, who hath often distincted as, on the contrary, the Roman Religion, acknowledging tie them to the Subordinate and Dependent Authority; and therefore can ill Accord with the Allegiance which Subjects owe to a Prince of their own Religion, which makes Papifts intolegable in a Protestant Common-wealth. For what Faith can a Prince or People expect from them, whose Tenet is, That no Exit is to be beld with Hercicks? That the Protestants in France had merited better there than the Papifts had done in England; the one, by their I oyal-ties to their Lawful King, having ranfomed that Kingdom with their Bloods, in the Pangs of her desperate Agonies, from the Yoak of an Usurper within, and the Tyranny of a Foreign Scepter without; the other feeking to write their Disloyalties in the Heart-blood of the Princes and best Subjects of this Kingdom. That the Number and Quality of the Profesfors of these different Religions in either Kingdom is to be observed: For in France the Number of the Protestants were so great, that a Toleration did not make them, but found them, a confiderable Party, fo flrong, as they could not have been suppressed without endangering the Kingdom: But a Toleration in England would not find, but form, the Papifts to be a confiderable Party, (witness their Encrease by this late Connivency;) a thing which ought mainly to be avoided: For the Distraction of a State into feveral powerful Parties is always weakening, and often proveth the utter Ruin thereof.

There was fome little Contest betwixt our King and the King of Spain's Ambaffadors, about fome particular Ceremonies observed in swearing of these Articles; for our King having written and fpoken against the Pope's Holiness, would not admit him to be so stilled in his Oath: But the Ambassadors resuled to proceed further, unless that Title were confented unto; fo that our King, (affecting ever to be accounted a Peace-maker) though he were Defender of the Faith, was forced to lay by his Sheild, (admitting him to be holy who was most un-holy;) and so the Strife ended. Some other little things were flood upon by the Ambassadors; but the King's Patience furmounted all their Demands. And in the Clofe of the Businefs, he invited the Ambaffors to a Royal Feaft at Whiteball; where, after Dinner, retiring into the Council-Chamber, the King took another Private

This Forwardness of the Union with Spain, and Indulgence to Papifts, made Jesuites and Priests swarm in every Corner, setting up their fubtile Traps to catch wavering Spirits: And they could not hear of a Man of Estate that was fick, (for Persons of Quality were only aimed at) but they would tamper with his weak Conscience, and perswade him to the Charity of their Religion, whereby his Soul (that was tainted with Earthly Corruptions, and must needs be purged by Fire before it can come to God) should escape the Pains of Purgatory; or if it went thither, their Prayers could redeem them thence; with fuch Stuff as this deceiving many poor Sours. But the Jesuites not being able to prove, that any of these things were in practice in the Primitive Times of Christianity, (but that they were fobb'd in by feveral Popes and Councils, in latter Times, to ferve their own Turns) waved the Argument, and infifted upon other Particulars, not material to the Point; ftriving to confound one thing with another, (as their manner is) that they might complicate, and wrap up in Obscurity, all that was spoken: Which Mr. Buggs perceiving, rested fully satisfied and confirmed in the Truth.

Ent thus the Jefuites ranged up and down feek- A greating whom they might devour; and their Info-Judg-ment, or lency being greater, and more notorious at this an unfor-time than at others, the Mischief that fell to tunate them in this Height of their Pride and Great-Mushap. nefs, is very remarkable: For at a Sermon in Black-Friars, where Father Drurie, a Jefuire, venred his pestilent Doctrine to an Auditory of near Three hundred People, the Floor of the Chamber (being an upper Room) fell down, and killed the Preacher, and almost (if not) a full Hundred of his Auditory outright, maining and bruiting most of the rest; many of them lying a long time under the Rubbish, crying for Help, and with much Difficulty recovered their broken Limbs. Thus many times we might immediately fee the Hand of God, (who is the Lord of Life and Death) though through wilful Stupidity (becaufe we must judge modestly) we look upon these Accidents by mediate and second Causes; thinking an old House can destroy so many Lives, without the Permission of that supream Authority that orders all things both in Heaven and in Earth. Arm to manage his Horse, which he could do with a great deal of Dexterity) what by his own Interest and Power, and the Assistance of his Friends, (being but a younger Brother, and having nothing but the Bishoprick of Haverstat for his Portion) he raifed a great Army in the lower Parts of Germany, about Erunswick and Mun-fler, confisting of about Sixteen thousand Foot, and Five thousand Horse, every way compleatly armed, and accomplished with a gallant Train of Artillery; the Horses, Wagons, and Carriages, in fuch trim and fuitable Equipage, as shewed, by their Suitableness in Furniture, they had not been patched up, nor haffily hurried together. His Defign (being invited thereto) was to join with the Prince of Orange, to be revenged of the Spaniard for the Loss of his Arm the last Year: But the chief Motive (as he always pretended) was his Respects to the Queen of Bohemia, who in those Days (whether out of Pity for her fuffering fo much, or out of Fear that Religion would yet fuffer much more) car-To which Argument, nothing being answer'd, ried a great Stream of Affection towards her.

1613. Stirum, General of the Horse; Count Henburg, His Chief General of the Ordnance; and Kniphuisen, SerOfficers. geant-Major-General; Men acquainted with War, and Danger. But whether the Divine Fate had laid a mouldring Hand upon this gallant Army, or whether the Enemy with a full Hand had charmed some of these great Officers (as had charmed some of these great Officers (as by the Carriage of the Business may be suspected) to be of his Party, was not discovered; but the Ruine of it was as strange for the Manner, as unknown for the Means: For after Brunfwick had taken a Resolution at Kettington in Brimfwickl.md, to join with the Prince of Orange, he declined all Occasions of encountring with Tillie the Imperial General, who was with an Army at a good distance, attending Brunswick's Motion, not knowing (as may be conjectured) whether he would bend his Course into the Palatinate, or into the Leve-Countries; fo that upon Brunswick's March he lest him in his Rear. And lest Tillie should follow him too close, and interrupt him in his March, he divided his Army in-to Three Brigades: The Van-guard was commanded by Duke William, in which was Three Regiments; his own, Colonel Mayer's, and Colonel Frenck's. Kniphuisen, the Sergeant-Major-General, had the ordering of the Batail; the Colonels under him were Guertsken, and Spar. And the Count de la Tour brought up the Rear, with Duke Bernard of Wimar's Regiment, the Rbinegrafs, and Colonel Spees; with Direction, that these Three Bodies should keep equal Distance, and observe this Order: That having in their March the Enemy at Their That having in their March the Enemy at Order in their Backs, if the Rear-guard made a Halt, the Batail should do the same, and consequently the Van-guard, (according to the best Discipline) attending with firm Foot the Caufe of the Halt, that they may be ready to put themselves in order for Service, if Occasion were presented. The Army thus coming to pass any Passage, while the Van-guard did advance, the Batail and Rear-guard should make a stand, with the Front towards the Enemy. The Van-guard being pass'd, should face the Passage, and stay for the Batail; which being pass'd also, should do the same for the Rear-guard, that they might be ready upon the approach of an Enemy to affift one another. With this Order and Direction they began to march into Westfalia; Brunswick trutting to Stirum, Kniphuifen, and Frenck; who being Natives of the Country, gave him Affurance of the Safe-Conduct of his Army by Ways short and commodious. And he commanded, especially the General of the Horse. to fend out Parties of Horse every way, that he might have Intelligence of the Enemy's Motions; who gave him Affurance, that the Enemy's Army was not within Thirty English Miles; when by other hands, at the fame time, he had certain notice, that the Enemy was within Three English Miles with his whole Power. This Miscarriage made Brun wick haft away to Newburgh, the next Town; where refting a little, he took a Refolution to march all Night, to recover Time and Ground again, that Stirm's Negligence had made him lazily lose: And to that end he commanded Kniphuisen, and Count Isenburg, to make the Baggage march at Eleven a Clock at Night, the Cannon at Midnight, and the Army two Hours after: But Brunfwick getting up at Three a Clock in the Morning, hoping to find his Commands obeyed, and the Army in a good Forwardness of advance, found there were in that way Seven Passages or Straits, the Ho where a few Men might oppose an Army. The Bagage, Cannon, and Munition, (except Six Pieces with Munition that marched with the Rear-guard) had pass'd them all; and the Foot, Three of them, without disturbance: But Count Stirum with the Horse loitered still behind at Newburgh, which caused Brunswick to make the whole Army face about and ftay for the Hotse; fending a firset Command to Stirum, with all Speed to come up and join with the Foot, and not to skirmish with the Enemy at any rate. But he stayed so long, that the Enemy began to charge him in the Rear, before he advanced to the Third Passage; so that he sent to Brunswick for Five hundred Musketeers, to amuse the Enemy, till he had paffed the Third Paffage with his Horse. The Duke sent these Musketeers according to Stirum's Defire; and advancing his Army forward, he pailed the Fourth Paffage, and there made the Rear of his Foot face about, the better to favour and receive his Horse: Which having done, he speeds back towards Stirum, to fee how the Business went with him; and encountring Kniphuisen, he asked him what the Enemy had done? who answered, Nothing; all the contrary; for the Enemy had made a great Slaughter, laying almost a Thousand Horse upon the Ground.

This perplexed Brunfwick exceedingly, so that with some Passion he sent a Command to Stirum to advance his Horse towards the Body of the Army, who had flayed Three Hours for them at the Fourth Passage, whither the Duke returned to secure the same; planting Two Pieces of Demi-cannon at the Mouth of the Pasfage, and leaving Two thousand Musketeers to guard it, for the affiftance of the Horse, if the Enemy should come to charge them at the Entrance; and so he marched forward with the reft of the Army. But Stirum drew the Horfe into a Body under the fide of a Wood, which was in the middle of a spacious Plain, betwixt the Two Passages; and that brought the Enemy to a stand: For they suspected the whole Army flood in Battalia behind that Wood, and therefore did not advance; which shewed they watched only for Advantages. And Stirum feeing the Enemy at a stand, drew his Horse towards the Fourth Paffage; which the Enemy observing, made all the haft after that could be, to pelt them in the Rear: But the Horse passed the Fourth Passage before the Enemy came up.
Then Brunswick drew off his Cannon, and So doth marched away to the Fifth Paffage, leaving the Ser-Kniphuisen (who undertook it voluntarily) with geant-Two thousand Musketeers, to make good that Major-Passage which was of that Advances that General Paffage, which was of that Advantage, that half the Men might have done it; and Two Re-giments of Horfe were left to give affiltance to the Foot, to bring them off when they should retire, and join with the Army. But the Vanguard of Brunfwick's Army had scarce entred the Fifth Passage, but he discovered some Musketeers running towards a Wood that was on this fide, and not far from the Fourth Paffage; and Vol 11 Fiffff riding

Care, trust me. But presently discovering some of the Officers that had command of the Musketeers running towards the Army, he took a more lively Apprehension that the Passage was lost; and meeting Kniphuisen, with some Heat told him, He had betray'd him: But Kniphuifo. excused himself, that he could not keep it againft an Army, and complaind, that the Horfe had abandon'd him. But, faid he, the next Paffage is of as great Importance as the laft. and I will undertake to keep that, upon Forfeiture of my Head, to redeem my Credit again; and to that end he defired an entire Regiment of Foot, which the Duke granted him; but affur'd him, he should answer it if any Ill succeeded by his Default.

Whilft the Army was paffing the Fifth Paffage, the Duke fent to know, whether the Horse placed according to his Direction in the Rear made good their Station; and he had Intimation, that the Horse were retired close to a Wood, and by that means discovered the Foot to the Enemy. And the Army was no fooner passed the Tifth Passage, but Kniphuisen quitted it to the Enemy, without fo much as a Musket thot from them. And the more, to weaken his Force, (before he quitted the Paffage) he comes to the Duke, and tells him, (but it was not true) That the Enemy with 30 Cornets of Horfe flruck towards the Left Hand, to cut a way to the Bagage, to policis that; And Emispirick looking about, perceived in a little Wood not far off a Body of Horle, which proved to be the Prince of Oddenbrigh, who was Colonel of a Regiment of 1000 Horfe, whom he fent to refift the Enemy, if they flould attempt upon the Bagage. And advancing his Army to the Sixth Paffage, he paffed that also before the Enemy came to it: But here was Brunswick's Error in trusting Kniphuisen the third time, which was only, as he faid, to redeem his former Faults; for he gave the keeping of this Sixth Paffage to him allo, which he delivered to the Enemy at their first Approach, as he did the others; and drawing the Rear-guard out of the way on the Right Hand, (contrary to Brunfwick's Commands) and the General of the Ordnance striking out on the Left Hand with his Body and Cannon, and Stirum sheltering himself in the Woods with his Horfe, the Enemy advanced freely, (feeing them thus fcattered) and charged on all fides with his whole Power. But little Resistance being made, (the General Officers leaving the Field) every one shifted for himfelf: Some escaped over Statloo Bridge, mamy de- and Ruine was great, fo was the Confusion and Fear. Sir Charles Rich being with Brunfwick in this disorderly Business, escaped a great Danger, for in their flight his Horse tell into a Bog, where Brunfwick and the rest left him flicking; but being a fpritely Horse, (that his Brother the Earl of Warmick had given him) with much Labour he plunged himself out, and faved both himself and his Rider.

And fome Years after, Kniphuisin was thought fit in the Duke of Buckingham's Voyage to the Ille of Ree to be a Field-Officer in the English Army, which almost (if not altogether) thrivid as ill: So uncertain is the true State of intricate Tranfactions! for that which is obvious and visible, may be believ'd an Error; but feeret Mischiess are left to his Discovery, who only knows the Heart.

France about this time had her Wounds bound The Conup, and flanch'd the Bloody Issue, by the Pacifi-dition of cation of Mentpelier; but it broke out again at France. Rochel, where forme English Ships did the King of France Service, pressed thereto by the Duke of Guise, Admiral of France; and tho' it carried a bad Savour then, that they should fight against the Protestants, being forced thereto, yet it was not so enormous and dangerous to them, as when the Duke of Buckingham afterwards did force the Vanguard, a prime Ship of our King's, and Six other gallant Ships, out of the English Hands, and put them into French Fingering, that they might do the Mifchief with them: that they might do the Milling with them; which Act was laid upon the Duke's Account, among other heinous Crimes by him committed; and he had dearly pay'd for it, if the Prince, his Fellow-Traveller, (in the First Year of whose Reign it was done) had not acquitted him.

But in their intimate and fecret Counfels in France it was debated, Whether it were not better to pull fuch a Goad of Hereticks (as they call'd the Protestants) out of the Side of the Kingdom, that fluck there, to their centinual Vexation and Trouble, rather than have their Pain perpetually renew'd, being impossible to heal the Sore but by fuch an Extirpation: So much Rancour and inveterate Malice sprung up in the Popish Party against them of the Religion, that the Animosity of it extended to little less than another Massacre. And tho' our King (who may be faid to love them) gave them no Countenance, (whatfoever his Promifes were) otherwife than by intreating for them, (being a tickle and tender Point (as he thought) to partake with Subjects against their Prince) yet God fent them Deliverance (fuch are the Dispensations of his Providence) by one that hated their Religion, as much, if not more, than the Feench.

For the King of Spain (doubling his Ambition) poilefs'd himfelf about this time of fome Parts of the Valtolin, thinking to bound France towards Italy, (the Alpes being not so high as his Thoughts) as the Pyrenes had bounded it towards Spain: And the French Activity being loth to be cooped up, thought it better to endure a little Inconvenience at home, than fo much Prejudice abroad; and therefore, to oppose him, they closed with the Protestants. And what was it brought them in Obedience? The re-edifying of their ruin'd Temples, the reftoring and main-taining their banish'd Ministers, and Security in their Religion and Confeiences: So that it was not their Rebellion that was Caufe of the War, but the War made against their Religion caused it to be call'd a Rebellion. Thus, when all it to be call'd a Rebellion. Thus, when all other Means failed, their worst Enemies (tho much against their Wills) proved to be their

while in Agitation. As foon as the Articles our An Christi King had sealed and sworn to observe were come into Spain, and the Prince had ratified and confirmed them, and had Iworn to another Article there, wherein he ties up his own Hands, and gave leave to Satan and all his Accomplices to buffet him, (which was, To permit at all times that any should freely propose to him the Arguments of the Catholick Religion, without giving any Impediment; and that he would never directly nor indirectly permit any to fpeak to the Infinita against the same) the Two Kingdoms of England and Spain (as it were) shook Hands to the Agreement. Preparations were made in England to entertain the Infanta, a new Church built up at St. James's, the Prince's House; the Foundation-stone (with much Ceremony) laid by Don Carlos a Colonna, the Spa-nish Ambassador, for the publick Exercise of her Religion: Her very Shadows are courted in every Corner; Painters being fet a-work to take the Height and Dimensions of this new Star, that was to rife in the North, before it appear'd. Such as hoped to flourish by her Influence, grew up to Exuberancy: What would they do then when they found the Effects of it? Why, be drowned in their own Redundancy: For the moderate Spirit did foresee what bad Omens this Apparition did threaten. On the other fide, in Spain the Substance is as much courted, as the Shadow is here, with the Title of Princess of England; her Maiden Restraints are taken off, and she may come abroad to publick Meetings, where now their Eyes may prattle loving Stories; tho' the great Courtier Olivares gave it no better Title than, The Prince watches the Infanta as a Cat doth a Mouse; too gross an Expression for a Master of those Ceremonies. And, in fine, there was fuch an Union betwixt the Two Crowns, that it might well be faid, Philip and Jacob made one Holiday. But this cloting betwixt England and Spain,

The Pala- made the Breach the wider in the House of the the Bedievet of the Refliction of the Palatinate and the Elediorate to the Queen of Bohemia and her Children being waved in the Treaty, and a great Sum of Money proposed as a Dowry, which was also lessen defend after the first Proposition, and some part of it promised to be sent with her in Jewels, (which as one faid might be Counterfeit as the rest of their Actions) yet our King accepted of all; fo eager was he, and greedy of the Match, that no Obstacle could stand in his way which he did not remove. But there was fome under-hand Promife, That the Infanta, among the Court-Compliments, should work that Feat, in presenting the Restorative of that Dignity and Country for a Breakfast, to ingratiate her felf with the Prince her Husband, and as a Pawn of her good Will and Affection to the English Nation: And these Promises, with the Spanish Stamp, were taken in England for current Payment; fo that all Things tended to a Conclusion.

But to return to the Spanish Treaty all this they were willing the Infanta should Winter ARG 21 there; but knew not well how to delay the Prince longer. And as they were in this follows. Plunge, ruminating upon, and striving to find out some new Remora to help them, Pope Gregery XV. (that had granted the Difpensation) dies; and then their Subtilties flew upon that Accident to make the Dispensation invalid; yet with a Referve to keep up our Prince's Spirit, that it should be no hinderance to the Match; for the new Pope would instantly do it; if not, it should be dispatched by the Dean of the Cardinals: And the King of Spain affured the Prince, That if he would flay till Christmas, the Marriage should be really celebrated then. These Delays coming one on the Neck of another, and the Duke of Buckingham having taken fome Dilgust in Spain, presented all Things to our King in the worst Habit he could put upon them; for there had been fome Jars betwixt him and Olivares. Two great Favourites, tho' of different Kingdoms, could not well fquat in one Form. Olivares hunted Buckingham fo close, that he had almost caught him in his own Burrow; but, inflead of his Game, he encounter'd fome Vermin, which Darkness could not diffinguish) who bit him fhrewdly; and whether it were by this Common-Hunt I know not; but I am fure it was by the Common-Cry, that he was fo displeas'd with the Spanish for it, that he afterwards much inclined to the French. I acknowledge, the Gravity and Dignity of Hiftory fhould not appear in fuch Metaphorical Habiliments; but that we now live in an Age where Truth is forced to shroud her felf in such Attire, left fae should have imprinted on her Face a Mark of Malice against Greatness; which if it be not ballanced with Goodness and Piety, is but an empty and frothy Title.

But it was faid, this Tetrical Humour made Bucking.

Buckingham diflike all the Spanish Proceedings; ham anand just in the Nick, when it was on him, † the gry-Queen of Bohemia, by a private Message, gave him some Intimation, that she and her Children were to be thought on, inviting him to be a Witness to the Christening of one of them, which came fit to his Acceptation, not so much out of Affection to the one Party, as in Oppo-fition to the other. And what diffelish'd with him, gave an ill Savour to our King, who having Cause enough to dislike the Spanish Delays, and finding the Hearts of the People bent a-gainft the Match, and fome near him, as the Duke of Lenox, made Duke of Richmond when Buckingham had his Title, that the Scots might still precede the English; and the Marquess Hamilton made Earl of Cambridge, to intitle him a Peer the last Parliament, a Man of a gallant and flately Presence, one whom the King much ifferid to, and others having as little Affection to it; the Hopes of a Daughter of France, left to give Life yet to a Royal Race, did bate fomething of our King's keen Edge: So that he wrote to Buckingham, That he could not expell after fo long a flay in Spain, and so little done, that they had any covided laterative to not $2.5 km. ^{||} That Noble Historian the Earl of Clarendon has in his History sufficiently ridiculed this Story. Yet our Author can hardly be blam'd for giving Credit to it, considering it was not only a common Report at that time, but the $g_{smill}$ Historians took Pains to publish it, out of Prejudice to the Duke of EuckingLann, after the Match was broke off.

† There are Two Letters of the Queen of Bubtinis to the Duke of Bukingham in the Collection above-mentioned, writ with an unaffected moving Eloquence. In one, the expresses her intire Confidence in his Freending, not-withdraiding all Reports to the contrary. In the other, the implores his good Offices with her Father, and platomate protest, that what Count Dona or any others had faid to him, of her Huband's Difficent in him, was fulls; and intreast him to believe so fish thing of either her Huband's hir. So low was this Excellent Princet's brought, that was obliged to make Court to her own Father's Enventre, in Terms infinitely below the Greatness of her Mind, or of her Burch.

This Letter the Duke show'd to the Prince, and it wrought fo upon him, that he took a fudden Refolution to go home.

The Grandees of Spain having Notice thereof, were much troubled; for their Defign was to detain the Prince there all Winter, not only hoping thereby to turn him to their Religion, but to marry him to the Infanta, that there might have been a Co-union between them, that she being with Child before the Spring, they might keep her there till she were deliver d, that so the Child might be bred up and naturalized a Spaniard, both in Affection and Religion; which this fudden Refolution hindering, ir fomewhat startled them. Olivares told Buck-ingham, That he had promised the Prince should admit of Communion with some Jesuits of theirs in Matters of Religion.
And the Duke answer'd, There had been

fome already with him; but the Prince (he faid) was fo well fettled in Religion, that he was not to be further alter'd. Olivares reply'd, Was not to be influence and Hope of the Prince's turning Catholick. The Duke told him, It was false. The Conde in a great Rage broke from him, with fo much Impatience, that he was fearce able to contain himself, went to the Prince, and told him how unworthily Buckingbam had ferv'd him: And after his Complaints to him, he found out the Baron Kenfington, whom he looked on with an Eye of good Respect, his Civilities and Carriage obliging every where, venting his Paffion to him; telling him, Buckingham had given him the Lye, and that there was nothing a Man of Honour could be more sensible of: That it bred a great Distraction in him, betwixt his Affection to his Master's Honour and his own : For if any Evil did redound to Buckingham by his Hand, (being a Per-fon so near the Prince, who had honoured the Court of Spain with his Presence, and run through great and dangerous Hazards, out of Affection to his Mafter's Sifter, upon whole Actions now all the Christian World are gazing) it would reflect upon the Honour of his Master; and when his own Honour comes in competition with his Master's, the least must give way to the greatest; therefore he desired the Lord of Rensington to tell the Duke, That he had for much of a Gentleman, as to be sensible of the Injury, and so much Power and Courage as to revenge himself; but rather than his Master's Honour should suffer, he would be the Sufferer. The Duke sent the Conde Word again by the faid Lord, That he laid a Thing to his Charge that would not admit of a less sharp Answer; for when his Honour comes in competition with the Conde's, he had rather that should suffer than his own. His Passion was quick, but not durable; hot, but not revengful: And he held fo high an Esteem of the Conde, that he was more willing to venture upon his Sword than his Malice.

Bucking. This Business being waved by the Conde's hamgoes Differetion, and they seeing the Prince's Intento the all Things might be accommodated for his A.Reg 11. young Master; not caring a Fig for the Ceremony of a Spanish Farewel, which happily he might fear, and therefore strive to avoid, and which their Gravities, as they do all other Things, draw out at full length. But because they should not think he ran away, he gave them a short Signal of his Departure, and left the Prince to manage his own Business. And that the Prince's Change of Soil and Air, the great Volatile of Faney, might produce no Change in his Affection, the King of Spain and he both took folemn Oaths to accomplish the Marriage, and to make the Espousals Ten Days after the Dispensation from the new Pope should arrive. And a Procuration was sealed by the Prince to the King of Spain and Don Carles his Brother, and left in the Earl of Briffel's Hand to perfect the Work.

Among the Specious Ceremonies indented Gifts and betwist thefe two great Princes, the Richnefs Prefersts of the Gifts and Prefents that pass'd among them on both were highly remarkable. The King of Spain fides, preferred the Prince and all his Noble Train, and the Prince filled the Court of Spain in the Court of

and the Prince filled the Court of Spain, as it were, with Jewels; no Perfon of Quality or Merit, but his Name was recorded in the Inventory of the Prince's Bounty, as if England had disfurnish'd and made bare her own Neck to adorn the Breafts of Spain; the Prince presenting his Mistress with such a Necklace of Pearl, that all Spain could not parallel: Pearls that had been long pluck'd from their Watry Beds, and had left few Fellows there: For the Eastern and Western Divers throughout the Catholick Empire could never yet find the like. But thefe upon the Breach were return'd again; tho' it be now indifferent whether the French or the Spanish have them. The Duke of Buckingham was not close Handed in distributing his Jewels to the Beauties of Spain; tho' his Farewel was private, his Bounty was publick, more fuitable to his Master's Honour than his own; which the Lord Treasurer Middlesex found, and repin'd at.

The Prince took Leave of the Queen of The Spain and the Infanta, prepar'd for it in their Prince greatest Magnificence, attended with all their leaves Train of Grandees and Ladies. The Queen Madrid. Train of Grandees and Ladies. The Queen spoke her own Adieu in French, which the Prince return'd in the same Language. But the Earl of Bristol was the Medium betwixt the Prince and his Miftress, who, if he may be believ'd, set her Heart to make her felf grateful; and therefore this Parting could not be acceptable to her; one of her Arguments being, If the Prince loved me, he would stay for me : But now the Time of Parting approaching, those Arguments were laid aside, and the superficial Ornaments of publick Interview, like a Cloud, interposed it self betwist them; so that what was darkly lodged in their Thoughts, could only find Light by the Eyes. Their Tongues (the common Orator) could tell what was fit to fay, when there were fo many by to hear; and if the Eyes had learn'd the Language of the Heart, they quickly forgot it, because they never met again to practise it.

Some fay, it was for the Battel he gained against the French near St. Quintin, when they came to relieve it upon that Saint's Day; but whether either or both (for they were both accomplish'd) he built this mighty Fabrick in Form of a Gridiron, (the Emblem and Instrument of his Martyrdom) the Handle whereof is the King's Palace, of a vast Capacity, and the Square of the Gridiron is divided into Twelve spacious Quadrangles; in which are Arched Cloytters, one above, the other below; all Dedicated to Religious Orders, endowed with a Revenue enough to make the boft Piery proud, every Friar in the Mona ftry having his Man and his Mule; fo that they live there more like Princes than Priefts. And in the middle of the Square stands a magnificent Cathedral Church, under the High Altar wherefcription of there is a Vault, or rather stately Chapel, of most excellent polished Marble, built round like an old Roman Pantheon, (which, because it re-Iembled Heaven, the Romans placed there the Images of their Gods) and this the Foundar made the Burial-place for the Kings of Spain establishing this Order, (which is precisely obferved) That no Queen shall be buried there that is not Mother to a Prince; nor none of the King's Children but the First-born Son. And round about this Round, in the Marble Wall, placid in Stately Order, are many excellently contrivid Arches, of wrought and burnish a Marble, and in every Arch a beautiful and curious Coffin (either of Black Marble or Jet) of whole Stone, covered with the fame, which are to put the embalmed Bedies in. So that lying there, they feem as if they were inthroned, the Beauty of the Place is so resplendent about them. The Richness of the Silver Lamps, and Candleflicks blazing with Tapers, adds to the fining Brightness of the Marble, and and gives a glorious Luftre. To fpeak of the Riches of their Golden Croffes and Chalices, the Won-ders of their Giant-like Statues, and the Pleafure of their Grotto's, Gardens, Walks, Fountains, and Aqueducts, would take up more Time than is fit to allow them here. Here the Prince being feasted, fealed the Proxy, and swore to perform the Marriage as aforesaid: And the Day of Departure being come, there was a Stag lodg'd in the way whose Chace gave the King and Prince some Recreation. The Prince was attended by the Lord Kensington, and the Earl of Bristol, who was the Prince's Interpreter; the King of Spain (by Intention) only with Olivares, and the Marqui d'Avila: Olivares was Grand Master of the Marquis al Avala, his Brother-in-Law, attended on the King of Sprin. This kind Farewel was upon the 12th of September, the King leaving the Prince to be attended to the Sea fide, by a numerous Train of Spaaifh Courtiers, whereof the Principal were, Cardinal Zapata, the Marquis Aytone, the Earl of Gondemar, the Earl of Monterie, the Earl of Baraias, who was Steward of the King's Houshold, but now the Manager of the Prince's Domestical Affairs. These Grandees and others had at St. Andero a fair Opportunity to see some of the Navy Royal of England, and were featt-ed aboard the Prince's Ship: But at their Re-The turn towards the Shore, the Prince being with Price is them in the Barge, a Tempelt overtook them in Den-with that Energy, that they could neither feath get by a with that Fury, that they could neither fetch gerbya the Land, nor make to the Ships again, and Night and Darkness joining with the Storm, the Rowers seinting with Labour, because they thought themselves at the end of their Work, thought themselves at the end of the Work, their Horror and Fear almost heighten'd to Despair: In this Calamity, yielding themselves to the Mercy of the Seas, they jpy'd a Light from a Ship, near which the Wind had driven them, that gave new Life to Hope; and plucking up their Spirits to fetch that Ship, with the Danger of being broken to pieces by the Ship's Side, at aft they got aboard. This cooled the Heat of heir Ceremonies so much, that when the rempest was over, they parted: And the Prince arrived safely at Portsmouth upon the 5th of October following, and the next Day at Lonlon, where the Peoples Joy, elevated above Bonfire-Expressions, might teach miguided Princes, that LOVE is the firmest Foundation of

A Reg 21. Prince, or whether the Prince's Affection, that was wrought upon in the Spanish Court, 10st the MacChistit Vigour and Virtue, by losing the Object, or whether the united Operations of both, cannot be determined; but one Clark, a Creature of the Dike's, was posted back to Midrid to the Earl of Briffel, to command him not to deliver the Procuration for the Espousa's (which the Prince had fealed and fworn to perform) till he had further Order from England; pretending that the Infanta might after the Espousals betake her felf to a Cloyfter, and defraud him of a Wife. Briftol was much troubled at this Restriction, that a publick Act of fuch Eminency. betwixt two fuch great P. inces, high'y obliging, fhould be finethered up by a private Command from one of the Parties that had not Power to do it, having, in true Juffice, ty d up his own Hands, and when the Dishonous of it would fo much reflect upon the other Farty; and therefore he refolved, (notwithstanding the Prince's Command) if the Differnfation came, to make the !.iboufas within Ten Days, according to the Agreement: And he would bear himfeif up, from the Authority he had under the Great Seal of England, to perfect this Work, if he had not within the limited time a Command from our Ling to the contrary.

The Duke being jealous of Briffel, from fome particular Discontents and in Resentments betwixt them; and the Prince, fearing he would be too forward in the Espousals, as soon as they anded in England, pasted towards the King whell Judgment, not Projudice, made them atheir Power with that Strength, that a Parliain nt must be call'd, and the People consulted with: That they discovering to the King the fraudulent Preceedings of the Spaniard, the King's Integrity and Justice in breaking the Trenty might the more appear to the People, and by that means they fhould be mounted upon the Wings of the Peoples Affections, as Enemies to that which was so contrary to them. The News of a Parliament to break the Spinish Match was quickly carried about, and, according to their Thoughts, it took much with the People, and gained them much Respect and Ho-But the first thing they did, was to procure an absolute Command from the King to the Earl of Briftel, to suspend the Delivery of the Proxy till Christman, the Dispensation orme, which they effected, and fent away with ad freed: In which Letter, Briftel had Inftru-Clicus to demand the Reflicution of the Paletirate and Electoral Dignity, which were both waved and neglected in the Conclusion of the Treaty : but now are fet a-foot again, to let the Fing of Spain fee the Edge of their Eagerness was taken etc. For (faith the Letter) It mult! be a great Piliproportion for me to receive one Daugh- the Emperor and the Duke of Envaria would not ter with Ey and Contemment, and leave another in yield to Reafon, he would dem himself on our King's Terrand Sight.

And there was a Claufe in the Procuration left by the Prince, That the Prepara-Power of that should be in force but till Christ-tions in mas, and then to expire; for that the Execution Spain for of it was to be respited till it were altogether the Marinavaild: And the Spainard, for his greater Affront, must make all Provision ready for accomplishing so glorious a Work, that all the Eyes of the Christian World looked upon either with Diffike or Affection: The king of Spain (to be his own free Trumpet) fending into England with the Prince Don Mand for the Electronia, to our King, to congratulate the Prince's happy Voyage into Spin, and his fafe Return into Englind; and from thence he had Instructions to go into Flinders, Germiny and Italy, to make known to all Princes and Potensares, Allies to the King of Spain, how near the Treaty of Marriage (betwixt the Prince of England and the Infanta of Spain) was to be confummated. And the Pelmian Ambassador at Madrid, that folicited to have the Infints for the Prince of Poland, when he faw fuch Preparations for the Match with Englind, fainted in his Hopes, and returned home. For as foon as the Difpenfation came from the new Pope, (which was in the beginning of December) Bonfiles were made throughout all Sp in for Joy, and the great O.d-nance every where thunder'd out the Notic of it. Four Meffengers, viz. Mr. Killigraw, Grefly, Wood and Devies, followed each other at the Heels, which raifed fuch a Duft of Difcontenument among the People at Madrid, that, as fome report, they wished they had broken their Necks by the Way: So highly were the Commonatty of Spain af-fected with the Match! And if they felt the In-fluence of this cloudy Mcffage, what did the I ady Infunta and the King do? The one to lofe her Lover, the other to lofe his Honour: She whose Heart was affected, and he who found himself affronted. Seven years Treaty. This was the end of Wherein the King of Englind, a King of Peace, in spight of all the Spanish Armadoes, got the Victory, and Spain for many Years did not receive so great an overthrow. Yet they were paid in their own Coin: For at the first, and in the highest Progreis of the Treaty, when our King was fo cager for the Match, in all likelihood they never intended it; But the Prince's Presence gaining much with both Sexes, his Journey into Spain being efteemed among them fo glorious an Action, and the hopes they had now by this Marriage to propagate the Catholick Caufe; finding the Prince, as they thought, fomething in-clined that way, better digested their first Intentions, and brought it to the State from whence Thoughts The Duke of Buckingham, by the Infinuation of a Match of a long Converfe, having brought the Prince of a long Long back back. up to his own Humour, taught him to look back to the Beauty he had feen in France, which was nearer to him, that he might remember the Spanish no more, now esloigned from him. But the Treaty with Spain must be first dissolved, to give a Tincture of Honout to a proceeding with the other, and nothing but a Parliament shall do that, which they had fore-determined. For a Parliament taking away the Caufe, which was a Treaty of Peace, were best able to make good the Effect, which would be a War that must follow it. Therefore a Parliament was A Parliafurnmoned to meet the 12th of February, but a furnmon- fad Accident intervened, which made it to be deferred for some few days.

The suddenness of the Affright struck her with so much Conflernation, that file was fearce fensible of the Horrour of it; and it was carried with that Violence to the King, that he would not adorn himfelf that day to ride in his Glories to the Parliament, but put it off to the Nineteenth of February following, dedicating some part of that time to the Memory of his dead Servant, who might ferve as a Fore-runner to the King. and an Emblem to all his People; That in the dark Caverns of Man's Body, Death often lurks, which no humane Prudence, or Providence, is able to discover: For the Dutchess, to some of her Intimates, confessed afterwards, That she found the Effects of his full Veins that night that he was found dead the next morning

Linen returned into their Folds again, and all her People grafed on fome few Diffes. Yet whether her Actions came into Fame's fingering, her Gifts were fuitable to the Greatness of her Mind: For the Queen of Behemia (to the Christ-ening of whose Child she was a Witnes) had fome taft of them. And being blown up by Admiration for this Bounty, either by her own Delign to magnify her Merit, or by others in Mockery to magnify her Vanity, huge Inven-tories of Maffy Plate went up and down, from Hand to Hand, that she had given that Queen, and most believ'd it; yet they were but Paper Presents; those Inventories had a non est inventus at the Hague; they faw the Shell, the Inventory, but never found the Kernel, the Plate. Such difference there is betwixt folid Worth, and Airy-Paper Greatness. And it is hoped these slight Intermixtures will be no great Transgression, because long serious Things do dull the Fancy.

> The King having digefted his fudden Loss of the Duke of Richmond, and fitted himself to make his Mind known to his People in Parliament, he went to the House the 19th, as is said, and opened himself to them to this Effect.

I shall say unto you as Christ said to the Church, I am your Husband, and you are my Spouse. And as it is the Part of a good Husband to procure and maintain the Love of his Wife, which he usually doth by often visiting her, and upon extraordinary Occasions communicating the Secrets of his Affairs unto her, communicating the Secrets of Dis Liffars unto Boy, and by all gentle and affable Ways to gain ber Love; fo in the Administration of Government, I define to earry my self towards my People. There are two Ways by which a King may show his Love to be People: One is, by a constant Administration of ha People: One is, by a constant Administration of Justice, according to the Laws established; the other is, by communicating himself to his People, in their Representative, the Parliament. For the spiss, I know there's no particular Man of you that hath not enjoyed the Elessing and Benesit of it; which I will say no-thing of, because you have been all Witnesses of it; so who hath not found the Fruits of it? The Bifhop of Lincoln's thort Harangue.

When the King had thus ended, the Lord Keeper Williams, Bishop of Lincoln, and Speaker to the House of Peers, (who uses always to make the King's Mind further known if there be Cause) told the Parliament, That after the Eloquent Speech of his Majesty, he would not fay any thing; for as one of the Spartan Kings being ask'd, Whether he would not willingly hear a Man that counterfeited the Voice of the Nightingale to the Life? made Answer, He had heard the Nightingale. So for him to repeat or rehearfe what the King had faid, was (according to the Latine Proverb) to chamel a Golden Ring with Studs of Iron. He doubted not but that the King's Speech had, like Afchines's Orations, left in their Minds a Sting; and as an Historian said of Nerva, that having adopted Trajan, he was immediately taken away, Ne post divinum & immortale factum, aliquid mortale faceret: So he would not dare after his Majesty's Divinum & immortale dictum, mortale aliquid addere.

This is not inferted to fliew the Pregnancy and Genius of the Man, but the Temper of the Times; wherein Men made themselves less than Men, by making Kings little less than Gods. In this the Spanish Bravery is to be admir'd, and the French do not much come short of them, who do not idolize their Kings with Sacred Sovereign, Immortal, and Oraculous Expressions; but in their humblest Petitions give him the Title Sir, tell him their Business, and demand Justice of him. But where these Adulations were admitted, tho' it doth not strike suddenly with some incurable Disease, yet the same Hand can make them consume, and in the end wast away to nothing.

But the Parliament, tho' they knew there was an Intention of a Toleration of Popery upon the close of the Spanish Match, sealed up (as it were) their Lips, and would not fee the Light that difcovered it felf through this Cloud that the King caft before it, (tho fome of the Commons had much ado to hold, which he takes nodangerous a Journey, when they found what freemed.

tice of at the next Interview, and thanks them A.Reg 21. for it) but they went on directly to his Bufin (s) making it their own, forgetting all former Mii carriages. And upon the 24th of this Month the Duke of Buckingham, accompanied with the Febr. 24 Prince as his Remembrancer, made a long Re-Bucking lation of all the Transactions in Spain to both ham's Re-Houses, with all the Advantage he could, to the Parmake good his own Actions, fome of the Particulars whereof are already related. And he took the fift Difcovery of the Intention of the King of Spain not to deal fairly with our King (touching the Restitution of the Palatinate) from the Arch-Dutchess juggling in the Treaty at Bruffels, which was nanaged by Sir Riebard We-fon, our King's Ambaffador there, who urged for a Ceffation of Arms in the Palatinate, (the Arch-Dutchess pretending Power to draw off the Spanish Forces, if our King would first draw off his) it came to an Agreement; but in the close (after some Delays) she confessed she had no Power to admit of a Cessation, till she had more particular Warrant for it out of

That these Shufflings made our King send Porter into Spain for a more resolute Answer, in relation to the Match, and the Palatinate, and assigned him but Ten Days to stay there; in which time Briftol fed him with Hopes, which he found very empty ones: Whereupon Porter went boldly to Olivares, who (in an open-hearted way) told him plainly, That Spain meant neither the Match, nor Restitution of the Palatinate.

Briffol feeing Porter would return with this Anfwer, perswaded him to speak with Olivares again, who coming to Olivares, found him much incensed for relating the private Intimation he gave him to Bristol, the Publick Minister, and deny'd to speak with Porter any more.

Briffol still puffs up our King with an Affurance both of the Match, and Restitution of the Palatinate; but they proceeding flowly, the Prince defir'd that he might go himself into Spain, which Buckingham first broke to the King, who with Reasons laid down for it was drawn

When the Prince came there, the Match at first was absolutely denied, unless he would be converted, which Briftol perswaded the Prince unto, at least in shew, to expedite his Business. Then the Spanish Ministers urged for a Toleration of Religion in England, which they ho-ped (as some of them expressed) would cause a Rebellion; and they offered the Prince an Army to affift him for the Suppreffion of the

But the Prince finding the Spanish did but adily with him, left a Proxy with Briffel to conclude the Match, when the Dispensation came, which the Prince forbad him to deliver. Briffel neverthelest proceeds; and if Grefley had not brought a Revocation of the Proxy from the King over Night, Briffol had made the Espou-fals the next Day. And always at the end of every Point, he would look upon the Prince every roint, ne would look upon the Prince for his Approbation and Allowance, who fill, as the Duke went on, confirmed the fame. And fo Buckingham concluded, That if the drawing of us out of Darkneß into Light did deferve Thanks, we all ow'd it to the Prince, who by the Hazard of his Person, and by his

foonest deceived that love most to admire. The Parliament were but Men, and could at present see no more than the Duke was pleased to show them through the flattering Glass of But when Briffol came over, and this Relation. (as afterwards he) did difcover, that the Duke carry'd the Prince purposely into Spain to be the better inftructed in Popery: That he gave hope to the Spinish Ministers of State of the Prince's Convertion, which made them propound tar worfe Conditions for Religion than had been formerly agreed on: That he professed himself a Papift there, going to Mass, kneeling to and adoring their Sacraments; which the Pope being informed of, fent the Duke a Bull, to perfwade and encourage him to pervert the King and Prince, with other pernicious Crimes laid to his Charge in the next King's Reign, (as may appear in due time) none can blame the People for mutable Affections: For when Falshood is so impudent as to hoodwink such an Affembly, with the Veil that Truth her felf is wont to put on, who can at an instant discover it?

But it was a hard Condition for the banished Palatine to have fuch Mediators as Buckingham, Briftol and Weston, to make Intercession for him, the Temper of whose Spirits was well known, and which way their Affections tended. But now the Load is all laid upon Briffel, tho he were at the diftance of not being fenfible of it, yet it was so heavy, that most Men thought he would never come to have it taken off.

The Par-King to break the Treaties with

Spain.

But all things were paffed over by the Parliament that reflected upon Particulars, having advise the in their Eye the general Good of the Kingdom, which they strove to manage with Advantage. And the Treaty of the Marriage with Spain being put into their Hands, they crush'd the Brood in the Nest, advising the King to break the Treaty, and proclaim open War with that King: Which they did not do fuddenly, as if War with that they had been eager upon a War, but with good Advice, and deliberate Confideration, as the most immediate Means for the Establishment of Religion, and fettled Peace; protesting to affift the King, for the regaining of the Palatinate, with their Lives and Fortunes. Upon which Declaration and Refolution, the King determined to fend inftantly Post into Sp. in to his Ambaffadors, to fignify to that King, That the Par-liament advised him to break off the Treaties, and to recover the Palatinate by War; and the Post had his Dispatch to that purpose, when the King repented him of what he had done, and (like the Husband now jealous of his Wife) writes to Secretary Convay this Letter, to impede and delay the Bufinefs.

> By this Letter it appears, that the King Conjethought the Petition against Recusants of such Eures on high Confequence, that if he should not give the King's the Parliament a good Answer, it might make a Rupture with them; and therefore he will fee further in the Nature of this Petition, before he will break with the king of Spain; and know more of the Prince his Son's Mind, happily whether he would yet accept of his old Mistress, or expect a new one: Or whether the King feared that the Parliament would not make good their Premifes, to fland with their I ives and Fortunes in the Gap when this great Breach was made, and fo conzen him, may be myffical Conjectures from myffical Expressions, grounded upon the Words of a king : Or whether any or all of these (like the King's Heart infertitable) are meant in the Letter, is not here determined. But the King haftens to the House, and finding no fuch terrible Things in the Petition, (the Lords being not fo quick in the Refolition of it, as the King was in the Apprehenfion of it) he flirs not those Waters, but founds the Depth of the Parliaments Intentions, by propounding his Doubts, and requiring a Solution to them, in order to a War, with Prudence and Caution.

Have Cause first to thank God with my The Have Caule first to main Good Middle, The Heart, and all the Faculties of my Mind, King's fethat my Speech which I delivered in Parlia-cond ment hath taken 16 good Effect among you, Speech to as that, with an unanime Confent, you have both freely and speech given me your Advice in Houses, this great Business, for which I also thank you all as heartily as I can. I also give my particular Thanks to the Gentlemen of the Lower House. for that I hear, when fomeamong them would have cast Jealousies and Doubts between me and my People, you prefently quelled those Motions, which might have hindred the happy Agreement I hope to find in this Parliament. You give me your Advice to break off the 'Treaties, as well concerning the Match, as the Palatinate. And now give me Leave, as an old King, to propound my Doubts, and hereafter give me your Answer.

First, it is true, that I who have been all the Days of my Life a peaceable King, and have had the Honour in my Titles and Impress to be filled Res preificus, should without Necessity embroil my fell in a War; which is so far ' from my Nature, and from the Honour I have ' had both at home and abroad, in endeavour-'ing to avoid the Effusion of Christian Blood, (of which too much hath been flied) and fo much against my Heart, that unless it be upon fuch a Neceffity, that I may call it (as fome merrily fay it of Women) Malum Neceffarium, I shall be loth to enter into it. And I must likewise acquaint you, that I have had no finall Hopes given me of obtaining better Conditions for Restitution of the Palatinate, ' and that even fince the fetting down of this 'Parliament. But be not jealous, nor think me 'fuch a King, that would, under Pretext of

' As concerning the Cafe of my Children: I 'am now old, and would be glad, as Mofes faw the I and of Promife from a high Mountain, (though he had not Leave to fet his Foot in it) fo would it be a great Comfort to me, that God would it loong prolong my Days, as, if I might not see the [] Restitution, yet at least to be affured that it would be; that then I might with old Simeon say, Nane dimittis servum tuem Domine! Otherwise it would be a great Grief unto me, and I should die with a heavy and discomforted Heart. I have often said, and particularly in the last Parliament, (and I shall be ever of the Mind) that as I am not ambi-'tious of other Mens Goods or Lands, fo I de-' fire not to enjoy a Furrow of Land in England, " Scotland, and Ireland, without Restitution of the ' Palatinate; and in this Mind I will live and

But let me acquaint you a little with the Difficulties of this Cafe: He is an unhappy Man who shall advise a King to War; and it ' is an unchristian thing to feek that by Blood, 'which may be had by Peace. Besides, I think ' your Intentions are not to engage me in a War, but withal you will confider how many things there are requisite thereunto. I omit to speak of my own Necessities, they are too well known: Sure I am, I have had the least Help 'in Parliament of any King that reigned over you these many Years: I have let you know that my Disabilities are encreased, by the Charge of my Son's Journey into Spain, (which 'I was at for his Honour, and the Honour of the Nation) by fending Ambassadors, by Main-'tenance of my Children, and by affifting of the Palatinate. I have incurred a great Debt to the King of Denmark, which I am not able to pay. The Low-Countries (who in regard of their nearness are fittest to help for the Recovery of the Palatinate) are at fo low an ebb, that if I affift them not, they will be fcarce able to fubilit. The Princes of Germany, that fhould do me any good, are all peor, and weak, and difficattned, and do expect Affifance from hence. For Ireland, 1 leave it to 'you, if that be not a Back-door fit to be fecu-red. For the Navy, I thank God it is now in a better Case than ever it was, yet more must be done; and before it can be prepared as it 'ought to be, it will require a new Charge, as well for the own Strength, as for fecuring of the Coalls. My Children (I vow to God) * eat no Bread but by my means; I must maintain them, and not fee them want. My Cu-floms are the best part of my Revenues, and in effect the Substance of all I have to live on: All which are Farmed out upon Condition, 'That if there be War, those Bargains are to be anulled. Subfidies ask a great Time to with the more Security: After the Mafter had bring in; and if you affift me that way, I must appointed him to pay so much in one Place,

A Rig. 22. ber, that in my first Speech unto you, for Proof | take them up before-hand upon Credit, which A. Rig. 22. will eat up a great part of them.

This being my Case, to enter into a War An Christia without sufficient Means to support it, were to shew my Tecth, and do no more. In the mean time, I beartily thank you for your Advice, and will ferioufly think upon it; as I pray you to confider of these other Points. My Treasurer, to whose Office it apperrains, shall more at large inform you of those Things that concern my Estate.

Thus freely do I open my Heart to you; and having your Hearts, I cannot want your Helps; for it is the Heart that opens the Purfe, not the Purse the Heart. I will deal frankly with you, show me the Means how I may do what you would have me; and if I take a Refolution upon your Advice to enter into a War, then your own Deputies shall have the dispo fing of the Money; I will not meddle with it, but you shall appoint your own Treasurers.

'I say not this with purpose to invite you to open your Purses, and then to slight you so much as not to follow your Counsel, nor engage you before I be engaged my felf. Give me what you will for my own Means; for I protest none of the Money which you shall give for these Uses, shall be issued but for those ends. If upon your Offer I shall find the Means to make a War honourable and safe, (and that I resolve to embrace your Advice) then I promile you on the Word of a King, That although War and Peace be the peculiar Prerogative of Kings, yet as I have advised with you in the Treaties, on which War may enfue, fo I will not Treat, nor accept of Peace, without first acquainting you with it, and hearing your Advice, and therein go the proper way of Parliament, in con-ferring and confulting with you: And happily, Conditions of Peace will be the better, when we are prepared for War, according to the Proverb, That Weapons breed Peace.

Your kind Carriage gives me much Contentment; and that comforts me which my Lord of Canterbury faid, That there was not a contrary Voice among you all, like the Se venty Interpreters, who were led by the Breath of God.

'I am fo defirous to forget all Rents in former Parliaments, that it shall not be my default, if I be not in love with Parliaments, and call them often, and defire to end my Life in that intercourse between Me and my People, for making of good Laws, reforming Abuses, and maintaining the good Govern-ment of the Commonwealth: Therefore go on chearfully, and advise of these Points, and ' my Resolution shall be then declared.

The Truth it, King James had been to long Inil'd aldeep by the Allurements of the Court of Spain, that it was no easie Matter for the Parliament, or Buckingham himself, the greatest of Favourites that ever was, to awaken him. But fill, it seems, the Spains Match (tho publickly broke off) kept some Root in his Mind.

There are Two Orngind Letters of Buckingham to King James in the above-mentiond Collettion, which, tho without Date, appear to me to be writ about this Time. As they sufficiently discover King James's Unsteadincts in these Matters, for they express more, in my Opinion, of the Duke of Buckingham's Honesly and Fidelity to his Master and the Publick, than all that has been faid in his Vindication or Praise either then or since. One of them is endored the Publick, than all that has been faid in his Vindication or Praise either then or since. fent to the King, to let him know, that the Duke! of Buckingham had some dangerous Machination a-foot that tended to his Destruction, and the best he could expect would be a Confinement to a Country-house in some Park during his Life; the Prince being now in full Abilities, and ripe in Government. This Concussion was strong enough to shake an old Building that was of a fearful and tottering Temper; (especially if he confidered how his Mother was put by her Government, to fay nothing of Prince Henry) but the Violence of it did not work, because the Operation was fomewhat mitigated by the Duke's Protestation of his Innocency: For the King, at the next Interview, faying to him, Ah! But the Duke of Buckingham's Reputation there procured no other Satisfaction than fome little Check of Formality: For when Inviefa was recalled home, he was not leffen'd in Efteem. Thus was this Information waved; though there might be fome Cause to suspect, that the great Intimacy and Dearness betwixt the Prince and Duke (like the Conjunction of two dreadful Planets) could not but portend the Production of some very dangerous Effect to the Old King.

But the Duke's Reputation, tho' it failed in Briffelient Spain, held footing in England; for Briffel no fooner appeared, but he is clapt up in the Tower. Their Juggling Practices (whereof they were both guilty enough) must not yet come to Light to diffurb the Proceedings in Parliament, Bri-fol had too much of the King's Commission for what he did, (though he might overshoot himfelf in what he faid) which was not now to be difeovered. Yet the Rigour of that Imprisonment would have founded too loud, if he had not had a fuddain Release; who finding the Duke high mounted yet in Power, and himself in no Degree to grapple with him, was content with Submiffion to gain his Liberty, and retire

The Lords being now at Leifure, began to consider of that Stinging Petition (as the King called it) against Papists, how necessary it was to joyn with the Commons, to supplicate the King to take down the Pride of their high-flying Hopes, that had been long upon the Wing, watching for their Prey, and now they are made to floop without it. And after fome Conferences betwixt both Houses about it, the Petition was reduced to these Two Propositions, and prefented to the King as Two Petitions.

The Pare liaments of Petition against Recufants.

E your Majesty's most humble and loyal Subjects, the Lords and Commons Affembled in Parliament, do in all Humbleness offer unto your Sacred Majesty these

Two Petitions following:

1. 'That for the more Safety of your Realms, and better keeping your Subjects in Obedi-ence, and other Important Reasons of State, your Majesty would be pleased (by some such Course as you shall think fit) to give present Order, That all the Laws be put in due Execution, which have been made, and to stand 'in force, against Jesuites, Seminary-Priests, and others, having taken Orders by Authority derived from the See of Rome, and generally against all Popish Recusants. And as for Dif-'arming, that it may be according to the Laws, and according to former Acts and Di-rections of State in that Case. And yet that it may appear to all the World, the Favour the Realm, may not pretend to be furprized; A.Rig. 22. that a speedy and certain Day may be pre-fixed by your Majesty's Proclamation, before which Day they shall depart out of this Kingdom, and all other your Highnes's Domini-ons; and neither they nor any other to return or come hither again upon Peril of the feverest Penalties of the Laws now in force against them. And that all your Majesty's 'Subjects may thereby also be admonished, not 'to receive, entertain, or conceal any of them 'upon the Penalties and Forfeitures, which by the Laws may be imposed on them.

2. Seeing We are thus happily delivered from that Danger which those Treaties now ' dissolved, and that Use which your ill-affected Subjects made thereof, would certainly have drawn upon us, and yet cannot but foresce, and fear, left the like may hereafter happen, which would inevitably bring much Peril upon your Majesty's Kingdom: We are most humble Suters unto your Gracious Maje-fly, to fecure the Hearts of your good Subjects by the Engagement of your Royal Word unto them, That upon no Occasion of Marriage or Treaty (or other Request in that be-half from any Foreign Prince or State what-'foever) you will take away or flacken the Execution of your Laws against Jesuites, Priests, and Popish Recufants.

'To which our humble Petitions (proceeding from our most Loyal and Dutiful Affections towards your Majesty, our Care of our ' Country's Good, and our own confident Perfigation, that thefe will much Advance the Glory of Almighty God, the everlatting Horizon or your Majetty, the Safety of your Kingdoms, and the Encouragement of all your good Subjects) we do most humbly beseech your Majesty to vouchsafe a Gracious Anter, yet now he would comply; and therefore he fends for both Houses to Whitehall, to sweeten them with a gentle Answer to this Petition, that might take off those Sour Aspersions that this Miscarriage in Government might happily caft upon him. And we will not fay, but his Intentions might rove towards the end, though he gave too much Liberty (through a Natural Eatines in himself) to those that he trutted with Management of great Affairs, by evil Means to pervert that end, which made him guilty of their Actions: For where true Piery is not the Director, Carelefness, as often as Wil-fulness, carries Men out of the way. But he had this Principle, and made often use of it, (like ill Tenants when they let things run to ruin) to daub all over again when forced to it, and find no other Remedy. This was the effect of what he faid in his own Excuse.

This I will do, and more; I will Command 'all my Judges, when they go their Circuits, to keep the same Courses for putting all the 'Laws in Execution against Recusants, as they were wont to do before these Treaties; for the Laws are still in force, and were never differented with by me. God is my Judge, they were never so intended by me. But, as I told ' in the beginning of the Parliament, you must give me leave as a good Horse-man, sometimes to use the Reins, and not always to use the Spurs. So now there needs nothing but my Declaration for the difarming of them, that is already done by the Laws, and shall be done as you defired. And more, I will take Order for the shameful Diforder of the Reforting of my Subjects to all Foreign Ambassadors; of this, I will advise with my Council how it may be best reformed. It is true, that the Houses of Ambaffadors are Privileged Places; and though they cannot take them out of their Houses, yet the Lord Mayor and Mr. Recorder of London may take some of them as they come from thence, and make them Examples. Another Point I will add, concering the Edu-'cation of their Children, of which I have had 'a particular Care, as the Lord of Canterbury and the Bishop of Winchester, and other Lords of my Council, can bear me Witness, with whom I have advised about this Business: For, you; but had you not done it, I should have A.Reg. 22. done it my felf.

Now for the Second Part of your Petition; and You have there given me the best Advice in the World; for it is against the Rule of Wifdom, that a King should suffer any of his Suhjects to transgress the Laws by the Intercession of other Princes; and therefore affure your felves, that (by the Grace of God) I will be ' careful that no fuch || Conditions be foifted in upon any other Treaty whatfoever: For it is fit my Subjects should stand or fall to their own age with France.

For our King, after the Breach with Spain, A Treaty For our King, after the Breach with Spain, of Marri- loth to be refused in France, (where the Younger Daughter to Henry the Great was referved to be the Fatal Mother of a Disherited Royal Iffue) durst not venture upon an Overt Treaty, but fends over the Lord Kenfington, newly made Earl of Holland, who was to found the King and Grandees of France, whether the Match were fealible before he would begin to Treat publickly. He remained a Month in France, and moved not a Word, though they apprehended his Address was to that end. While the Prince was in Spain, they looked upon the Count Soifon as a fit Match for the Princess Henrietta Maria; but our Prince's Gallantry (as they effected it there) and his sprittly Carriage in fo dangerous and hazardous a Journey, both by Sea and Land, took fuch Impressions in the Frisk of the French Humour, and raised him to fuch a height of Bravery among them, that they were impetuously Violent in defiring the Match: Infomuch, as upon the very first Overture, the King of France told the Earl of Holland, That he had rather have the Prince of England to his Brother, than any Man in the World. And when the Treaty was begun, the Spanish Factors began to play their Parts with the Pope, fo that he fent to the King of France to get some Immunities in the Articles now in Treaty for the Catholicks in England, and that Treaty for the Catholics in Engine, and there might be publick Exercise of the Popish Religion for the Princes. This the Earl of Holland opposing, the king of France told him, That Land opposing the King of France told him, That the Princes he would if he would go on with the Treaty, he would be tied no further to the Pope's Rules than did A. Reg 22 confift with Reafon: For he did acknowledge in Christian the next Diocesan Bishop to him, in his Dominions, to have as much Power as he. So that the Treaty went on with a petty Admittance of the Catholick Religion, and Romish Ministers about the Princess, to a private, and almost ob-scure Condition; so eager was the King of France for the Match.

But the Jesuitical Party, both here and there, were inceifantly Laborious for a greater Liberty; and the King's Chief Agent in the Treaty, Monfieur de Vieuxvill, having pulled on him the Odium of the People, (through fome Miscarriages) being committed Prisoner by the King, to protect him from their Rage, the Cardinal Richelieu entring then into his Infancy of Favour, being preferred by the Queen-Mother to be a Manager of the Treaty, whose Intimate he was, and more Stubborn for promoting the Catholick Caufe, yet all this could give no ftop to the Career, but that the March would be made up, upon very eafy Terms.

But when the King of France understood, by his Ministers and Agents in England, how eager our King was for the Match; (for he defired it above all earthly Bleffings, as one near him faid of him) for belides the Reproach he thought would fall upon him by another Breach, he should lose the Glory of a Conjunction with Kings (which he highly wound up his Opinion to) to Sublime, and, as it were, Deify his Posterity in the Esteem of the People, so that he would almost submit to any thing, rather than the Match should not go forward: Which the King of France finding, he bated his Humour of Earnestness for it, and descended by the same Steps and Degrees that he found his Brother King advanced to it, and got feveral great Immunities for the Papifts by it; notwithstanding all our King's fair Promises to the Parliament, as may be feen by those Articles feal'd and fworn to by our King, some few Months before his Death.

* But a little before this, (when the Hopes of the Match with France began to bud) the Earl of Carlifle was fent over to mature and ripen the Proceedings with the Earl of Holland, to bring the Treaty to some Perfection; yet with private Instructions, That if they could find by

The Archistinep was a Man of Cunning and Intrigue, a Monk, and sent over by the Courts of Rome and France. He was therefore the properest Tool they could Employ, and his Errand was not only to obtain goal Terms for the Roman Catholicks in England open the Account of this Match with France, but likewife to found goal men, about his Thoughts of the Romain Religion in the year of the Romain Religion from they had always entertained an Opinion than he was inclined that way. It seems the Duke of Buckingham was acquainted before hand with his Coming; for he sent as far as Cantrebury to meet him, and Conduct him to Landon. He was immediately upon his Arrival admirted to Buckingham, and by him brought to the King, into whose intrice Considence he so fir wrought himself at his first Audience, that immediately thereupon all the Prifism to England were sit spen to the Prifis and Miljournier, notwithstanding King James, the Sellion of Parliament before, had solemnly promised to put the Law, in Execution against them.

The Archbishee had gained such as Ascondant over the King, that, as we are rold in his printed Narrativa, King James taking him one Day by the Hand, usd to him this Expression, Tow are the Man (said he) four me from God, to whom Invargively spot my Mand. And then rold him, He had always a good Opinion of the Church of Rome, and for it had suffered great Misfortunes ever since his Birth.

Thereupon he epond to the Archbishep a Project he had long in his Thoughts, of Uniting all Protestants to the Pope: And was willing, in order to bring it about, to concert Measures with the French King, that there might be a Meeting at Dever or telesgone of Able Divines of both Sides; adding, That the Archbishop hindle was the had ever a great Leve and Etheem for the precision of his Morter, which shew's him to be a Man of Sense and good Nature.

In since, the Archbishop was so perfectly well staisified with Ki

Thus the Ambition of Princes (that devolve all their Happiness upon gloriousExtractions) doth choak and smother those Considerations that Religion (like a clear Light) discovers to be but groß and cloudy Policy, which vanishes often, and comes to nothing.

The Duke of Buckingham swol'n with Grandure (having two great Props to Support him) doubted not to Crush any thing that stood in his way, so that he fell very heavily upon his Cousin the Earl of Middlesex, Lord-Treasurer; for he remember'd how he repined at the Moneys that were fpent in Spain, and his Comportment to him fince his coming over (Middlesex being naturally of a Sullen and Proud Humour) was not such as (he thought) did become his Creature: Therefore he resolved to bring him down from that Height he had placed him in; and quickly found the Means to do it: For great Officers that dig deep in Worldiy Treasures, have many Underminers under them; and those that are not just to themfelves or others, must make use of such as will not be so Just to them; so that a Flaw may eafily be found, whereby a great Breach may be made. And as Middlefex had not Innocency, to Justify himself, so he wanted Humility whereby others might Justify him, which made him fall unpitied. The Prince (that was Buekingham's Right Hand) took Part against him in the House of Lords, where he was Question'd; which the King hearing of, writes to the Prince from New-Market, (whither he often retired to be free and at ease from comber and noise of Business) That he should not take Part note of buttines I lost we point not take Part with any Existin in Parliament against the Earl of Middletex, but to referve himfelf, so that both Sides might feek him; for if he bendied to take away his Servants, the time would do ome that others awaild do as much for him. This wife Advice speaks Bueting the Servants with the Advice speaks Bueting and the servant was the servant of the servant with the servant of the serva kingham, a little declining from the Meridian of the King's Favour, or the King from his; for if the King did know that Buckingbam was his chief Persecutor, it could not but relish ill with the Duke to have the King plead for him: If the King did not know, there was not then that Intimacy betwixt them that used to be. But the Treasurer's Actions being throughly canvafed (though he had not had fuch great Enemies) he was found guilty of fuch Midemeanours, as were not fit for a Man of Honour to commit; fo that the Parliament thought to Degrade him, but that they looked on as an ill Precedent. But though they took not away his Titles of Honour in Relation to his Posterity (who had not offended) yet they made him utterly uncapable of Sitting in the House of Lords as a Peer: And for his Fine, it was so great, that the Duke (by Report) got Chelfey-House out of him for his Part of it.

Harman's Story

There was an odd Accident happen'd in Nor-. thamptonshire while this Treasurer was in his Greatness. One Harman, a Rich Man, (that knew not well how to make use of his Riches) having fome bad Tenants, and being informed that one of them, which owed him Money, had furnished himself to go to a Fair, to buy some Provisions for his Accommodation; Harman

This coming to some Pragmetical Knowledge, the poor Man was advised to Indict his Landiord for Robbing him, and taking his Money from him, on the Highway, which he did, and Harman, for his fordid and bale Carriage, being ill beloved in the Country, was found guilty, but repriev'd by the Judges; and Harman hearing the Lord-Treasurer had a Secreta: ry of his Name, he applied himfelf to him, promifing to give him all his Effate (having no Children) if his Lord would bring him out of the Danger he was in; which the Lord-Treasurer by his Power with the King did effect, and Hurman his Man within a short time after (by the other's Death) enjoyed an ample

But it is thought this Treasurer got well by laying the Ground-work to this great Structure; for Copt-Hall (a Noble Seat in Effex) came to his hand from this Lady at a small value; which is the principal House he lest to his Family.

Maurice finding Spinola with the Spa-nish Army hankering about Breda, either thinking himfelf not ready enough to Encounter him, or not ftrong enough to Grapple with him, permitted him to work himself within Two ftrong Lines of Circumvallation, fortified with feveral Forts and Redoubts, notwithstan-ding that Breda was his Darling Town, and the Honour of his Excellency. Eut his great Design of lodging fo near the Enemy was to amule them, that they should bend their Eyes and Thoughts upon him there and neglect that the more which on him there, and neglect that the more which he aimed at; for he had the Surprising of the strong Castle at Answerp in his Fancy, which (he was informed) at that time had but fmall Force in it; and he was so assured to pre-vail, that he would have none but the Dutch to have the Honour of it. But they attempted the Bufiness so blunderingly, that they were discover'd, and lost their Labour; and so with fome few little Bickerings of fmall Parties of Horfe, betwixt the Two intrenched Armies the whole Summer was shuffled away; and Winter approaching, the Prince seeing little good to be done there, drew his Army to Rofendale and Sprang, Villages adjacent, where they attended Opportunities of doing the Enemy Mifchief. But the Glory of Prince Murice began to decay; the loss of this Town (which he now true or good James 6. While these Things were in Motion, Truth, that comes often with a Leaden Foot, brought News out of the East-Indies, that the Year 1622. gave Eirth to a Mischief of so horrid a Countenance for a Private one) that no Time or Age could Parallel. The Dutch (while the Englifh, their great Supporters, were fighting for them at their own Doors) grasping at all the Treasures and Spices of the Eastern World, had not only wormed out the Spaniards and Portugals from many Islands and Colonies there, but with unbounded Covetoulnels and Ambition strove to hinder their Neighbours and best Friends, the English, from that free Commerce with the Natives they ever enjoy'd; fo that many Bickerings hapned among them, till the the Centroversie was taken up by publick Treaty and Stipulation, agreed on betwixt our King and the States of the Natherlands, in the Year One thousand fix hundred and nineteen, according to this Agreement, the English being as they thought fecure, planted their Lactories among them, where, after they had reaped the Fruit of their great Danger and Hazard, for fome two Years, with much grumbling and repining, the Dutch began to practice their utter Extirpation: Not by a Massacre, for that had been a Merciful Mischief, but by Torture (to make their Cruelty Justice in so horrid and savage a Manner, as if they had fucked their Rage from Indian Tigers.

Treafon.

The English acted this black Tragedy; and Fire and Water cuted of were their Engines, which are ever cruel Maflers when they get Power: For pretending the chief Agent, Captain Gabriel Towerfon, and the reft of the Figlish Factory, had an Intention, by the Afliffance of some few poor Japoneses, to possess themselves of the Castle, and expel the Dutch out of the thand; they feiz'd upon them, and fet their bloody Engines a-work, having no other Accufers but them. The Racks extending their Sinews, drew them out at Length; and the Waters which they fubtilly forced into their Mouths, by their own respiration and breathing, fwelled all their Bodies

Thus having fired the poor Men with Tortures, and they being willing to die quickly, confess'd whatsoever their cruel Tormentors would have them fay. The Dutch having in this Furnace wrought them to accuse themfelves, with their peffilent Formality, got their Confessions under their Hands, and so concluded their Barbarism, with cutting off some of their Heads.

There were not Twenty Englishmen, nor a- The imbove Thirty faponefes, in their whole Island, with ty of the whom they were said to Machinate this Conspi-Attempt racy, and the Castle had in it Two hundred by the Dutch Soldiers, and Eight Ships riding before English, it well Mann'd, whereof Two of them were above Twelve hundred Tuns a-piece: Besides, the Dutch had Two other Castles in the same Island; and what Probability could there be (if the Plot were as plain as their Malicious Tongues could make it) that so weak a Force should attempt upon fo many, having Men enough in the Ships and Castles to have devoured the Attempters? And if they had effected their Work, what would the End have been but Ruine to their Estates, and everlasting Infamy to their Memories? knowing the Dutch were by the last Agreements to have that Castle, confirmed by the King, who hated Treason in any Man with his very Soul. Whereas the Men were of well-known, upright Conversation, loathing fuch Baseness, and every Man of them, with Christian Impressions, sealed the last Gasp of his Life with a Protestation of his Innocency.

Ten of the English lest their Lives, whereof Captain Towerson was one; the rest, with Rack'd, Burnt, and Macerated Bodies, were fent out of the Island to other English Plantations, and so the whole Factory was destroyed: The Dutch the whole Factory was defirityed: The Diffice feizing into their Hands greedily (which they only Gaped after) the whole Trade, which they have ever fince enjoyed. And to put a fairer Gloss upon this mad Mischief, Nine Faroneses, and One Portugal, that they would needs have to be Complotters with the English, were rack'd (poor Men) to the same Confession, and then Executed; there being more Horror in the Examination of the Fault, than in the Punishment of it.

This Cruelty had made an incurable Wound betwixt the two Nations (the Noife of it giving Animofity enough) but that it was new Skin'd over, the bloody Garment taken off by Dutch Apologies, and presented at Court with a Face of Justice: For nothing must come thi-ther but in such Attire, as the great Ones about the King will please to put upon it; who might be wrought to any temper by that Forge that could frame fuch flagitious Actions: For they that had Barbarism enough to perpetrate the One, had Baseness enough to practice the Other. But leaving their Consciences besmear'd with this Gore, which they cannot wipe off, but may flick to them yet; we proceed to the

While Mansfeldt remained in England, after fome few Nights he was Lodg'd at St. James's, the Prince's House; Served and Attended in great State by some of the King's Officers, and Feasted with divers of the Nobiliry with much Magnificence: In which time a Press went through the Kingdom, for raifing Twelve thousand Foot, which, with some Cavalry that Mansfeldt expected in Germany and France, would make up the Body of a confiderable Army. Mansfeldt's Defign was to go into Germany, thro France, and he had fair Promises from thence, not only of Admiffien to pals through the Country, but Affillance from it. These 12000 were digested into Six Regiments. The Colorufed for nels were, the Earl of Lincoln; the Lord Donea-hm. fter, eldeft Son to the Earl of Carlifte; the Lord Cromvell; Sir Charles Rieb; Sir felm Burrons, late Governor of Frankendale, and Colonel Grey a Scotchman, that had been an old German Commander, one that affected Buff in the time of Peace, and wore it in the Face of the Court; which the King feeing him in, and a Case of Pistols at his Girdle (which he never well liked of) he told him merrily, He was now so Fortified, that if be were but well Victualled, be would be impregnable. Two Troops of Horse were also raifed for this Service; the Earl of Lincoln had the Command of the one, and one Gunter, an ordinary Horse-Rider, was thought the fittest Man to command the other; as if none could command Horse, but such as could make them curvet in a Riding-House. And the Ignorance of these Times shews, that unpractical Reason cannot put forth it self to the Height, being bound up for want of Exercise; for we set a Valuation and Effects upon German and French Horfe, when (like them) we knew not our own Strength, for there are not in the World a more gallant Cavalry, both for the Activity of the Riders and Ability of the Horfes, than may be formed in England, as Experience hath lately demonstrated.

The Defign ruin'd.

These being already in Kent for Transport about the Beginning of February, and Shipping provided, the French began to falter in their Promifes, (notwithstanding our intimate Correfpondence by the Treaty of Marriage agreed on) pleading many Inconveniencies in the paffing of an Army through the Country; and the more, because our Men were so unruly in Kent (where fome of them were tried by Marshal Law) what would they be then in a strange Country? These being but Demurs, not Denials, the whole Army is Shipp'd, and put over to Calais, to wait the French Leifure; but the Charge of Shipping (being above 100 Sail that attended that Service) required more Speed than their faint and fickly Promises did expedite; for the French dallying with them, and delaying them, happily upon Defign (the Queen of France being then more affected to the Spanish, and a less Enemy to her Blood and Kindred, than they have found her fince) after a long stay, Mansfelds was forced to leave the Hopes of his French Horse, and sail with his Army into Zealand. There the Soldiers lay at the kninkini a long (twist them, because the Marques was averse

After some stay in Zeuland, they sailed up to Guertenberg in Brahant, which Town being not well provided with Victuals, they were not fuffered to land; but continuing on Shipboard, the Ships, fluffed and peffred with Men, wanting Meat and all manner of Necessaries, such a Steneh and Pestilence grew among them, that they were thrown into the Sea by multitudes; fo that many Hundreds (if I may not fay Thousands) beaten upon Shores, had their Bowels eaten out with Dogs and Swine, to the Horror of the Beholders. Those Bodies that drove up near those Towns where the English were, had great Pits nade for them, wherein (being thrown by heaps) they were covered with Earth; but upon those Shores where they were neglected, (as they were in many parts of Holland) a great Contagion followed: And of Mansfeldt's Twelve thousand Men, scarce the Moiety landed.

one fmall Bark brought to Southampton. And now our King found, by dear Experience, that the Favours he had done the King of Spain (in Protecting his Subjects and Seas from being infested and ruined by Turkish Pirates, furnishing his Arfenals, and giving way to the Lord Faux, and Sir Edward Parham, to transport so many Englishinto Flanders) tended much to his. Prejudice. For his Subjects in a strange Country, by this Means, fought one against another. which was a kind of an uncivil War; nor was it their voluntary Intention, for the English, that were shipped for Flanders, were tempted over by Popish Allurements, not knowing but that they were to go into Holland, which made them run away as they got Opportunity. But our King did not live to fee how his Forces in the Low-Countries dwindled to nothing. And the Refult of all is, That though he were a wife Prince, yet Bleffings did neither attend his Counfels, nor Actions: So that it is not Humane Wifdom, but Divine Directions, that orders and disposes all Things to a good End.

The Marquess Hamilton died before our King, The fuspected to be poysoned; the Symptoms being Death of very presumptuous, his Head and Body swel- quest of very great or an excessive Greatness, the Body being quest of Hamilton. all over full of great Blifters, with variety of Colours; the Hair of his Head, Eye-brows, and Beard, came off being touch'd, and brought the Skin with them; and there was a great Cla-mour of it about the Court, fo that Doctors were fent to view the Body; but the Matter was huddled up, and little spoken of it, only Doctor Egliphan, a Scotchman, was fomething bitter against the Duke, as if he had been the Author of it. The Marques's Son had a little Author of it. The Marquess's Son had a little before married the Earl of Denbigh's Daughter, who was the Duke of Buckingham's Niece, and yet this Tie could not oblige a Friendship be-

A little before his Death he called for the Prince his Son, who riling out of his Bed iomething before Day, and prefenting himfelf before him, the King roused up his Spirits, and raised himself up as if he meant to speak to him; but Nature being Exhausted, he had no Strength ro express his Intentions, but soon expired, being upon Sunday Morning, the 27th of March, 162y, at Theobalds, in the Nine and fiftieth Year of his Age, and Two and twentieth Year compleat of his Reign. Not long after our King's Death, (as if the The Death of Time and Season, as well as the Disease, were Maurice Epidemical to Princes) old Maurice the Prince of Orange died; and his Brother Prince Henry (being made General of the States Army) put his Fortune into an unhappy Ballance, which loft much of the Weight. For either valuing his Soldiers Lives less than his Brother, or the Loss of fo brave a Town as Breda more, or thinking to fpring up with more Glory (Phanix-like) from the Ashes of his Brothers Funerals (being recruited with the Relicks of Mansfeldt's Army) he fet upon one of Spinola's ftrong Works at Terheiden, either to relieve the Town, or beat the Enemy out of his Trenches; but he failed in both, and loft many gallant Men (elpecially English) in the Enterprise. The Earl of Oxford having the Death of Leading of the Van, (being a Man corpulent the Farl and heavy) got fuch a fwelrring Heat in the of Oxford. Service, that though he came off without Hurt from the Enemy, yet he brought Death along with him; for he fell Sick prefently after, went to the Hague, and there died. The other two Gallant Colonels, Effer and Willoughby, furvived to Command two English Armies in a Civil-War; Essex being General for the Parliament, and Willoughby for the King , in Kinton-field in Warwicksbire, where Essex remained Victor, the King being there in Person, and leaving him the Ho-nour of the Field, his General Willoughby, then

Earl of Lindscy, being Slain in the Battel. But A. Reg. 23. there will be a long Tract of Time and Discourse before these Armies encounter, being the first Cloud of that fiery Exhalation, which broke out in the next King's Reign, and could not be quenched without the Blood of many thousands of the Nation.

But the different Carriage of these two Sons The diffeof Mars, the two Brothers, Maurice and Henry, rent Car-is very observable: Which shall be left to the riage of Judgment of the Great Masters in the Art of Princes War, whether Error were the greater (fo apt is of Orange

Maurice that had a powerful Army of the States, and was reinforced with Six thousand English, gallant and refolute Men, that would have hugg'd a daring Enterprize, yet durft not encounter Spinola, when he lay open to his Affault, but let him work himfelf into his Fastness, and rather bear the Burthen in his own Breaft, than disturb him. Or Henry, when Spinola's Works were in full Strength, confirmed by Time and fettled Order, the appoints to the confused End he aimed ar, to throw to brave a part of his Army upon eminent Destruction? Or is there not a Time and Period prefixt to earthly Things, and the All-Disposing Power to that end, dorh either infatuate or establish Counsels? Town and old Prince Murice, as may be faid, were loft together.

But our King, that was very much Impatient The King in his Health, was Patient in his Sickness and patient in Death. Whether he had received any thing that Sickness. extorted his Aguish Fits into a Fever, which might the fooner flupify the Spirits, and haften his End, cannot be afferted; but the Counters of Buckingham (who traffick'd much with Mountebanks, and whose Fame had no great Savour) had been tampering with him, in the Abience of the Doctors, and had given him a Medicine to drink, and laid a Plaister to his Side, which the King much complained of, and they did rather exasperate his Distemper than allay it: And these Things were admitted by the infinuating Perfuasions of the Duke her Son, who told the King, They were approved Medicines, and would do him much good. And though the Duke after strove to purge himself for this Application, as having received both Medicine and Plaister from Dr. Remington at Dunmow in Effex, who had often cured Agues and fuch Diftempers with the fame; yet they were Arguments of a complicated kind, not eafy to unfold; confidering that whatfoever he received from the Doctor in the Country, he might apply to the king what he pleased in the Court; besides the Act it felf (though it had been the beft Medicine in the World) was a Daring not juftifiable: * and some of the King's Phylitians mutter'd against it, others made a great Noise, and were forced to fly for it; and though the still Voice was quickly silenced by the Duke's Power, yet

* Dr Fglifbam, one of the King's Phyfirians, was oblig'd to flee beyond Seas for some Expressions he had mutter'd about the manner of his Majelky a Death, and liv'd at Bruffl's many Years after. It was there he published a Book, to prove King James was poylou'd; giving a particular Account of all the Gircumstances of his Sicknets, and laying his Death up on the Duke of Bustingham and his Mother. I have read the Book some Fifteen Years ago in the Hands of Dur Point Rehill, the Spanish Ambaslador, who told me it had been translated into High-Dutch, about the time Gustann Adaptive was custing into Germany for recovering of the Pulatizate; and that by a Secret Order of the Court of Smalls, to throw Durt upon the Royal Family of England. Among other Remarkable Pullings I remember in the Book, there is one about the Pullifer that was apply'd to the King's Stomach. He Gay, It was given out to have been Miridate, and that one Dr. Remington had fent it to the Duke, as a Medicine with which he had cur'd a great many of Agues in Essex. Now Eglisham denies it was Mishadiate, and fays, Neither he nor any other Phystitians could rell what twas. It is add, 'That Sir Mutt's we Life and he being the Week after the King's Death at the Earl of Warmick's House in Essex, they ten for Dr. Remington, who liv'd hard by, and asking him, What kind of Plaister it was he had learn to Buchgham for the Curre of an Ague, and whether he knew it was set King the Duke digin'd it for? And this Medicine was one of those Thirteen Articles that after were laid to his Charge in Parliament, who may be mifinformed, but feldom accuse any upon falle Rumour, or bare Suggestion; and therefore it will be a hard Task for any Man to excuse the King his Successor for diffolving that Parliament, to preferve one that was accused by them for poisoning his Father.

For Dr. Limb, a Man of an Infamous Conversation, (having been arraigned for a Witch, and found guilty of it at Worcester; and arraigned for a Rape, and found guilty of it at the King s. Bench Ear at Westminster; yet escaped the Stroke of Justice for both, by his Favour in Court) was much employ'd by the Mother and the Son, which generally the People took notice of, and were so incens'd against Lamb, that finding him in the Streets in London in the Year 1628, they rose against him, and with Stones and Staves knock I out his Brains, as may be

And besides Lamb, there was one Butler, an Irislman, (which younted himself to be of the House of Ormend) who was a kind of Mountebank, which the Duke and his Mother much confided in. This Butler was first an Apprentice to a Cutler in London, and before his Time expired quitted his Mafter, having a running Head, and went to the Bermudies, where he lived fome time as a Servant in the Island; and walking by the Sca-fide with another of his Companions, they found a great Mass of Ambergreece that the Seas Bounty had cast up to them, which they willingly conceal'd, meaning to make their best Markets of it. Butler being a fubtle Snap, wrought fo with his Companion, with Promifes of a Share, that he got the Pof-· fession of it; and in the next Dutch Ship that arrived at the Bermudaes, he shipp'd himself and his Commodities for Amsterdam, where having fold his Bargain at a good Rate, and made his Credit with his Fellow-Venturer cheap enough, engroffing all to himfelf, he came into England, lived in a gallant and noble Equipage, kept a great and free Table at his Lodgings in the Strand, which were furnished suitable to his Mind, and had his Coach with Six Horses, and many Footmen attending on him, with as much State and Grandure as if his Greatness had been real. But tho' his Means lasted not to support this long, yet it brought him into great Acquaintance; and being pragmatical in Tongue, and having an active Pate, he fell to some Di-stillations, and other odd extracting Practices, which kept him affoat; and fome Men thought he had gotten the (long dream'd-after) Philo-fopher's Stone; but the best Recipe which he had to maintain his Greatness, after his Ambermoney fum'd and vapour'd away, was suspected to come from his Friends at Whitehall: And the Story of his Death (if it be true) is one great Evidence of some secret Machination betwirt the Duke and him, that the Duke was willing they tended to his own Preservation: For this

A.Reg. 23. the Clamorous made so deep Impressions, that to be rid of him: For Mischief being an In- A.Reg. 23. groffer, is unsecure and unsatisfy d, when their Wares are to be vented in many shops. Therefore he was recommended upon fome plaufible Occasion by the Duke's Means (as Fame delivered it) to fome Jesuites beyond the Seas; where he was entertained with a great deal of specious Ceremony and Respect in one of their Colleges or Cloysters; and at Night they at tending him to his Chamber with much Civili ty, the Chamber being hanged with Tapifry, and Tapers burning in thretch'd-out Arms upon the Walls; and when they gave him the Good-night, they told him they would fend one who should direct him to his Lodging; and they were no sooner out of this Room of Death, but the Floor, that hung upon great Hinges on one fide, was let fall by Artificial Engines, and the poor Vermin Butler dropp'd into a Precipice, where he was never more heard of. That there are fuch fecret Inquisition-Conveyances, of a horrid Nature, is obvious: and fuch close Contrivances may fly up and down upon the Wings of Rumour; but it is impossible to find out the Bottom of fuch black Pitfals, but with as much Danger as those that find the bitter Effects of them. And this was reported to be the end of Butler.

But to conclude with our King, whom this do concern. He was born a King, and from The Dethat Heighth the less fitted to look into inferior feription Things; yet few escaped his Knowledge, be-of king ing, as it were, a Magazine to retain them. James. His Stature was of the middle Size, rather tall than low, well fet, and fomewhat plump, of a ruddy Complection, his Hair of a light brown, in his full Perfection, had at last a Tincture of white. If he had any predominant Humour to ballance his Choler, it was fanguine, which made his Mirth witty. His Beard was featter-ing on his Chin, and very thin: And tho his Clothes were feldom fashion'd to the Vulgar Garb, yet in the whole Man he was not un-comely. He was a King in Understanding, and was content to have his Subjects ignorant in many things: As in curing the King's-Evil, which he knew a Device, to aggrandize the Virtue of Kings, when Miracles were in fa-fhion; but he let the World believe ir, tho' he fmil'd at it in his own Reason, finding the Strength of the Imagination a more powerful Strength of the imagnation a more powerful Agent in the Cure, than the Plaifiers his Chirurgions preferred for the Sore. It was a hard Queftion, Whether his Widdom and Knowledge exceeded his Choler and Fear? Certainly the laft Couple drew him with most Violence, believed the Managnation of the Man cause they were not Acquisitions, but Natural. If he had not had that Allay, his high touring and maftering Reason had been of a rare and sublim'd Excellency; but these Earthy Dregs kept it down, making his Passions extend him as far as Prophaneness, that I may not say Blasphemy, and Policy superintendent of all his Actions; which will not last long, (like the Violence of that Humour) for it often makes those that know well, to do ill, and not be able upon Leather, but knew not till then that it was defign'd for the King. But, continues Egliphom, Sir Matthew Lifter and I fliewing him a Prece of the Plaiflet we had kept after it was taken off, he feem'd greatly forpris'd, and offer'd to take his Corporal Orth, That it was none of what he had given Baker; not did he know what kind of Mix-

A. Reg. 23. was one of his Apothegms, which he made no on Christ of Conspiracies, be rather jealous of such, whom his extraordinary Favours have advanced, than of those whom his Displeasure hath discontented. These want Means to execute their Pleasures, but they have Means at pleasure to execute their Desires. Ambition to Rule, is more vehement than Malice to Revenge. Though the last part of this Aphorism he was thought to Practice too foon, where there was no cause for Prevention; and neglect too late, when

Some Parallel'd him to Tiberius for Diffimula-Some Parallel d him to Tworths for Diminuation, yet Peace was maintained by him as in the Time of Angulfus: And Peace begot Plenty, and Plenty begot Ease and Wantonness, and Ease and Wantonness begot Poetry, and Poetro-Guilden or bear Bulk in his ring, that it has try fwelled to that Bulk in his time, that it begot strange Monstrous Satyrs against the King's own Person, that haunted both Court and Country, which express'd, would be too birter to leave a sweet Perfume behind him. And though bitter Ingredients are good to Embalm 4.865.23 and Preferve dead Bodies, yet these were such as might endanger to kill a living Name, if 405.61615. Malice be not brought in with an Antidote.

And the Tongues of those Times more fluent than my Pen,made every little Miscarriage (bethan my Pen,made every little Militarriage (ob-ing not able to difcover their true Operations, like finall Seeds hid in earthy Darkness) grow up, and spread into such exuberant Branches, that evil Report did often pearch upon them. So dangerous it is for Princes, by a remis Comportment, to give Growth to the least Error; for it often proves as fruitful, as Malice can make it.

But, alas good King! here was an end of his Earthly Empire; and little did he imagine, that the last Period to Great Britain's Monarchy should not much exceed the Time of his own Reign, and in the true Extent come short of it.

Soli Deo Gloria.

CONCLUSION Discreet Reader.

Aring now finished (I will not say perfected)

My little Work of this Great King, without the prejudice to his Person, or Enry to his Dignity, not having (for filth) Lucre Sake) any Man in Adminion to be concealed; for it derogates from the Glory of traiting, and willing to be left than the least in the God to have his fusice obscured, his remarkable District of accounting the properties of sections. Humour, that foams in the to be whom the Venom of Passion hat converted that I may clear the Way the better over the Precipices and producing Pessenger, which, to attempt, is a Daving unexpressible. For History seldence, and the proposed and replied that I may clear the Way the better over the Precipices and producing Pessenger, and producing the proposed that I may clear the Way the better over the Precipic and producing Pessenger, and producing the proposed that I may clear the Way the better over the Land. The proposed the Princip Lips should keep Precipices and producing the proposed to be foot and base before all the Person. And the proposed and repline at God's the proposed at the pr Precipies and proatgions reasons was used unto we some in the next King's Reign, which, to attempt, is a Daring unexpressible. For History seldom fellows Truth so near the Hech, where a warious and mixed Multitude may either pretend to, or really know more than one Man can well relate; and where Affection or Dislike to particular Men would willingly cover or fordidly lay open those Blemishes, which may besmear, if not quite deface, the living Character yet imprinted in their Memories. For though they that write near the Times are said to write partially, either for Fear or Times are just to write partally, ettory for Pear or Friendflip, jet they that write Truth must either do it from private Knowledge, or publick Report; and who can know better than they that live near the Times? according to the French Proverb, Ce qu'on voit, eft plus certain, que ce qu'on oit; and, as Horat. faith, Oculis potius credendum qu'am Auribus. The Waters are the pureft at the Fountain; they mingle and gather Drofs by running through diver; trou-bled Chanels. And as every thing in a clear Spring will be perfoicuous, so the Soil of Fallwood or Missake (if any be cast into it) will be the more wishble. But forme may retort the Argument, and fay, In troubled Fountains the Waters are not so pure as they will be when they are further from the Spring; that Time may settle them, and then Men will take up that them continuition and only object and the telest. Actions? for his Thoughts are not as our Thoughts, nor his Ways as our Ways. His Judgments should nor bis Wiys as our Ways. His Judgments [fiold learn in Righteoffnet], that his Anger may be turned away from no. And let them that frand, take heed left they fall. For though God rewarded Jehu with the Kingdom, for the good Service he did him; yet becauge he wralked not with him, God vifited the House of Jehu, and laid the Blood of Jezveel, which he was commanded to fleed, upon the Head of his Poferity. But all the Arguments of Men and Angels will neither venetrate nor make Imercifican in foom the Posterity. But all the Arguments of Men and Angels will neither penetrate nor make Impression in some ill-compoled Tempers, till they are softened with the Fire of Love; and that holy Flame is hest kindled with Patience, by willingly submitting to the all-disposing Providence that orders every thing: Before whose Altan (waiting for the Season of Grace) I will ever bring the helf Fruits of my Labours. But if that which I intend should not come to Persection, (the Day of Man's Life being but as a Dawning, and his Time as a Span) I will never be displaced with Master (in long and dangerous Labours) for calling me away to Rest before my Work is dome.
